ACTS OF TERRORISM

2156. At Calaba Town, the team killed civilians and burned down houses.<sup>4789</sup> Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that if people inside the houses attempted to run out they were shot, so the civilians stayed inside and burned with the houses. After this operation in Calaba Town, the team returned to Allen Town and found out that the jungle team had already advanced. Hassan Papa Bangura decided that the team should stay in Allen Town until further instruction from Gullit, so they stayed in Allen Town for two days.<sup>4790</sup>

2157. Confidential Exhibit P-285 (TF1-169's interview notes) asserts that mostly private homes, vehicles and stores were burned down in Calaba Town. Approximately 30-40 percent of the homes and 15-20 percent of the businesses in Calaba Town were destroyed.<sup>4791</sup>

ACTS OF TERRORISM

2159. Osman Jalloh testified that in late January 1999, a rebel<sup>4793</sup> wearing civilian clothing<sup>4794</sup> threatened the witness and other civilians hiding in a tin shack that if they continued to say they had no money, he would burn them all.<sup>4795</sup> Because the civilians told him that they had no money, the man took straw out of a mattress, set it on fire and locked the witness and others inside the tin shack.<sup>4796</sup> The room began to fill with smoke, and the civilians started to sneeze and shout for help since they believed they would die. After five minutes, the man let the civilians out. Since they did not have any money, the man asked them what else they could give him to prevent them “from being burnt”.<sup>4797</sup> One of the civilians in the house with the witness gave the man 86 bags of rice.<sup>4798</sup> The man then gave a signal and was immediately joined by over 100 rebels wearing civilian clothes and carrying guns.<sup>4799</sup> These rebels carried the bags of rice away.<sup>4800</sup>

2161. In Exhibit P-328, Human Rights Watch reported that housing authorities calculated that some 80 percent of the residential buildings in Calaba Town had been burned down.<sup>4803</sup>

ACTS OF TERRORISM

Findings

2162. The Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt on the evidence that in January 1999 members of the AFRC/RUF forces burned down civilian houses in Calaba Town, that the perpetrators wilfully made persons or their property the object of the burnings and that the burnings were committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror amongst the civilian population.

(ix) Hastings, Grafton and Benguema

2163. The Prosecution, citing Confidential Exhibit P-284 (Witness Statement of TF1-169), points out that it was observed that civilian houses and vehicles were burned in Hastings, Grafton and Benguema following the Freetown invasion. The Prosecution submits that an inference can be drawn that AFRC/RUF forces burned the civilian property at these locations as burning was widespread during the invasion; these forces advanced and retreated through Hastings and Benguema, while Grafton was part of the route taken on the retreat; and it was part of the force's modus operandi to burn towns and villages it passed through.<sup>4804</sup>

Findings

2164. Confidential Exhibit P-284 records that during TF1-169's inspection he saw that a few civilian houses and vehicles were burned and damaged in Grafton, Hastings, Waterloo, Goderich, Kent, Tombo and Benguema. However, TF1-169 was concerned with government property and so could not say the amount of the damage as he did not pay attention to privately owned property.<sup>4805</sup>

2165. There is no other evidence of civilian property being burned in Hastings, Grafton and Benguema.

2166. The paucity of the available evidence does not permit the Trial Chamber to draw the inference submitted by the Prosecution. Such evidence is not capable of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the burning of civilian property in Grafton, Hastings and Benguema was perpetrated by AFRC/RUF forces, nor that the burning was committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

2167. Therefore, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism in relation to burning in Hastings, Grafton and Benguema have been established.

(x) Goderich and Kent

2168. The Prosecution has made no specific submissions regarding Goderich and Kent, although these locations were pleaded in the Indictment.

Findings

2169. The only evidence of burning in these areas is in Confidential Exhibit P-284, in which TF1-169 records that during his inspection he saw that a few houses and vehicles were burned and damaged in Grafton, Hastings, Waterloo, Goderich, Kent, Tombo, and Benguema. However, TF1-169 was concerned with government property and so could not say the amount of the damage as he did not pay attention to privately owned property.<sup>4806</sup>

2170. The paucity of the available evidence is not capable of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the burning of civilian property in Goderich and Kent was perpetrated by AFRC/RUF forces, nor that the burning was committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

(b) Unlawful Killings

2172. The Trial Chamber has found in relation to the unlawful killings perpetrated in Freetown and the Western Area that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism have been established beyond reasonable doubt.<sup>4807</sup>

ACTS OF TERRORISM

(c) Sexual Violence

2174. The Trial Chamber has also found proved beyond reasonable doubt that: an unknown number of women and girls were used as sexual slaves by AFRC fighters in Benguema until approximately March 1999; TF1-029 was used as a sex slave by Major Arif, an ex-SLA/AFRC soldier, in Wellington, Calaba Town and Benguema from late January to March 1999; Akiatu Tholley was used as a sex slave by an STF fighter named James from approximately late January through early April 1999; TF1-023 was used as a sex slave by a member of the AFRC in Calaba Town, Benguema and Four Mile from late January through March 1999.<sup>4810</sup> The Trial Chamber has also found that all of these instances constitute outrages upon personal dignity.<sup>4811</sup>

2175. The evidence establishes that the commission of acts of rape and sexual slavery in Freetown and the Western Area by the rebel forces were widespread and systematic, both during the attack on Freetown and during the retreat. In particular, the Trial Chamber has found that there was a recognized system of ownership and hierarchy among captured women in the rebel forces in Freetown and the Western Area, as illustrated by TF1-023 being accorded special treatment as a commander's wife.<sup>4812</sup>

2176. There was evidence to prove beyond reasonable doubt that girls were raped publicly outside State House, that they were raped publicly on Blackhall Road in the presence of other civilians, including TF1-028 who tried to stop them, and that girls were raped publicly in Kissy.<sup>4813</sup> Many of the victims of these rapes were girls as young as 13.<sup>4814</sup> Victims were also humiliated and degraded, as they were often undressed prior to having intercourse, and in some cases, were subjected to perverse methods of sexual violence. For example, Tholley, who at that time had not yet had her menses, testified that a commander called James “damaged her in the vagina” when she refused to have sex with him.<sup>4815</sup> The Trial Chamber is satisfied from this evidence that the public nature of these crimes of sexual violence was a deliberate tactic on the part of the perpetrators to instil fear among civilians.

2177. Given the geographical and temporal proximity of these crimes to each other, and to the burnings, killings and amputations that occurred in Freetown and the Western Area during the advance towards Freetown, the attack and the retreat, the Trial Chamber finds that the rebels regularly used rape and sexual slavery to spread terror among the civilian population of Freetown and the Western Area.

2178. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that it has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces wilfully made the girls and women of Freetown and the Western Area the object of acts of sexual violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

(d) Physical Violence

(i) Freetown

2179. The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that two civilians had their hands amputated, one civilian had his hands and tongue amputated, and one civilian had both her eyes mutilated by rebels in Freetown in January 1999.<sup>4816</sup>

ACTS OF TERRORISM

2180. The amputations and carvings practiced by the AFRC and RUF were notorious, and served as a permanent, visible and grotesque reminder to all civilians of the consequences of resisting the AFRC or RUF or of supporting Kabbah or ECOMOG. The gruesome nature of these particular amputations and mutilations included the amputation of tongues, and a woman whose eyes were pulled out so that they protruded from their sockets.<sup>4817</sup> TF1-158 testified that he had treated patients who had been attacked and amputated or mutilated by the rebels, and that when they were being attacked, “their immediate families were positioned such that ... they will be in full view of what they were doing, especially for those who suffered amputations and rape”.<sup>4818</sup> The Trial Chamber is satisfied on this evidence that these amputations and mutilations were perpetrated with the primary intention of spreading terror.

2181. The Trial Chamber has also found that Abu Bakarr Mansaray was beaten and physically harmed in a permanent manner by rebels outside State House on 8 January 1999.<sup>4819</sup> However, the evidence is not sufficient to establish the intent of the perpetrators, and the Trial Chamber is thus not able to conclude that they acted with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

(ii) Kissy, including Kissy Mental Hospital

2183. In several of these cases, the rebels told their victims that they should show these amputations to Kabbah, or ask him for new hands. Kpumgbu, for example, testified that the rebel who amputated his hands then said that Kpumgbu "should go and tell Tejan Kabbah that they were fighting for power".<sup>4831</sup> Wai also testified that Captain Blood told him that he should go to Pa Kabbah,<sup>4832</sup> because "Pa Kabbah had brought so many hands for us, for those whose hands are...off, they should go to him".<sup>4833</sup> The rebel who amputated Boi Barrie's arms told him "go and tell Tejan Kabbah, no more politics no more votes", and that rebels told Alusine Conteh, who had both hands amputated, that he should tell Kabbah that he was a messenger.<sup>4834</sup> Similar statements were made in relation to the amputations of TF1-083, Pa Sorie, and Musa, where the rebels told them they should go to Kabbah to get new hands. Several of these amputations were performed by child soldiers, who were often incapable of performing the amputations successfully, leaving victims with mangled hands, or needing older rebels to finish the amputations, such as in the case of the Mohamed Sesay.<sup>4835</sup>

2184. These amputations occurred in the context of widespread burning, rape and killing, and in situations where rebels had been ordered to target civilians who they believed were Kamajors or supporters of ECOMOG. In the case of the amputations performed by Changa Bulanga at Old Shell Road, this operation was ordered by Gullit in order to punish civilians who he believed had welcomed ECOMOG to Freetown. These incidents also occurred in a context where witnesses observed bunches of human hands that had been tied together and buried in the dirt at Kissy Road.

2185. The Trial Chamber is accordingly satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the amputations that occurred in Kissy from 6 January to 22 January 1999 were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces, who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

(iii) Fourah Bay

2186. The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that seven civilians, including witness Alpha Jalloh, had their hands amputated at Fourah Bay by members of the SLA around 18 January 1999, and that an unknown number of civilians had their hands amputated by Major Mines and Kabila at Fourah Bay.<sup>4836</sup>

2187. After the civilians had been amputated, the rebels told the amputees that they could go to Pah Kabbah to get more hands.<sup>4837</sup> The amputations also served as a message to Kabbah and ECOMOG of the atrocities of which the rebels were capable. These amputations also took place in the context of widespread burning, rape and killing in Freetown.

members of the AFRC/RUF forces who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

(iv) Upgun

2189. The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that three captured civilians had their hands amputated by Five-Five in Upgun in January 1999. One civilian was given a “short-sleeve” amputation and the others “long-sleeve” amputations.<sup>4838</sup> For the reasons articulated above in relation to the other areas, and given that this amputation was performed by Five-Five as a “demonstration”, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these amputations were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces, who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

(v) Wellington

2190. The Trial Chamber has found proved beyond reasonable doubt that Sarah Koroma’s left hand was amputated and her right hand mutilated in Wellington on 6 January 1999; that seven civilians had their hands amputated in Wellington on 6 January 1999; that the hand of a child between 3 to 4 years old was amputated in Wellington in January 1999 and that Akiatu Tholley was beaten and physically harmed in a serious manner in Wellington in late January 1999.<sup>4839</sup>

2191. The rebels who amputated Koroma’s arm told her to go tell Kabbah that the rebels wanted peace.<sup>4840</sup> The rebels also amputated the arm of a 3 to 4 year old child. Based on this evidence, given the widespread burning, rape and killing that occurred during both the rebels’ advance into Freetown in early January and their retreat in late January, and for the reasons articulated above in relation to the other areas, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that these amputations were perpetrated by members of the AFRC/RUF forces who wilfully made civilians the object of the physical violence with the primary purpose of spreading terror.

ACTS OF TERRORISM

2192. The foregoing findings by the Trial Chamber establish that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that members of the AFRC/RUF forces in Freetown and the Western Area wilfully made civilian persons or their property the object of acts of violence in the forms of burning of civilian property (in Freetown and the Western Area, Waterloo, Tumbo, Kissy, Fourah Bay, State House, Pademba Road, Kingtom, Wellington and Calaba Town), unlawful killings, sexual violence and physical violence (in Freetown, Kissy, Fourah Bay, Upgun and Wellington), committed with the primary purpose of spreading terror among the civilian population.

The Trial Chamber has already found that there was an armed conflict in Sierra Leone at all times relevant to the Indictment, involving, among others, members of the RUF and AFRC.<sup>4841</sup> Further, the Trial Chamber is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that crimes discussed in the above findings were directly linked to that armed conflict and that the victims were civilians not directly taking part in hostilities. The Trial Chamber therefore finds that the elements of the crime of acts of terrorism (Count 1) as a serious violation of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 1) have been proved reasonable doubt.

FACTUAL FINDINGS ON THE ROLE OF THE ACCUSED

VIII. FACTUAL FINDINGS ON THE ROLE OF THE ACCUSED

A. Pre-Indictment Period (1988 to 1996)

2193. The Trial Chamber has considered evidence prior to the Indictment period only for the purposes of clarifying the context, or establishing by inference the elements of criminal conduct.

2195. The Defence denies the allegation that the Accused's plan was to target the civilian population and submits that this would be illogical and counter-productive since it would cause the civilian population to become alienated from the cause. The Defence concedes that military alliances were made but maintains that these alliances were purely political or military and were not underlined by any criminal intent. The Defence submits that the Prosecution evidence is imprecise and insufficient to support a conviction.<sup>4843</sup>

2197. The Defence contends that the Prosecution failed to lead any direct evidence regarding the meeting in Libya where the Accused and Foday Sankoh planned to terrorize the Sierra Leonean civilian population. The Defence further submits that the Accused never had contact with Sankoh in Libya since the latter was not a leader of the Sierra Leonean group and the Accused only had contact with their leader, Ali Kabbah, during training at the Mathaba, where the leaders of revolutionary groups received political and military training. The Defence relies on the testimonies of the Accused, Witness DCT-125, Yanks Smythe and Issa Sesay.<sup>4845</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Suwandi Camara

Libya in order to receive training and weapons from Libyan authorities. Suwandi Camara saw Taylor again a few weeks later.<sup>4848</sup>

2199. During his visits to Dr Manneh at the Mathaba, Suwandi Camara also met Foday Sankoh. Dr Manneh told the witness that Sankoh, the coordinator of the Sierra-Leoneans in Libya, was acting as the leader of the Sierra Leonean group in Libya, since its leader Ali Kabbah had left Libya with the money given by the Libyan authorities to his group to support their fight. Camara stated that he did not see Taylor and Sankoh together.<sup>4849</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

2200. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>4850</sup> learned from Foday Sankoh that Sankoh, along with the second commander of the RUF, Rashid Mansaray, and third commander Mohamed Tarawalli, was trained as a 'Special Force Commando' in Benghazi, Libya. Sankoh further told him that, during this training in Benghazi, he met Charles Taylor, although Taylor was not there for most of the training.<sup>4851</sup>

Prosecution Witness Moses Blah

2201. Witness Moses Blah, an adjutant general within Taylor's group at the time,<sup>4852</sup> attended training in the Tajura camp in Tripoli, Libya. According to Blah, Foday Sankoh, the head of the Sierra Leonean group, used to pay courtesy calls to Taylor in the camp and called him "Chief". During his stay in Libya, Taylor regularly visited the Tajura camp.<sup>4853</sup>

2202. Moses Blah testified that Ali Kabbah, as a leader, did not stay with the Sierra Leonean group but rather stayed at the Mathaba. Blah testified that Sankoh was considered to be the leader of the Sierra Leonean group only later, after he represented it during peace talks in Togo.<sup>4854</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2203. Witness Isaac Mongor, a Liberian training instructor at Camp Naama who later became a senior official within the RUF,<sup>4855</sup> testified that while at Camp Naama, Foday Sankoh told him that his brother Charles Taylor was training Sankoh's men for him, and that Sankoh had known the Accused for a long time. Foday Sankoh also told him that they had all gone to Libya for training.<sup>4856</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

2204. Witness TF1-168, an RUF member,<sup>4857</sup> testified that he learned about military training of Sierra Leoneans in Libya while he was at Camp Naama. He said that Foday Sankoh said that he had trained there with Rashid Mansaray, Mohamed Tarawalli and Abu Kanu.<sup>4858</sup>

Expert Witness Stephen Ellis/Prosecution Exhibit P-031

2205. Exhibit P-031 is a report written by Prosecution expert witness Stephen Ellis, senior researcher at the African Studies Centre in the University of Leiden.<sup>4859</sup> In his report, which is based on interviews, UN reports, and documents in the Liberian archives, Ellis states that the relationship between the Accused and the RUF can be traced back to 1988 at the military training camps in Libya where the Accused met future Sierra Leonean revolutionary leader Foday Sankoh and they became acquainted with each other.<sup>4860</sup>

2206. Stephen Ellis's court testimony was a reiteration of the statements contained in his report regarding Taylor's meetings in Libyan training camps with future leaders of the conflict in Sierra Leone, including Foday Sankoh, at the end of the 1980s.<sup>4861</sup>

2207. In Confidential Exhibit P-277<sup>4862</sup> it is reported that Foday Sankoh conceived of the idea of an armed struggle against the APC Government in Sierra Leone while in prison in 1978. Between 1986-1988, some Sierra Leonean students such as Ali Kabbah, Abu Kanu, Rashid Mansaray and Cleo Hanciles went to Libya in order to study Colonel Ghadaffi's theories and to receive military training.

2208. When Foday Sankoh arrived in Libya in the middle of the 1980s, he found the group of Sierra Leoneans there led by Ali Kabbah.<sup>4863</sup> According to the report, despite the fact that Foday Sankoh had no group, he was recognised by Libyans as the rebel leader. However, he was isolated by most of his fellow compatriots in the training camp and turned to Charles Taylor and his group, who were training to launch a guerrilla war in Liberia. When Taylor and his men departed from Libya, Foday Sankoh followed them with the assurance that Libya would help him later for his own revolutionary campaign in Sierra Leone.<sup>4864</sup>

Prosecution Exhibits P-416A and P-416B

2209. Exhibit P-416A is an undated BBC clip of Mary Harper's interview of Charles Taylor. Exhibit P-416B is an OTP unofficial transcript of this interview. In this interview Taylor says that he has been friends with Sankoh for many years, before the revolution.<sup>4865</sup>

The Accused

2210. The Accused strongly denied having met Foday Sankoh in Libya and stated that he had no contact with him before August 1991. He denied also having ever met Suwandi Camara and explained that the alleged meeting, as described by Camara, could not have taken place since only leaders of the revolutionary groups were allowed to go to the Mathaba.<sup>4866</sup>

2211. At the Mathaba in Tripoli, the Accused said he only had contact with group leaders such as Kukoi Samba Sanyang a.k.a. Dr Manneh, the leader of the Gambian group, or Ali

Kabbah, the leader of the Sierra Leonean group. The other members of revolutionary groups, such as Camara or Foday Sankoh, were based in Tajura training camps, approximately 30 miles from Tripoli. Taylor said he had absolutely no contact with them.<sup>4867</sup>

2212. With regard to his interview with Mary Harper, the Accused gave a confused explanation of his statement that he had been friends with Foday Sankoh for many years before the Revolution, saying:

I had never known Foday Sankoh. I said to her, it is known by everyone, that I had known Foday Sankoh before the revolution, which was totally incorrect because I had not known him. And I'm saying to her that everyone knows, and this is what is out there because this is 1998, I'm already President, I said it is known by everyone that I knew Foday Sankoh, when in fact I did not.<sup>4868</sup>

Defence Witness DCT-125

2213. Witness DCT-125 was at the Mathaba in Libya in the late 1980s.<sup>4869</sup> DCT-125 was aware of the presence of Sierra Leoneans in Libya's training camps but only knew their leader, Ali Kabbah, and his assistant, Cleo Hanciles. DCT-125 testified that he met Foday Sankoh for the first time in Gbarnga, Liberia when he went to visit Charles Taylor at the Executive Mansion.<sup>4870</sup>

2214. DCT-125 asserted that Taylor did not meet Foday Sankoh at the Mathaba as Sankoh did not participate in events there. He also denied that meetings between Dr Manneh, Sankoh and Taylor took place in Libya in December 1989, and denied that Dr Manneh ever met Foday Sankoh in Camp Tajura, saying that before 1990 Dr Manneh did not know who Sankoh was.<sup>4871</sup>

2215. DCT-125 denied that Camara was introduced to Taylor in the Mathaba in Libya or to Foday Sankoh. The witness believed that at the beginning of 1990 Taylor was not in Libya and said that during that time period, no-one knew the name RUF. He stated further that

Foday Sankoh never was the interim leader of the Sierra Leonean Pan-African Revolutionary Movement.<sup>4872</sup>

Defence Witness Yanks Smythe

2216. Witness Yanks Smythe (a.k.a. Butterfly), a Gambian and Assistant Director of Operations for the SSS,<sup>4873</sup> was trained in military intelligence and communication at Camp Tajura, in Libya in 1987, and he became Charles Taylor's radio operator in 1990. Smythe stated that the Libyan authorities provided training to several revolutionary groups such as Gambians led by Dr Manneh, Liberians led by Charles Taylor, Sierra Leoneans led by Ali Kabbah, and Sumatrans.<sup>4874</sup>

2217. Smythe testified that Libyan authorities also supported revolutionary movements by hosting their leaders in a place called the Mathaba. Smythe, who was not the leader, trained with the other men at the Tajura Camp. However, between 1986 and 1988, he attended the annual meetings at the Mathaba which were attended by around 500 people from all over the world. Smythe testified that Dr Manneh, Charles Taylor and Ali Kabbah attended the 1987 annual meeting. However the witness did not see Taylor during the annual meetings in 1986 and 1988. He said Foday Sankoh, who was an ordinary member of the Sierra Leonean group, was not at the Mathaba and did not attend any of these annual meetings and that Taylor never visited Camp Tajura.<sup>4875</sup> This testimony contradicted his pre-trial statement in which he stated that Taylor was in and out of Tajura as early as 1987.<sup>4876</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

2218. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>4877</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>4878</sup> testified that Ali Kabbah was the leader of the Sierra Leoneans in Libya until he was caught embezzling money Gaddafi had given him for the welfare of RUF recruits. Kabbah went to America when the Sierra Leonean troops returned to Liberia. Sankoh then called himself “the organiser” of the revolution until the 90-day ultimatum when he became the “leader” of the RUF.<sup>4879</sup> While at Naama, Sankoh told Sesay that Taylor was his friend and that he had met him for the first time in Libya but Sesay did not hear anything else regarding their alleged relationship.<sup>4880</sup>

Deliberations

2219. The evidence unequivocally establishes that between 1986 and 1989, revolutionary movements including the Gambian group SOFA led by Dr Manneh, the Liberian NPFL group led by the Accused and the Sierra Leonean Pan-African Revolutionary Movement who later became the RUF led by Ali Kabbah, received training in Libya in a military camp named Tajura.<sup>4881</sup> The evidence also establishes that, during this period, leaders of the revolutionary groups including the Accused, Dr Manneh and Ali Kabbah were lodged and trained by Libyan authorities at a place called the Mathaba, located in Tripoli.<sup>4882</sup> It is also undisputed that Foday Sankoh was in Libya with the Sierra Leonean group and received training.<sup>4883</sup>

<sup>4879</sup> Issa Sesay, Transcript 17 August 2010, pp. 46424-46428. In March 1991, shortly before the RUF invasion of Sierra Leone, Sankoh gave an interview to the BBC in which he gave the then President of Sierra Leone, Joseph Momoh, a 90-day ultimatum to step down (See Issa Sesay, Transcript 5 July 2010, pp. 43597, 43633).

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2220. The issue before the Trial Chamber is whether, during this training in Libya, the Accused met Foday Sankoh and Dr Manneh and formulated with them a common plan to gain and maintain political power and physical control over the territories of Liberia and Sierra Leone, terrorizing the civilian population in the process.

2221. At the outset, the Trial Chamber notes that the parties dispute the status of Foday Sankoh.<sup>4884</sup> Prosecution evidence suggests that Sankoh was acting as the leader of the Sierra Leonean group and that, as such, he met the Accused at the Mathaba in Tripoli. In contrast, the Defence contends that Ali Kabbah was the sole leader of the Sierra Leonean group and that Sankoh, as an ordinary member of the group, was not allowed to go to the Mathaba and therefore could not have met the Accused.

2222. It is undisputed that, before 1990, the official leader of the Sierra Leonean group was Ali Kabbah.<sup>4885</sup> However, Suwandi Camara and Moses Blah, both of whom the Trial Chamber finds to be generally credible witnesses, said that Foday Sankoh was acting as the leader of the Sierra Leonean group in Libya after Kabbah left. This view is shared by the authors of Confidential Exhibit P-277, which states that Sankoh was recognised by Libyans as the leader of the Sierra-Leonean group.<sup>4886</sup>

2223. The Trial Chamber notes that this evidence relies solely on hearsay, which is contested. Camara stated that he heard that Sankoh was the leader of the Sierra Leonean group from Dr Manneh. However, DCT-125, who was in a better position to know and whom the Trial Chamber finds generally credible, denied that Dr Manneh ever presented Sankoh as leader of the Sierra Leonean group. More importantly, DCT-125 denied that Camara was introduced to the Accused or Sankoh and stated that Dr Manneh met Sankoh for the first time in Liberia, after he left Libya.

<sup>4884</sup> Prosecution evidence suggests that Sankoh was the real leader of the Sierra Leonean group and that, as such, he had meetings with Charles Taylor (Prosecution Final Trial Brief, paras 51-52). In contrast, the Defence submits that Sankoh was an ordinary soldier who was not allowed to enter in the Mathaba (Defence Final Trial Brief, paras 741-742, 746-747).

<sup>4885</sup> Suwandi Camara, Transcript 7 February 2008, p. 3431 ('Sierra Leoneans they also have a group in Libya [...] But what my leader told me, who is Kukoi Samba Sanyang, that is Foday Sankoh is a person who is -who was acting as a leader, but he was not the leader. The right leader was Ali Kabbah'), p. 3432 ('This Ali Kabbah he was the leader of the Sierra Leonean group in Libya'); Yanks Smythe, Transcript 22 February 2010, p. 35579, ('The leader of the Sierra Leoneans was Ali Kabbah'). See also Exhibit P-277 (confidential), p. 18110.

2225. In contrast, evidence suggests that at this time Ali Kabbah was the real leader of the Sierra Leonean group, and that Sankoh, despite his wish, was not considered to be a leader.<sup>4888</sup> Moses Blah explained that he did not take Sankoh seriously since Sankoh was preparing tea for him.<sup>4889</sup> Yanks Smythe also described Sankoh as an ordinary member of the group and stated that he was not at the Mathaba.<sup>4890</sup> This corroborates the Accused’s and DCT-125’s testimony, according to which Sankoh was not a leader and did not go to the Mathaba. In the light of the foregoing, the evidence is insufficient to establish that Sankoh was the leader of the Sierra-Leonean group.

Libya.<sup>4892</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that both Isaac Mongor and TF1-371 are generally credible witnesses.<sup>4893</sup>

2227. Suwandi Camara stated that he had never seen Taylor and Sankoh together,<sup>4894</sup> which does not preclude the possibility that they met. In an interview with the BBC, the Accused stated that he had been friends with Sankoh for many years before the revolution,<sup>4895</sup> which he denied in cross-examination, testifying that he met Sankoh for the first time in August 1991.<sup>4896</sup> The Trial Chamber has heard other evidence indicating that the Accused met Sankoh prior to August 1991 and finds the testimony of the Accused in this respect to be lacking in credibility.<sup>4897</sup>

2229. More significantly, the Trial Chamber notes that no evidence was adduced regarding the content of any alleged meeting if such meetings did take place. Nothing in the Prosecution's evidence establishes that the Accused, Sankoh and Dr Manneh agreed in Libya on a common plan to terrorize the civilian population to gain control of Liberia and Sierra-Leone.

2230. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that between 1986 and 1989, revolutionary movements and their leaders received training in Libya. The Trial Chamber further finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that at some point, between 1986 and 1989, the Accused, Foday Sankoh and Dr Manneh were in Libya, and that the Accused met Sankoh in Libya during this time.

2231. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that during this time period, the Accused, Sankoh and Dr Manneh met together and established a common plan to terrorize the Sierra Leonean population and to forcibly control the population and territory of Sierra Leone and to pillage its resources.

2. Alleged meeting between the Accused, Sankoh and Dr Manneh in Burkina Faso

Submissions of the Parties

2233. The Defence submits that the Prosecution evidence regarding an alleged meeting in Ouagadougou between the Accused, Manneh and Sankoh lacks clarity and reliability and relies solely on hearsay evidence. Furthermore, the evidence fails to establish that the alleged plan involved the commission of any crime charged in the Indictment.<sup>4899</sup>

Evidence

Prosecution Witness Suwandi Camara

witness that during a meeting held in Ouagadougou, Taylor, Sankoh and Dr Manneh agreed to help each other in their respective wars.<sup>4900</sup> As a result, Camara and numerous other Gambians of Dr Manneh's group were sent to Liberia in order to fight along with Taylor's army.<sup>4901</sup>

2235. Witness TF1-362, a Liberian RUF member, testified that Foday Sankoh's wife, Fatou Brown, told her that Sankoh informed her that he would assist Charles Taylor with his war in Liberia and that, in exchange, Charles Taylor would then assist him in taking the war to Sierra Leone.<sup>4902</sup>

2236. Witness TF1-371, a senior member of the RUF,<sup>4903</sup> learnt from Foday Sankoh that, after Libya, Sankoh and his special forces came along with Liberians to Burkina Faso in order to be trained.<sup>4904</sup>

2237. TF1-371 further testified that while in Liberia in 1990, he met Foday Sankoh at a hospital and Sankoh told him that he had been in Liberia fighting along with Taylor's 1st battalion and that he was one of Taylor's military advisors.<sup>4905</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

2238. Witness TF1-168, an RUF member,<sup>4906</sup> testified that in October 1990, while he was in detention in Harbel, Liberia, Foday Sankoh visited him and his 16 Sierra Leonean co-detainees. TF1-168 testified that Sankoh had a badge identifying himself as "adviser on

Prosecution Witness Moses Blah

Prosecution Witness Jabaty Jaward

2240. Witness Jabaty Jaward, a clerk for Issa Sesay and Sam Bockarie and Bockarie’s storekeeper<sup>4911</sup> testified that in August 1991, he heard from Kaifa Wai that the NPFL and RUF had common goals, which meant that Sankoh and Taylor would spread the revolution in Sierra Leone, Liberia and other countries such as Guinea.<sup>4912</sup>

The Accused

2241. The Accused testified that, in the second quarter and in the middle of 1989, after completing military training in Libya, the Liberian trainees who were split into three groups moved to Burkina Faso where they stayed until October 1989.<sup>4913</sup> The Libyan Government and the Government of Burkina Faso supported Taylor and his men during their stay in Ouagadougou.<sup>4914</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2242. The Accused denied that Sierra Leoneans, including Sankoh, were ever with his men in Burkina Faso. He stated that, at that time, there was absolutely no contact between the Liberian movement and the Sierra Leonean one.<sup>4915</sup>

Defence Witness DCT-125

2243. Witness DCT-125, an official of the Gambian group,<sup>4916</sup> testified that he left Libya in 1987 to go to Burkina Faso where Taylor was based, consistent with a plan established in Libya.<sup>4917</sup> DCT-125 stated that Dr Manneh and his group were provided with housing by the Burkinabe authorities. As revolutionary Pan-Africanist leaders, Taylor and Dr Manneh remained in contact and met frequently in order to discuss politics.<sup>4918</sup>

2244. DCT-125 denied that Dr Manneh was in Burkina Faso to fashion a conspiracy with Taylor to carry out acts of terrorism in West Africa.<sup>4919</sup> He further denied that Sierra Leoneans were present and stated that, at that time, Dr Manneh did not know Foday Sankoh, nor had the RUF been created.<sup>4920</sup>

2245. According to the witness, Charles Taylor never informed Dr Manneh about his plans to invade Liberia. Dr Manneh first learned of the Liberian revolution over the BBC radio.<sup>4921</sup>

Defence Witness Yanks Smythe

including Dr Manneh, resided together in a house provided by Blaise Compaoré, President of Burkina Faso.<sup>4923</sup>

2247. Smythe heard that the Liberians had been to Burkina Faso but when he reached there, they had already left for Côte d'Ivoire or Guinea in order to prepare their revolution.<sup>4924</sup> Mr Taylor was in and out of Ouagadougou at the time and had a residence near the Gambians' residence (around 0.5 to 2 km away), most likely provided by the Government of Burkina Faso.<sup>4925</sup> Smythe was unaware whether Foday Sankoh or Ali Kabbah or any other Sierra Leonean came to Burkina Faso.<sup>4926</sup>

Confidential Prosecution Exhibit P-277

Defence Exhibit D-114B

2250. Exhibit D-114B, is a witness statement of Yanks Smythe to the Defence. In his prior statement, Yanks Smythe said that he joined Dr Manneh's group called SOFA in 1988 and started working with him. Dr Manneh asked the witness to meet up with "the boys" in Burkina Faso and "get them ready". This implied to Smythe that he should "prepare them ideologically" and teach them ideology. Smythe left Tripoli in November 1989 and went to Burkina Faso. He stated that Dr Manneh used to come to Burkina and had a villa at "Ouga". Charles Taylor also had a residence in "Ouga" between 1987 and 1989 during the time of his revolution, but the witness cannot remember where Foday Sankoh stayed. It was possible that the three might have overlapped in “Ouga” but Foday Sankoh did not have any high status at this time. When asked why the three groups were based in Burkina, the witness opined that the climate was conducive for revolutionary activity. According to the witness, from Burkina it was planned that NPFL would attack Liberia from different angles in different countries. Yanks Smythe said that he never saw Foday Sankoh in Burkina Faso but that he learnt that he was there. The witness was not aware that Charles Taylor ever asked the Gambians to assist the NPFL.<sup>4929</sup>

2251. It is undisputed that after their training in Libya, in the second quarter and the middle of 1989, the NPFL moved in small groups to Burkina Faso.<sup>4930</sup> The evidence also establishes that, soon after the Liberian group arrived, Dr Manneh and his men left Libya and went to Burkina Faso.<sup>4931</sup>

2253. In support of its allegation, the Prosecution relies on the hearsay evidence of witnesses Suwandi Camara and TF1-371 that Foday Sankoh went to Burkina Faso. Camara heard from Dr Manneh that the Sierra Leonean group led by Sankoh joined the Gambian and the Liberian groups in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso where they established a base for their attacks against Liberia. There the Accused, Sankoh and Dr Manneh had a meeting where they agreed to help each other in their respective revolutions.<sup>4934</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Camara and TF1-371 are credible witnesses.<sup>4935</sup> However, DCT-125, a higher level Gambian official who would have been in a better position to know, and whom the Trial Chamber has also found to be generally credible,<sup>4936</sup> denied that Dr Manneh ever told Camara that the Sierra Leonean group were in Ouagadougou. He stated that the Sierra Leoneans did not go to Burkina Faso.

2255. The Trial Chamber notes that all of the evidence that Foday Sankoh was in Burkina Faso is hearsay, and that in addition to the Defence witnesses, a Prosecution witness, Moses Blah, has testified that the Sierra Leoneans and Sankoh were not in Burkina Faso with the Accused and Dr Manneh.

2257. Turning to the question of whether or not Sankoh actually helped the Accused fight in Liberia, TF1-371 testified that Sankoh introduced himself as one Taylor's military advisors.<sup>4941</sup> TF1-168 also testified that in October 1990, he saw Sankoh with a badge identifying himself as “adviser on national and international affairs” and the red beret of the NPFL Special Forces, meaning the NPFL forces trained in Libya.<sup>4942</sup> While the Trial Chamber has found that the Accused met Sankoh prior to 1991,<sup>4943</sup> this evidence adduced by the Prosecution merely indicates that Sankoh introduced himself as a military advisor to the Accused and had a badge to this effect. It is insufficient to establish the agreement alleged by the Prosecution.

2258. In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds that there is insufficient evidence to establish beyond reasonable doubt that there was a meeting in Ouagadougou between the Accused, Sankoh and Manneh. Accordingly, there is insufficient evidence to establish that while in Ouagadougou, Sankoh and Dr Manneh agreed to assist the Accused in waging war in Liberia and that the Accused agreed to assist Dr Manneh and Sankoh in return.

Findings

2260. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that during this time period, Foday Sankoh was also in Burkina Faso and that the Accused, Sankoh and Dr Manneh met and agreed to support each other in their respective wars.

3. Camp NaamaSubmissions of the Parties

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

The Accused was taking precautions to limit knowledge of his association with the forces that were being trained to attack Sierra Leone.<sup>4944</sup> The Prosecution further submits that Sierra Leonean and Liberian trainees at these bases had no separate chain of command; they were all treated as one body under the command of the Accused.<sup>4945</sup>

2262. The Defence contends that the Accused had no knowledge of the recruitment and training of RUF recruits at Camp Naama. It further submits that this was allowed by certain senior NPFL officers whom Sankoh met in Libya, particularly Anthony Mekunagbe, who acted without the Accused's approval. In any event, the training of a rebel force is not per se a criminal act and the Prosecution failed to adduce any evidence regarding the Accused's mens rea.<sup>4946</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Isaac Mongor

2263. Witness Isaac Mongor, a Sierra Leonean trader, testified that he was captured by NPFL rebels in Nimba County, Liberia around Christmas 1989 and trained by force to become an NPFL fighter. As such, Mongor became an NPFL soldier and one of Taylor's bodyguards in 1990 and fought alongside him in Liberia.<sup>4947</sup>

2265. Mongor was the first instructor to arrive at Camp Naama. Six months later, other trainers joined him at Camp Naama including Mohamed Tarawalli, Mike Lamin, Sam

Dripo, Rashid Mansaray and a man named “Gongano”. Foday Sankoh would also occasionally give training. Mongor testified that both Sierra Leoneans and Liberians, who varied in age, were trained at Camp Naama: Small Boys Units, WAC (the women’s unit) as well as adult men were trained there. The training included physical and ideological training as well as weapons training. Some of the soldiers he trained included Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon and Sam Bockarie.<sup>4949</sup>

2266. Foday Sankoh told the recruits at Camp Naama that they were being trained to fight and free the people from the corrupt system in Sierra Leone. Sankoh further explained that he was a poor man, but that his brother, Charles Taylor, would help him to take over the country. Taylor never visited Camp Naama but provided the RUF recruits with food and medicine. In private, Sankoh told Mongor that it was Taylor who was training his men for him, and that he depended on Taylor to do everything. Sankoh added that he had known Taylor for a long time, since Libya, and when Sankoh was detained in Ghana, Taylor had fought hard for him to be released.<sup>4950</sup>

2267. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>4951</sup> testified that he was forced to join the NPFL when they attacked the township he was living in, in May 1990. TF1-371 was also forced to participate in the attacks of the NPFL and was wounded during the attack on Monrovia. While in Fibi Hospital, TF1-371 met Sankoh, an RUF leader, who explained to him that he was a former military advisor of Taylor and was carrying on his own operation, that is, the training of his own recruits in Camp Naama. Sankoh invited TF1-371 to join him at Camp Naama, and in September 1990, after he recovered, TF1-371 decided to go to Camp Naama. There he met Foday Sankoh and was introduced to his deputy, Rashid Mansaray and some Liberian training instructors, including Isaac Mongor and Red Devil. He said the Liberian training instructors were all NPFL fighters.<sup>4952</sup> Mike Lamin taught ideology from a basic document about the philosophy of the movement and the socio-economic situation of the country. Sankoh also distributed brochures on basic Geneva Convention regulations on how to treat civilians and respect them during the conflict. Other training at the base included the use of arms, basic guerrilla training and how to raid villages where enemy troops were suspected to be located. Males and females of 13 years and older received the same training.<sup>4953</sup>

2268. TF1-371 testified that he never heard any direct order to indiscriminately kill civilians, or a direct order to amputate or mutilate civilians. It was not the policy at the formation of the RUF in 1991 to terrorize civilians.<sup>4954</sup> The witness also said that he was not aware of any instructions to rape, burn or loot as this was not part of RUF ideology.<sup>4955</sup>

2269. TF1-371 stayed at Camp Naama from September 1990 until February 1991.<sup>4956</sup> He testified that most of the trainees at Camp Naama came from NPFL detention facilities at Kakata and Buchanan. Foday Sankoh was able to remove people from these detention facilities by way of a Directive from Taylor. TF1-371 personally followed Sankoh to Kakata, where Sankoh was able to get some Sierra Leonean detainees released from the police station using that directive. TF1-371 further testified that the clothing, food, fuel and training supplies were procured by Foday Sankoh from the Accused at his mansion in Gbarnga.<sup>4957</sup> People who were trained at Camp Naama included TF1-168, Sam Bockarie, Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon, and Lawrence Womandia.<sup>4958</sup>

2270. Witness TF1-168 was arrested in Harbel, Liberia, by NPFL soldiers in September 1990 because he was a national of a country that contributed troops to ECOMOG which was fighting the NPFL. After two weeks of detention, in October 1990, Foday Sankoh visited the 16 Sierra Leonean detainees and asked them not to blame the NPFL for their treatment saying that it was the Sierra Leone Government that was to blame. The detainees asked Sankoh to take them to a secure place. Sankoh said he could not accommodate them all but promised to return. TF1-168 testified that Sankoh had a badge identifying himself as

Adviser on national and international affairs and wore the red beret of the NPFL Special Forces, meaning the NPFL forces trained in Libya.<sup>4959</sup>

2271. The next day, Sankoh returned and took the detainees from Harbel to Camp Naama in Bong County. Along the way there were NPFL-controlled checkpoints; the witness noted a checkpoint at 15 Gate, and later near Kakata. At each checkpoint the bus passed easily when Sankoh spoke to the guards.<sup>4960</sup> Sankoh finally took TF1-168 and the other Sierra Leoneans to the training camp named Camp Naama. There, TF1-168 received military and ideology training.<sup>4961</sup>

2272. TF1-168 testified that the instructors in Camp Naama were both Sierra Leonean and Liberian. Sierra Leonean instructors included Rashid Mansaray, Mohamed Tarawalli, and Mike Lamin. Liberian instructors included Isaac Mongor, Gonkanu, Bropleh and Sam Draper (a.k.a. "PI"), who was the principal instructor. The Liberian instructors were NPFL fighters.<sup>4962</sup>

2273. TF1-168 testified that he was taught that the RUF would use guerrilla tactics to overthrow the then government of Sierra Leone, headed by Joseph Saidu Momoh. However, TF1-168 stated that he received instruction to give good treatment to civilians in order to make them support the revolution.<sup>4963</sup>

2274. TF1-168 testified that between 130 and 150 trainees - men, women and children - took the initial training up to December 1990. Sankoh said that the new recruits were not sufficiently trained in guerrilla tactics and asked Taylor to supplement the RUF with some old, experienced NPFL fighters who would stay with the trainees for three months, and then they would all proceed to Sierra Leone.<sup>4964</sup> Around March 1991, the number of RUF recruits was around 205, composed of Liberians and Sierra Leoneans.<sup>4965</sup>

2275. Sankoh told the recruits that the RUF was acting on the will of Taylor and that Taylor was providing the training base, food for recruits and other forms of materials and assistance to reinforce the Sierra Leonean recruits at Camp Naama.<sup>4966</sup> However, Sankoh told the recruits that if asked they should say they had been trained at Sokoto Base in Nigeria in order to disassociate efforts in Sierra Leone with Liberia.<sup>4967</sup>

2276. TF1-168 remained at Camp Naama until March 1991 when he was sent on a reconnaissance mission with eight other men to Sierra Leone. A few days later, the RUF attacked Sierra Leone.<sup>4968</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-367

2277. Witness TF1-367, an RUF member,<sup>4969</sup> stated that in 1990, Sierra Leoneans were molested and detained by the NPFL for being of the same nationality as the army which fought the NPFL in Liberia. TF1-367 said that another compatriot named Jarffer Massaquoi, who was Sankoh's bodyguard, told him that Sierra Leoneans who were detained by the NPFL could be released by Sankoh if they agreed to train and fight along with the RUF.<sup>4970</sup>

2278. TF1-367 was also advised by his compatriot, TF1-371, to join the RUF in order to avoid being arrested by the NPFL. TF1-367 agreed and he and TF1-371 decided to meet Foday Sankoh, the leader of RUF. Sankoh told them his plan to attack Sierra Leone was modelled on what Taylor did for Liberia. He invited them to follow him to his camp in order to be trained.<sup>4971</sup>

2279. TF1-367 accepted Sankoh's offer and went to a training camp named Camp Naama in Liberia where he spent three months undergoing physical and ideological training. Those who were brought to Camp Naama by Foday Sankoh were trained by Liberian and Sierra Leonean instructors.<sup>4972</sup> The witness named Isaac Mongor and PI as two of the Liberian instructors, both of whom were NPFL fighters.<sup>4973</sup> The witness said that the Liberian instructors had already trained under the NPFL, so were taken by Sankoh to train the RUF, backed by Sierra Leoneans, such as Rashid Mansaray and Mohamed Tarawalli.<sup>4974</sup> TF1-367 added that all the RUF commanders were trained at Camp Naama.<sup>4975</sup>

2280. TF1-367 heard from Sankoh that his war would be fully supported by Charles Taylor, who provided food and clothes for the RUF at Camp Naama.<sup>4976</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-362

2281. Witness TF1-362, a Liberian RUF member,<sup>4977</sup> was recruited into the RUF in 1990 by Fatou Brown, Sankoh's first wife, who informed her that Sankoh, supported by Taylor, would start a war in Sierra Leone. TF1-362 joined the RUF voluntarily and was taken to Camp Naama in Bong County, Liberia where she trained and cooked for the recruits. TF1-362 testified that at Camp Naama, both NPFL and RUF fighters received military training.<sup>4978</sup> Recruits that she met included Issa Sesay, Sam Bockarie, Morris Kallon, Augustine Gbao and Mike Lamin. Sierra Leonean trainers at the camp included Rashid Mansaray, Patrick Lamin and Mohamed Tarawalli and Liberian trainers included Isaac Mongor, Patrick Dribo, Gonkanu and Town Devil.<sup>4979</sup>

2282. TF1-362 testified that the recruits were separated into several units; Small Boys Units (SBUs), Small Girls Units (SGUs), WACs, and "Adults". The youngest of the SBUs and SGUs were 8 years old. In addition to being trained as fighters, SBUs also worked as bodyguards to NPFL commanders. WACs were women trained to fight. Women captured by the NPFL and the RUF were also forced into marriage and to have sex with them. Following her training, TF1-362 was assigned to be one of Foday Sankoh's bodyguards.<sup>4980</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2283. The Accused testified that in July 1990, the NPFL forces had conquered most of Liberia and surrounded Monrovia.<sup>4981</sup> By February of 1991, Gbarnga was identified as the headquarters for the National Patriotic Reconstruction Assembly government and preparations were on-going for the Accused's move there. His forces were still surrounding Monrovia. The Accused testified that he was busy trying to set up a government while dealing with internal politics and security threats from ECOMOG. Therefore, he did not have any time to deal with RUF issues or to help in the organisation of the RUF as alleged by the Prosecution. When in March 1991 the RUF attacked Sierra Leone, he was as shocked and surprised as anyone. He did not understand the allegations of Momoh and of the international community linking the NPFL with the RUF invasion of Sierra Leone.<sup>4982</sup>

2284. The Accused testified that Camp Naama was a pre-existing military base, located in Bong County, approximately 30 miles outside of Gbarnga. It was the largest military base in Liberia, which hosted the artillery battalion and the engineering battalion of the AFL, each comprised of more than a thousand men. Camp Naama first came under control of the NPFL in approximately August/September 1990. The NPFL set up Camp Naama as a military training base. The Accused did not recall who was in charge of training at Camp Naama, but the commander of that region until the Accused arrived at Gbarnga was a member of his Special Forces named Anthony Mekunagbe. The Accused thought that Mekunagbe would have set up a training facility at Naama.<sup>4983</sup>

2285. The Accused suggested that it is unrealistic to think that he could have sent one man, Isaac Mongor, who was not even a member of his Special Forces, to train an entire invading force. Mongor, if he trained, never came back to report anything to him. Moreover, he had no interest in supporting the RUF to invade Sierra Leone.<sup>4984</sup>

2286. Regarding the structure of NPFL, the Accused testified that from August/September 1990 until February/March 1991 the NPFL was decentralised in structure with himself as the leader. He asserted that it was standard operating procedure to set up bases and train people and therefore, no one came to ask him before setting up a base. The NPFL would capture an area, set up a base, get volunteers, train, then move and leave the civilians alone.<sup>4985</sup>

2287. The Accused further stated that he was not aware that Foday Sankoh was recruiting among Sierra Leoneans in Liberia and transporting them in trucks to Camp Naama where they were trained. He testified that he knew nothing of Sierra Leoneans training at Naama. He did not visit Camp Naama until after he moved to Gbarnga in mid-1991. The Accused testified that he met Sankoh for the first time in August 1991 at Gbarnga when he took the decision to contact the RUF in order to coordinate the fight against their common enemy, ULIMO.<sup>4986</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

2288. Witness Issa Sesay, a Sierra Leonean trainee at Camp Naama, received training in political ideology, courtesy and discipline, as well as physical and military training.<sup>4987</sup> Sesay testified that children were also trained at Camp Naama, most of them because they had family members at the camp. According to Sesay, the children were not engaged in active military training, but took part in the ideology classes.<sup>4988</sup>

2289. Sesay stated that the training instructors at Camp Naama included Rashid Mansaray, Mohamed Tarawalli and Mike Lamin. Isaac Mongor, Gonkanu and PI were also trainers but came later.<sup>4989</sup>

2290. Sesay testified that while at Camp Naama, Sankoh criticized Isaac Mongor for teaching the trainees that once they captured a town they should divide the civilians into two groups and kill one group in order to obtain the loyalty of the other group.<sup>4990</sup> Sesay stated that the NPFL was in Camp Naama, but was not in that part of the camp known as Crab Hole, which was occupied solely by the RUF. He denied that Taylor supported the training

Defence Witness Martin George

2291. Witness Martin George joined Foday Sankoh's RUF in early 1991 and was brought by Sankoh to the training camp at Naama.<sup>4992</sup> George testified that Camp Naama was divided in two parts, one called Crab Hole or Sokoto, occupied by Sierra Leoneans, while the other part was occupied by Liberians. Liberians were not allowed to enter the Sierra Leonean part of the camp.<sup>4993</sup>

2292. George stated that originally there were about 500 recruits at Crab Hole, but some people left because the training was too hard.<sup>4994</sup> Recruits received training in guerrilla tactics and radio communications. Recruits had no weapons but trained with sticks. Mike Lamin, a Sierra Leonean instructor, taught all the recruits how to take care of civilians during missions.<sup>4995</sup>

2293. George stated that he never heard of Sierra Leoneans in prison in Liberia and never heard of anyone being recruited from prisons. The Sierra Leoneans he met told him that they were simply working in Liberia when they were recruited.<sup>4996</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

Foday Sankoh (a.k.a. Pa Morlai) was recruiting for the RUF in order to start a revolution in Sierra Leone. Vincent decided to join the RUF and was taken to a training base called Crab Hole located at Camp Naama from September 1990 to March 1991 together with Liberians and Sierra Leoneans. Crab Hole was an area about the size of 2 or 3 football fields, in Bong County, about 5 minutes walking distance from the main training area of Camp Naama. The trainees were aged between 10 to 35 years old. Vincent testified that Sankoh lived at Crab Hole, but had also a base in Firestone and he would go back and forth in order to find new recruits for whom he had negotiated the release from jail in Liberia.<sup>4998</sup>

2295. At Crab Hole, Vincent underwent guerrilla training under CO Rashid Mansaray and Mohamed Tarawalli, a Sierra Leonean trained in Israel, and ideology training with Mike Lamin. The ideology class taught the trainees to take good care of civilians and to attack only military installations. At Crab Hole, Vincent also met Isaac Mongor, a former NPFL member who was introduced to the new recruits as an example to follow. However, Mongor did not train anyone at Crab Hole.<sup>4999</sup>

2296. During his stay, Vincent never saw Taylor visiting Crab Hole nor did he hear about him.<sup>5000</sup> Moreover, no NPFL member was allowed into the RUF area at Crab Hole which was located behind a bush downhill of Camp Naama and could not be seen from Camp Naama itself, where the NPFL trained. Vincent stated that Sankoh asked RUF members to refer to Crab Hole as Sokoto so that other people would believe they were being trained in Nigeria. There was neither radio communication equipment nor telephones at Crab Hole.<sup>5001</sup>

2297. Vincent did not know who was the commander of the NPFL in Camp Naama but testified that the first night he arrived at Camp Naama, Sankoh was arrested by NPFL Special Forces and questioned about other training in Camp Naama. Sankoh was released three hours later, after the intervention of his friend Anthony Mekunagbe, one of the commanders of the NPFL Special Forces.<sup>5002</sup>

Defence Witness Isatu Kallon

2300. Witness Isatu Kallon, a Sierra Leonean trader in Harbel, Liberia, testified that after ECOMOG bombarded Liberia in 1990, the NPFL began harassing the Sierra Leonean civilians because they believed Sierra Leone had contributed to ECOMOG. Kallon and her family were arrested by the NPFL but were released after protests by other market women. After her release, Kallon met Sankoh who told the people at Harbel that he had been sent to help the Sierra Leoneans who were being harassed. Kallon testified that Sankoh also assisted in the release of other Sierra Leoneans outside of Harbel. She does not know if Sankoh was part of the NPFL at this time. Sankoh did not use force to secure the release of the prisoners, but merely pleaded with the NPFL.<sup>5009</sup>

2301. After her release, Kallon helped Sankoh in freeing the Sierra Leoneans detained by NPFL. Thus she helped Philip Palmer to be released from prison and provided him with lodging and food. Sankoh then visited Kallon every week. In the second week, he held a meeting at the witness's house attended by more than 100 Sierra Leoneans, during which Sankoh promised to do something about the harassment of Sierra Leoneans. However, he explained to the attendees that they should blame the Sierra Leonean government for failing to protect them from the harassment, not the NPFL fighters. Kallon was not able to follow the meeting in detail since she was in the kitchen cooking food for the attendees.<sup>5010</sup>

2302. After the meeting, Philip Palmer and "George", two educated Sierra Leoneans, wrote down the names of the men who volunteered to follow Sankoh. The volunteers left in a truck owned by Anthony Mekunagbe, one of Taylor's commanders. When Philip Palmer returned, he informed Kallon that the volunteers were taken to a place called Sokoto, in Naama. Sankoh was not present when the men were loaded onto the truck. Kallon testified that Philip Palmer never mentioned the name Taylor in her conversations with him.<sup>5011</sup>

2303. Later in 1990, Sankoh came back to Kallon's house and asked her for cassava, palm oil, soap and potatoes. Sankoh explained that he did not know the people around Camp Naama, and that was why he went to Harbel for his supplies. Kallon agreed to buy the supplies requested and gave them to Sankoh and Philip Palmer, who took them to Camp Naama. Kallon stated that she contributed supplies to Sankoh two or three times a month but did not know if other people did the same.<sup>5012</sup>

2304. Kallon testified that she visited Camp Naama on two occasions during which she brought foods and prepared soup for the trainees. She testified that she did not see any NPFL fighters, only Sierra Leoneans including Sankoh, Tarawalli and Philip Palmer. According to her, NPFL soldiers were trained in another part of Camp Naama.<sup>5013</sup> Kallon further testified that, while she was in Harbel, she heard an NPFL soldier named Isaac Mongor saying that he had gone to Naama to assist Tarawalli.<sup>5014</sup>

Defence Witness Sam Kolley

2305. Witness Sam Kolley, a Liberian, was a student when he was captured by the NPFL at Gbarnga in late 1990 and was taken to Crab Hole in Camp Naama where he received military training and ideology training for 5-6 months. Thus, although he was a Liberian, Kolley became, by virtue of the training, a member of the RUF. Kolley did not have the choice to train, because even if he did not want to train he would have been killed if he had refused.<sup>5015</sup>

2306. The commanders at Crab Hole were Mohamed Tarawalli who was in charge of physical training, Mike Lamin who was in charge of ideology, and Rashid Mansaray, who sometimes assisted Lamin in the ideology training. Ideology training included advice on how to treat civilians and prisoners but not on how to terrorise them. Terrorism was not the ideology of the RUF. Foday Sankoh also participated in the training of Sierra Leoneans within the RUF.<sup>5016</sup>

2307. Several Liberians were also conducting the training at Crab Hole. Kolley stated that there was Isaac Mongor and also Gonkanu, who was a “volunteer trainer”. Gonkanu was not a commander but would come in the morning in order to do physical training and then leave the camp.<sup>5017</sup> Another Liberian trainer was PI, who was an NPFL man.<sup>5018</sup>

2308. Kolley testified that at one time, Anthony Mekunagbe, an NPFL general, came to Crab Hole and confronted Sankoh about training people to go to Sierra Leone. Sankoh was detained for a few hours after trying to deny this. When Sankoh was released he hurriedly

2309. Witness DCT-025, a Sierra Leonean, decided, around 20 August 1990, to join Foday Sankoh and the RUF because he had friends who were already recruits.<sup>5020</sup> DCT-025 was brought together with 6 other recruits in a truck to Crab Hole or Sokoto, an RUF base within Camp Naama. DCT-025 testified that Camp Naama was a big military base but that he, as an RUF recruit, was restricted to the area down the hill where the RUF trained.<sup>5021</sup>

2310. DCT-025 estimated that there were about 300 people at Crab Hole. There were many Sierra Leoneans and some Liberians, men and women but no children. DCT-025 was unaware of any SBU unit at Camp Naama.<sup>5022</sup>

2311. DCT-025 testified that there were four Sierra Leonean training commanders at Camp Naama: Mohamed Tarawalli and Mike Lamin were in charge of training in guerrilla warfare; Rashid and Foday Sankoh were in charge of training in ideology and Rashid was also responsible for physical training. DCT-025 was never told why he was training, but he knew he was being trained as military personnel. He was not armed during the training and used sticks to practice. Ideological training included care of civilians, women and children.<sup>5023</sup>

2312. DCT-025 testified that Mammy Iye, Pa Kallon and Sankoh brought food for the trainees in pick-ups and that was the only food provision they had. Sankoh told the trainees to use the name Sokoto to disguise the name Crab Hole because their stay there had to remain secret. DCT-025 left Camp Naama on 20 March 1991 for Koindu. During his

Defence Witness Edward Zaymay

2313. Witness Edward Zaymay, an NPFL commander,<sup>5025</sup> testified that around April 1990, Anthony Mekunagbe and Timothy Mulibah sold some captured arms destined for Taylor in Gbarnga to the RUF.<sup>5026</sup> Zemay received information from Mekunagbe that Taylor had brought in new arms and that all the captured arms were to be sent to Gbarnga. Zemay dispatched a consignment of these captured arms to Gbarnga but the arms did not reach Gbarnga because Mekunagbe sold them to his “friends in Sierra Leone”.<sup>5027</sup>

2314. Mekunagbe told Zemay that he sold weapons to a person named “CO Super”. Zemay testified that, when he met “CO Super”, Mekunagbe introduced him as his “friend in Sierra Leone” and suggested that they had a deal to have friendly forces in Sierra Leone to fight runaway AFL soldiers in exile in Freetown who had organized themselves as ULIMO.<sup>5028</sup>

2315. Mekunagbe also told the witness that the supplies that Timothy Mulibah brought to the base constituted the proceeds from the arms sale to the RUF that the witness sent to Gbarnga. These included 150 bags of rice, three barrels of pig’s feet, other foodstuffs and three motorbikes.<sup>5029</sup>

2316. Edward Zemay testified that around February-March 1992, Mekunagbe and Mulibah were arrested.<sup>5030</sup> Taylor informed him that Mekunagbe and Mulibah were arrested because he discovered that they sold his weapons. Mekunagbe’s Special Forces colleagues, including Yegbeh Degbon and Oliver Varney, were also arrested for conniving with ULIMO.<sup>5031</sup>

2317. In Confidential Exhibit P-277 it is alleged, inter alia, that Isaac Mongor taught terror tactics to the RUF recruits by telling them that they should kill half of the civilians of any village they captured and “tabay” (meaning tying both hands on the back of the body) the rest.<sup>5032</sup>

Deliberations

2318. The Prosecution alleges that the Accused provided Sankoh and the RUF with a training base at Camp Naama, which was used for training both the NPFL and the RUF. The Accused also provided the RUF recruits in Camp Naama with food and medicine, and he provided the RUF with instructors who taught RUF recruits to use terror tactics against civilians.<sup>5033</sup> The Defence denies that the Accused had any knowledge of the recruitment and training of RUF recruits at Camp Naama.<sup>5034</sup>

2319. Undisputed circumstances emerge from the record. The evidence unequivocally demonstrates that, by August or September 1990, the NPFL, led by the Accused, had conquered most of Liberia and taken control of the largest military base in Liberia, Camp Naama, located in Bong County.<sup>5035</sup> Quickly thereafter, the NPFL set up a training base at Camp Naama for NPFL soldiers.<sup>5036</sup>

2320. The evidence further establishes that, in the course of 1990, Sierra Leonean civilians were molested, arrested and detained by NPFL soldiers in retaliation for the ECOMOG bombings.<sup>5037</sup> Foday Sankoh, the RUF leader, secured the release of some of the Sierra 2322. With much of the evidence undisputed, the Trial Chamber is left to determine whether the Accused was involved in or aware of the recruitment and training of RUF recruits and whether terror methods were taught at Camp Naama by instructors sent by the Accused.

2323. Isaac Mongor is the sole witness providing first hand evidence of the Accused's direct involvement in sending NPFL trainers to do RUF training at Camp Naama. Mongor testified that in about March or April 1990 Taylor assigned him to help Sankoh in training the new RUF recruits at Camp Naama.<sup>5045</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Isaac Mongor is a generally credible witness.<sup>5046</sup> Nonetheless, several issues regarding his testimony specifically on Camp Naama were raised by the Defence,<sup>5047</sup> which the Trial Chamber will address in this context.

2324. Mongor testified that he was captured by the NPFL before Christmas 1989 and subsequently became an NPFL soldier. The Defence submits that this account is impossible since the Liberian war had not even started.<sup>5048</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that Mongor's testimony that he was abducted around Christmas 1989, in Nimba County close to the border between Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire,<sup>5049</sup> is consistent with the evidence adduced by both parties regarding the history of the Liberian Conflict. Indeed, Taylor himself testified that at the end of December 1989, he ordered an NPFL group led by Prince Johnson to capture Gbutuo and advance to Tiaplay.<sup>5050</sup> NPFL troops advanced "westward" to Tappita, 2325. The Defence further submits that Mongor's story regarding his capture by the NPFL was "riddled with inconsistencies". However, this blanket allegation is not linked to any particular inconsistency or any specific reference to the transcripts.<sup>5053</sup> A careful analysis of Mongor's account of his capture does not reveal any major inconsistency regarding this event.<sup>5054</sup> To the contrary, despite a lengthy cross-examination, Mongor was consistent on his account regarding his abduction by NPFL soldiers around Christmas 1989 in Nimba County and his subsequent involvement in the NPFL.<sup>5055</sup>

2326. The Defence also contends that, in his prior statement to the Prosecution, Mongor said that he was recruited into the RUF by Sankoh and not by Taylor, as he testified in Court.<sup>5056</sup> Confronted with this inconsistency and questioned extensively on this point, Mongor maintained that he had been recruited by the Accused and "handed over" to Foday Sankoh to help him train the RUF men, and that subsequently Sankoh told him that he should join the RUF.<sup>5057</sup> Similarly, Mongor's prior statement to the Prosecution indicated that Mongor was introduced to Sankoh by John Kargbo. However, in Court Mongor explained that he had met Sankoh before but that Kargbo had brought Mongor closer to Sankoh.<sup>5058</sup> The Trial Chamber is satisfied by these explanations.

<sup>5054</sup> The Trial Chamber has noted that Mongor's previous statement to the Prosecution indicated that "[d]uring the early stage of the war in Liberia, he became associated with the NPFL" and that "'Mongor joined the NPFL in 1989 at the start of the revolution". However, the Trial Chamber also notes that the same statement explained that Mongor was "[c]aptured by NPFL in early part of 1989 in Nimba County while operating business". Mongor explained that he was captured by the NPFL but that the consequence of this capture was that he became associated with it and therefore joined it. The Trial Chamber is satisfied by these explanations and does not find that these minor differences, in the wording of a document not written by the witness himself affect the credibility of Isaac Mongor (Isaac Mongor, Transcript 1 April 2008, pp. 6325-6334).

2327. In assessing Mongor's evidence, the Trial Chamber has considered the evidence, including from Issa Sesay and several other Defence witnesses, that a number of NPFL soldiers provided training at Crab Hole including Mike Lamin, Rashid Mansaray, PI, Gonkanu, Red Devil and Sylvester.<sup>5059</sup> Defence Witness DCT-292 also mentioned One Man One as one of the NPFL instructors at Crab Hole.<sup>5060</sup>

2328. The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371 testified that he independently joined the RUF and not that he was sent by Taylor.<sup>5061</sup> Several other witnesses, including Defence Witness Vincent, a former NPFL soldier, testified that they also joined the RUF independently.<sup>5062</sup> Nonetheless, the fact that TF1-371 and others joined the RUF independently does not exclude the possibility that others, including Mongor, trained the RUF with the knowledge and the consent of the Accused. Moreover, in the Trial Chamber's view, NPFL soldiers such as TF1-371 and John Vincent, who had been abducted into the NPFL and joined the RUF, could not have done so without the Accused's agreement.<sup>5063</sup> TF1-168's evidence also supports this view. Indeed, TF1-168, whom the Trial Chamber considers to be a generally credible witness, testified that Taylor provided Sankoh with experienced NPFL soldiers, who were trained beforehand and had experienced war, who would stay with the trainees for three months because the new recruits were not sufficiently trained in guerrilla tactics.<sup>5064</sup>

2329. The Defence submits that the fact that Mongor remained with the RUF after operation Top Final contradicts Mongor's assertion that he was sent by Taylor.<sup>5065</sup> Mongor testified that he was sent by Taylor and Sankoh then asked him to stay with the RUF. In the Trial Chamber's view the fact that Mongor remained with the RUF after Camp Naama does not exclude the possibility that he was initially sent by Taylor in order to train the RUF. The Trial Chamber recalls that Mongor was abducted by the NPFL.<sup>5066</sup> In the Trial Chamber's view, this could explain why Mongor remained in the RUF after Camp Naama and is not inconsistent with Mongor's assertion that he was sent to Camp Naama by Taylor. The Trial Chamber notes that Defence Witness DCT-292 mentioned One Man One among the NPFL trainers in Camp Naama.<sup>5067</sup>

2330. The Trial Chamber has also considered the evidence of numerous witnesses both for the Prosecution and the Defence, who testified that in 1990 Sierra Leoneans arrested by NPFL troops were released after Sankoh's intervention and brought directly by Sankoh to Crab Hole in order to be trained. TF1-371 testified that most of the trainees came from these detention facilities and that Sankoh was able to release them by way of a Directive from Taylor.<sup>5068</sup> The Trial Chamber has also considered the fact that Sankoh and the RUF recruits were able to travel and pass check-points throughout NPFL controlled territory,<sup>5069</sup> and the credible testimony of Defence witness Isatu Kallon that following one recruitment, a truck owned by Anthony Mekunagbe, one of Taylor's commanders, was brought to transport the recruits. Moreover, Taylor's mansion in Gbarnga was close to Camp Naama.<sup>5070</sup> For these reasons, in the Trial Chamber's view, the recruitment by Sankoh of NPFL soldiers, the release of hundreds Sierra Leoneans prisoners from NPFL jails and their transport to Camp Naama could not have happened without the Accused's approval.

2331. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371, TF1-168, TF1-367 and TF1-362 corroborate Mongor's testimony that, while at Camp Naama, Foday Sankoh said that he was receiving support from Charles Taylor. This support included inter alia the use of Crab Hole in Camp Naama as a training base, as well as provision of food and medicine.<sup>5071</sup> Several Defence Witnesses testified that they never heard about the Accused's involvement in the RUF training at Crab Hole.<sup>5072</sup> However, the Trial Chamber notes that the fact that several witnesses did not hear about his involvement does not negate the possibility that he was involved. It is not disputed that the Accused never went to Camp Naama before the invasion of Sierra Leone by RUF in March 1991.<sup>5073</sup> Thus, he could have supported the RUF at Camp Naama without the witnesses' knowledge.

2332. The Trial Chamber considers that it would have been impossible for the several hundred RUF recruits at Camp Naama to survive without NPFL's support. It accepts Kallon's evidence that she provided Sankoh with goods twice a month.<sup>5074</sup> Isatu and Daniel Kallon's support to the RUF troops in Crab Hole is confirmed by other evidence.<sup>5075</sup> However, in the Trial Chamber's view such small quantity would have been largely insufficient in order to feed all the recruits during their training.<sup>5076</sup> Moreover, Isaac Mongor, TF1-371, TF1-168, and TF1-367 all testified that the Accused provided the base with food for recruits and other forms of assistance. TF1-371 further testified that the supplies were procured by Foday Sankoh from the Accused at his mansion in Gbarnga. Mongor testified that Sankoh told him that he depended on Taylor for everything.

2333. Under these circumstances, and in the midst of a war in Liberia, Taylor's assertion that he had no knowledge of RUF training at his main training camp is not credible.<sup>5077</sup> In the light of the foregoing, the only reasonable conclusion that can be drawn from the evidence in its entirety is that Taylor provided Sankoh with a training base, with NPFL instructors, and with food and other supplies, and that he approved the recruitment by the RUF of NPFL soldiers and Sierra Leonean prisoners.

2334. With regard to the alleged training of terror methods in Crab Hole by NPFL instructors, Confidential Exhibit P-277 contends that Isaac Mongor taught terror tactics to the RUF recruits by telling them that they should kill half of the civilians of any village they would capture and "tabay" (meaning tying both hands on the back of the body) the rest.<sup>5078</sup> This allegation is corroborated by Defence witness Issa Sesay, who testified that while at Camp Naama, Sankoh criticized Isaac Mongor for teaching the trainees that once they captured a town they should divide the civilians into two groups and kill one of the groups in order to obtain the loyalty of the other group.<sup>5079</sup> However, substantial evidence was adduced by both Prosecution and Defence witnesses stating that ideology training received by RUF recruits in Camp Naama included basic Geneva Convention regulations on the treatment of civilians.<sup>5080</sup> While the evidence suggests that Isaac Mongor may have advocated the use of terror tactics, it has not been established that he did so following the Accused's orders. The Trial Chamber also notes that several other witnesses described Mongor as merely a physical training instructor. In the light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence on record insufficient to establish beyond reasonable doubt that as a matter of policy training instructors sent by the Accused taught terror methods to RUF recruits at Camp Naama.

2335. In making this finding, the Trial Chamber has considered the allegation that, before the invasion of Sierra Leone, the Accused said publicly on the radio, that "Sierra Leone would taste the bitterness of war". The Accused testified that "no human being on this planet" heard these words.<sup>5081</sup> However, overwhelming evidence both from Prosecution and

It was for one reason: Because there was a man they used to call Charles Taylor. At the time there was war in Liberia he said that that war that had come to Liberia, we would taste the bitterness of that one in Sierra Leone. Everybody heard that in the radio. PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2336. The evidence indicates clearly that RUF and NPFL trained in two different parts of Camp Naama.<sup>5083</sup> In the Trial Chamber's view this evidence is inconsistent with a unified command structure. Moreover, the evidence on the RUF command structure in Camp Naama provided by TF1-168 described Foday Sankoh as the commander in chief without mention of the Accused.<sup>5084</sup> TF1-367, who trained in Crab Hole, also testified that Foday Sankoh was the only one whom the RUF recruits in Crab Hole knew as the leader of the RUF.<sup>5085</sup> No other evidence in the record supports the submission of the Prosecution that the RUF and NPFL trained at Camp Naama had the same chain of command.

Findings

2337. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that from August 1990 until March 1991, the Accused provided the RUF with the training camp of Crab Hole, instructors, recruits and material support, including food and other supplies.

2339. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Liberian and Sierra Leonean trainees at Camp Naama had no separate chain of command and were treated as one body under the command of the Accused.

4. The Invasion of Sierra LeoneSubmissions of the Parties

2340. The Prosecution alleges that in March 1991 in Voinjama, Lofa County, Liberia the Accused, Foday Sankoh and Dr Manneh together with NPFL and RUF commanders held a meeting during which they planned and organised the invasion of Sierra Leone, according to the strategy and tactic hatched in Libya and Burkina Faso.<sup>5086</sup> The Prosecution further contends that NPFL commanders and fighters sent by the Accused and obeying his orders, were the primary participants in the invasion into Sierra Leone in March 1991 and during the early stages of the conflict in Sierra Leone until they were withdrawn in about June 1992. NPFL soldiers were in command of all the operations during the invasion.<sup>5087</sup>

2341. The Defence concedes that the invasion force included NPFL troops and that the majority of RUF recruits were Liberians. However, the Defence submits that these men were not sent by the Accused. The Defence denies that the Accused was involved in planning the invasion of Sierra Leone and submits that he never went to Voinjama prior to the invasion of Sierra Leone.<sup>5088</sup>

2342. Witness TF1-371, a training instructor at Camp Naama, testified that at the end of February 1991, he went to Sierra Leone for a reconnaissance operation in order to verify that the road that would be used to attack Daru Barracks in Sierra Leone was safe. Six other men, including RUF commander Mohamed Tarawalli, also went on the trip.

2343. On their way back to Camp Naama, TF1-371 and the other men met Sankoh and Taylor in a convoy en route to Voinjama. Sankoh invited them into his car and drove them to Voinjama to discuss with them the operational plans for the invasion of Sierra Leone on 23 March 1991. TF1-371 spent his time at Voinjama in the house of an NPFL member, Defence Witness DCT-025.<sup>5089</sup>

2344. The next morning, at around 9.00am, TF1-371 attended a meeting at Anthony Mekunagbe's house. Charles Taylor, Dr Manneh and senior officers and members of the Special Forces and others participated in the meeting.<sup>5090</sup> During the meeting Taylor and Sankoh discussed different plans to attack Sierra Leone. According to TF1-371, Taylor dominated the meeting and took the decision to attack Sierra Leone on 23 March 1991 on two fronts, Pujehun and Kailahun Districts, contrary to Sankoh's project to attack first Daru Barracks.<sup>5091</sup>

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

2345. Witness Isaac Mongor was an NPFL training instructor in physical exercise at Camp Naama in early 1991. He testified that Foday Sankoh used to tell the recruits in the training camp that Sierra Leone was corrupt and that the recruits were being trained to go and free the people from this system. Sankoh described himself as a poor man but stated that 'his brother', Charles Taylor, would take over the country.<sup>5092</sup>

2346. After their training in Camp Naama, Mongor and his men went to Voinjama in Lofa County. There, Mongor met Charles Taylor and his Special Forces, NPFL soldiers. Mongor was invited into the house of General Dopoe Menkarzon (a.k.a. General Pepe) with Charles Taylor and Foday Sankoh. General Francis Mewon, a member of the Special Forces, Ibrahim Bah and a Gambian named Lamin also attended the meeting. During the meeting, Taylor thanked Mongor for having trained his men and assigned him to the mission to fight in Sierra Leone and take over power.<sup>5093</sup>

TF1-168 continued toward Kenema and Freetown.<sup>5095</sup> That morning, as he was leaving Baiwala, TF1-168 heard gunfire and understood that the war had started.

2348. Two months later, when the RUF controlled the area where he was staying, TF1-168 complained to Sankoh that by attacking before they could come back from the mission Sankoh had endangered their lives. Sankoh apologised and explained that the attack on Sierra Leone was not supposed to take place so early but a fire exchange between NPFL soldiers and Sierra Leonean border guards in Bomaru regarding a debt for looted goods provided a good opportunity for the RUF to invade Sierra Leone.

The Accused

2349. The Accused denied having planned any attack on Sierra Leone. He stated that he was not present at the meeting in Voinjama and did not discuss any strategies or plans with Foday Sankoh regarding the attack on Sierra Leone.<sup>5096</sup> The Accused further denied being the guiding force behind the plan to attack Sierra Leone. He stated that Sankoh did not need his help.<sup>5097</sup> The Accused further testified that the first and only time he went to Voinjama was at end of the last quarter of 1991.<sup>5098</sup>

2350. The Accused testified that he was surprised and very disturbed to hear of the invasion in Sierra Leone. He heard it through his NPFL Information Officer who would bring a summary of important news to him every day in Harbel, through the programme Focus on Africa on the BBC. The Accused decided to close the border immediately and called President of Sierra Leone, Momoh.<sup>5099</sup> Momoh told the Accused that people with NPFL ID cards were involved and told him that he was convinced that the Accused was involved in the invasion. The Accused testified that the entire international community was convinced that he was behind the invasion but it was a lie.<sup>5100</sup>

2351. The Accused testified that, in August 1991, he took the decision to contact the RUF to see if they could put together a “programme” to help him protect his border and to fight the common enemy, ULIMO. He contacted Sankoh through members of his Special Forces and asked him to come to Gbarnga. The Accused believed he sent Dopoe Menkarzon to convey this message. Sankoh was happy to meet with him, Taylor.<sup>5101</sup>

2352. After August 1991, the Accused worked with Foday Sankoh's RUF in order to fight against ULIMO. He provided manpower, arms and ammunition, a guest house for Foday Sankoh and radio room in Gbarnga. The Accused had little to share as he was fighting a war himself. However, he did, on occasion, share with him limited quantities of materiel. There were no arms coming in from the outside. The Accused was dealing with whatever he was able to capture from the AFL.<sup>5102</sup> The Accused testified that this minimal assistance lasted until May 1992 when he stopped any kind of cooperation with the RUF.<sup>5103</sup>

2353. Witness DCT-125, a Gambian official, testified that Dr Manneh was not present during the alleged meeting at Voinjama in March 1991 where Taylor, Sankoh and Dr Manneh allegedly planned the invasion of Sierra Leone. DCT-125 denied that Dr Manneh had ever been to Voinjama. He also stated that Dr Manneh did not know several of the other alleged participants in the meetings.<sup>5104</sup>

2354. According to DCT-125, Dr Manneh learnt about the conflict in Sierra Leone through the BBC Focus on Africa and met Sankoh for the very first time in late 1991 or the beginning of 1992, when the conflict in Sierra Leone had already started.<sup>5105</sup>

the meeting with Taylor and Sankoh.<sup>5107</sup> DCT-025 denied having lodged TF1-371 and testified that he did not have any house or family in Voinjama. Moreover, he testified that he had never stayed in Voinjama and only passed through once on his way to Koindu in 1991.<sup>5108</sup>

2357. Witness DCT-292, an RUF recruit,<sup>5110</sup> testified that in March 1991 Foday Sankoh came from Gbarnga and told the recruits that a friend informed him that a group of Liberians had already crossed the border into Sierra Leone and were engaging in bartering. DCT-292 testified that this news prompted Sankoh to initiate the RUF invasion because Sankoh did not want the SLA soldiers on the border to run away. DCT-292 understood Sankoh's reaction as a way to get ammunition as RUF troops had no arms and ammunition to start the war.<sup>5111</sup>

2358. DCT-292 testified that Sankoh called his commanders – Rashid Mansaray, Isaac Mongor, Sylvester, and Mohamed Tarawalli – to discuss the strategy for the invasion. Mansaray asked Sankoh how they would fight a war without ammunition. Sankoh told him that the RUF struggle was purely self-reliant and that the commandos should be capable of finding their own arms.<sup>5112</sup>

2359. DCT-292 stated that the first incursion into Sierra Leone on 23 March 1991 was divided into two groups. The first group targeted Kailahun, and was headed by John Kargbo. The second group targeted Pujehun, and included Rashid Mansaray and Mike Lamin. The first group was then separated into two, as it was decided that it was better to attack

2360. Witness Yanks Smythe, a Gambian, was Taylor's bodyguard and radio operator from 1990 until 1995. Smythe testified that the first time he accompanied Taylor to Voinjama in Lofa County was in October 1991, after the RUF attacked Sierra Leone.<sup>5114</sup> According to Smythe there had been no communication between Taylor and Sankoh before the RUF attacked Sierra Leone.<sup>5115</sup>

2361. Smythe further testified that in March 1991, Dr Manneh was in Buchanan since Taylor had asked him to stay there to help organize the civil administration. Smythe stated that Dr Manneh and Taylor played no part in the invasion of Sierra Leone.<sup>5116</sup>

2362. Witness Issa Sesay testified that, while in Camp Naama, he never heard any discussion suggesting that Taylor and Sankoh developed a relationship. Sesay testified that he sent TF1-371 and Mohamed Tarawalli on a reconnaissance mission into Sierra Leone before the invasion but that they came back to Camp Naama before the convoy left for Voinjama in Lofa County. They returned to Camp Naama in March 1991 and two days later, the RUF invaded Sierra Leone.<sup>5117</sup> Sesay stated that at no time did either man tell him about attending a meeting in Voinjama to discuss the invasion of Sierra Leone with Taylor. More generally, Sesay never heard any discussion about Taylor overruling Sankoh's plans for the invasion of Sierra Leone nor did Sankoh ever complain about Taylor for doing so.<sup>5118</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIODDeliberations

2363. The Trial Chamber will first assess the evidence regarding the alleged meeting in Voinjama before assessing the evidence regarding the invasion of Sierra Leone on 23 March 1991.

(a) Meeting in Voinjama

2364. The Trial Chamber heard significant evidence showing that, in late February 1991, Foday Sankoh issued an ultimatum to President of Sierra Leone, Joseph Momoh to resign from the Presidency within 90 days or else face a revolt.<sup>5119</sup> Furthermore, it is undisputed that, on 23 March 1991, before the expiration of Sankoh's ultimatum, troops composed of NPFL and RUF soldiers invaded Sierra Leone.<sup>5120</sup>

2365. In this context, the Prosecution, relying on TF1-371, alleges that before the attack was launched on Sierra Leone, the Accused, Foday Sankoh, some of the Accused's subordinate NPFL commanders, including those who would enter Sierra Leone as part of the invading force, and some RUF personnel held a meeting in Voinjama, Lofa County. During that meeting, the plan for the attack was decided. The Accused was in charge of the meeting, at which he was domineering.<sup>5121</sup>

2366. The Trial Chamber notes that Isaac Mongor and TF1-371 provided relevant evidence regarding an alleged meeting with the Accused in Voinjama. The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Mongor and TF1-371 are generally credible witnesses.<sup>5122</sup>

2367. The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371 and Isaac Mongor's testimonies corroborate each other in placing the Accused at a meeting in Voinjama in March 1991.<sup>5123</sup> Nonetheless, these testimonies differ significantly in their details. TF1-371 placed the alleged meeting around 9.00a.m. in the morning while Isaac Mongor placed it at night.<sup>5124</sup> Except for the Accused and Sankoh, the names of the persons attending the meetings are entirely different.<sup>5125</sup> While TF1-371 testified that during the meeting Taylor, Sankoh and Dr Manneh discussed different plans in order to attack Sierra Leone, Isaac Mongor did not mention discussion of any such plans. He testified that the Accused assigned him to the mission to fight in Sierra Leone.<sup>5126</sup> TF1-371 placed the alleged meeting at the home of Anthony Mekunagbe while Isaac Mongor placed the meeting at the home of General Dopoe Menkarzon (a.k.a. General Pepe), although other witnesses have referred to Anthony Mekunagbe as “General Dry Pepe”.<sup>5127</sup> The details are so different as to suggest that the witnesses may have been testifying about two different meetings but the evidence does not establish that there were two meetings.<sup>5128</sup> In any event, the Trial Chamber notes that there were many inconsistencies in the testimony of these witnesses.

2368. Additionally, TF1-371 testified that the meeting in Voinjama took place after he came back from the reconnaissance mission in Sierra Leone. TF1-168, who was in TF1-371’s group during this mission testified that, just after the group split, he heard gunfire and

<sup>5126</sup> The Trial Chamber observes that during his testimony in Court, Mongor stated that Taylor thanked him personally for the job he has done in training his men (Isaac Mongor, Transcript 4 April 2008, p. 6668). However, in the additional information on the proofing notes dated 3 and 8 February 2008, Mongor explained that Taylor did not talk specifically to him during that meeting but addressed all the commanders who were present. Confronted with this discrepancy, Mongor explained that Taylor spoke to him personally during a first meeting and addressed his greetings to all the commanders during a second one (Isaac Mongor, Transcript 4 April 2008, pp. 6668-6674). In both accounts, Mongor did not mention any discussion regarding the invasion of Sierra Leone.

<sup>5128</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that the Prosecution brief does not suggest that there were two meetings (Prosecution Final Trial Brief, paras 77, 80). The Prosecution, quoting Mongor, submits that ‘the morning after a meeting with Taylor in Voinjama in which Taylor made the final decision as to how the attack would unfold Isaac Mongor and his men were sent to Foya where they were armed’. There is no mention of a second meeting and the characterization in the brief of Taylor’s role in this meeting is not derived from Mongor’s testimony but apparently from TF1-371’s testimony. The Prosecution seems therefore to consider that Mongor and TF1-371 were testifying as to the same meeting.

understood that the RUF attacked Sierra Leone.<sup>5129</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-168 is also generally credible.<sup>5130</sup> However, TF1-168's testimony is inconsistent with TF1-371's account that he came back from the reconnaissance mission before the start of the invasion. The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371's sequence of the events is corroborated by Issa Sesay. Indeed, Sesay testified that TF1-371 returned from the mission two days before the RUF invaded Sierra Leone.<sup>5131</sup> However, Sesay testified that TF1-371 returned to Camp Naama and not directly to Voinjama as alleged by TF1-371. Furthermore, Issa Sesay, who was close to TF1-371 and to Mohamed Tarawalli, testified that he had never heard about this alleged meeting.<sup>5132</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the testimony of Issa Sesay must be treated with caution.<sup>5133</sup> Nevertheless, in the Trial Chamber's view these discrepancies within the Prosecution evidence cast doubt on the reliability of the evidence regarding the alleged meeting.

2369. The Accused denied having been in Voinjama in March 1991 and having planned the attack on Sierra Leone. DCT-125 denied that Dr Manneh was in Voinjama and planned this attack. This evidence is corroborated by the testimony of other witnesses. DCT-292 testified that the planning of the invasion of Sierra Leone by Sankoh and his commanders including Rashid Mansaray, Isaac Mongor, Sylvester and Mohamed Tarawalli took place in Camp Naama and not in Voinjama as alleged by TF1-371.<sup>5134</sup>

2370. Yanks Smythe, who was with the Accused in March 1991, testified that Taylor was not in Voinjama. He also testified that in March 1991, Dr Manneh was in Buchanan. Smythe testified that the first time he accompanied Taylor to Voinjama in Lofa County was in October 1991, after the RUF attacked Sierra Leone.<sup>5135</sup> The Trial Chamber notes, however, that in a prior statement dated 26 February 2010, Smythe admitted having been in Voinjama in March 1991. Confronted with this contradiction, Smythe explained that he changed his version because he thought about it and realized he had made a mistake.<sup>5136</sup> The Trial

Chamber is not convinced by this explanation and does not therefore accept Smythe's evidence in this regard.

2371. DCT-025, who allegedly lodged TF1-371 the night before he attended the meeting, directly contradicted TF1-371's testimony.<sup>5137</sup> DCT-025 denied he had a house in Voinjama and that he had hosted TF1-371. In the Trial Chamber's view this casts further doubts regarding TF1-371's account of events.<sup>5138</sup>

2372. Finally, the Trial Chamber notes that TF1-367 testified that when he arrived at Crab Hole training camp, in 1990, months before the invasion of Sierra Leone, Sankoh told him that he would enter Sierra Leone from two fronts "one in the Kailahun District and, two, in Pujehun District".<sup>5139</sup> Thus, according to TF1-367, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be generally credible,<sup>5140</sup> Sankoh had already designed the plan for invading Sierra Leone on two fronts, long before the alleged meeting in Voinjama.

2373. In light of the inconsistencies noted above, even among Prosecution witnesses, the Trial Chamber is unable to accept TF1-371's testimony without doubt. There is no evidence other than the testimony of TF1-371 that the Accused participated in a meeting in March 1991 in Voinjama with Foday Sankoh and Dr Manneh that planned and organised the invasion of Sierra-Leone.

(b) Invasion of Sierra Leone on 23 March 1991

2374. The Prosecution alleges that NPFL commanders and fighters sent by the Accused and obeying his orders, were in command of all the operations during the invasion into Sierra Leone in March 1991 until they were withdrawn in about June 1992.<sup>5141</sup>

2375. While the Defence concedes that the invasion force included NPFL troops and that the majority of RUF recruits were Liberians,<sup>5142</sup> the Accused testified that he did not know that NPFL soldiers participated in the invasion of Sierra Leone. He stated that he was shocked, as anyone, to hear that there was an attack on Sierra Leone.<sup>5143</sup> The Accused added that he discovered Mekunagbe and Varney's involvement during investigations on Varney and Mekunagbe from his first conversation with Sankoh in June 1991.<sup>5144</sup> Following further investigations, Varney, Mekunagbe and One Man One were arrested for a plot against him around June 1992. Mekunagbe died in detention while Oliver Varney was convicted and executed.<sup>5145</sup>

<sup>5138</sup> The Trial Chamber further notes that TF1-371 described DCT-025 as an NPFL fighter while DCT-025 testified that he was an RUF recruit. TF1-371's ignorance about DCT-025 belonging to the RUF raises further doubt with respect to his account of the night he spent at DCT-025's house.

2376. In the Trial Chamber's view, while this evidence suggests that NPFL Commanders Anthony Mekunagbe and Oliver Varney carried on certain activities without the Accused's knowledge and consent, it does not cast a doubt on the overwhelming evidence of the Accused's knowledge of and involvement in the invasion of Sierra Leone.

2377. At the outset, the Trial Chamber recalls that it has found that, prior to the invasion of Sierra Leone, Taylor made a public statement on the radio that "Sierra Leone would taste the bitterness of war".<sup>5146</sup> integrated command structure, although the Trial Chamber notes that in this chart, while RUF commanders are shown to be reporting to NPFL commanders for the purpose of military command, Foday Sankoh, the leader of the RUF, has no reporting line to the Accused.<sup>5155</sup> Given this level of involvement and this command structure, in the Trial Chamber's view, it is impossible that such an important event, an attack involving two major battalions of the Accused's army, against a neighbouring country, could have happened without the knowledge and consent of the Accused.

2378. The evidence unequivocally establishes that NPFL soldiers constituted the large majority of the invasion force on Sierra Leone.<sup>5147</sup> The evidence also shows that the RUF

In making this finding, the Trial Chamber recalls the testimony of the Accused that he was informed immediately of this invasion by his Information Officer in Harbel and by the radio programme Focus on Africa on the BBC. The Accused further stated that he was also immediately informed by President Momoh that NPFL soldiers participated in the invasion.<sup>5156</sup> However, when he learned of the involvement of NPFL soldiers in the invasion of Sierra Leone, the Accused did not immediately react. <sup>5162</sup> Charles Ghankay Taylor, Transcript 10 September 2009, p. 28597 (Taylor provided Sankoh with a house in Gbarnga from August/September 1991 until the end of his relationship with Sankoh in May of 1992); Transcript 1 October 2009, pp. 30042-30043 (Taylor agreed that he provided Sankoh with a house in Gbarnga in 1991); Yanks Smythe, 22 February 2010, pp. 35674-35677 (Between 1991 and 1992, Sankoh visited Gbarnga and received small amounts of arms and ammunition from the NPFL); TF1-338, Transcript 1 September 2008, p.

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2381. Thus, when viewing the record as a whole, it can only be concluded that the Accused was involved in the invasion of Sierra Leone. Widespread belief in his involvement was acknowledged by the Accused himself as having been held by the international community and President Momoh at the time of the invasion.<sup>5163</sup>

2382. Turning to the motivations behind the NPFL and RUF cooperation in invading Sierra Leone, the Prosecution alleges that the invasion of Sierra Leone was the prelude to the achievement of the ultimate objectives of the common plan, design or purpose, namely to terrorize the civilian population in order to forcibly control the population and territory of Sierra Leone and to pillage its resources, in particular diamonds.<sup>5164</sup>

were mutilated in Sierra Leone in 1992); Martin George, Transcript 22 April 2010, pp. 39684-39687 (George's group arrived in Kailahun on 1 January 1993. He was told that NPFL troops had come to Kailahun and harassed people, raped them and forced them to do work. The NPFL had organized a group called Top 20, then Top 40, who started to kill civilians and take their properties); See also Exhibit P-277 (confidential), pp. 18-20 (describing crimes committed by NPFL soldiers); Exhibit D-336, "Footpaths to Democracy, RUF, 1995", pp. 9707-9708 ("We do not deny that the fact that some of those who volunteered to join our cause were veterans of the Liberian civil war but majority were of Sierra Leonean parentage. However, this minor 'alien' involvement in our just and human cause was curtailed as early as May 1992 when it became a nightmarish experience for our civilian population").

<sup>5166</sup> TF1-567, Transcript 2 July 2008, pp. 12818-12820 (TF1-567 was in Pendembu Town, Kailahun District in May 1991 when he saw rebels speaking Liberian English, shooting guns around town and capturing civilians. TF1-567, who was 16 years old at the time, was captured together with sixteen other people. Some of the captives were younger than the witness. They were then taken to Pendembu vocational secondary school compound to undergo training); TF1-516, Transcript 8 April 2008, pp. 6813-6815, 6876; Transcript 11 April 2008, pp. 7332-7333 (TF1-516 was 17 years old when he was abducted by a Liberian named Rambo in Kailahun town in March 1991. Two weeks later, the witness escaped back to his village in Kailahun but one month after that he was recaptured, again by Liberians); Albert Saidu, Transcript 3 June 2008, pp. 10865-10871 (Albert Saidu was captured with 100 other civilians including young children by RUF and Liberian rebels invading Sierra Leone in March 1991 and forced to follow military training at Pendembu in Kailahun District); Alice Pyne, Transcript 17 June 2008, pp. 12048-12049 (Pyne was abducted by NPFL fighters in March 1991 together with 100 other civilians including boys, girls and women. The NPFL fighters including one Sierra Leonean named Gibba, dressed in civilian clothes, searched for arms and ammunition from civilian houses, and looted civilian money).

<sup>5167</sup> TF1-567, Transcript 2 July 2008, pp. 12821-12826 (At the base, around 800 people, including children as young as 13 years old, both boys and girls, underwent military training); TF1-516, Transcript 8 April 2008, pp. 6815-6824, 6876 (TF1-516 testified that captive civilians arrived from other areas to a training base in Kailahun. There were approximately 5,000 "recruits" including children divided by sex into Small Boys Units and Small Girls Units who were from 10 up to 20 years old); Albert Saidu, Transcript 3 June 2008, pp. 10871-10873 (abducted civilians who were divided into groups: SBUs aged 9-13 years and WACs girls aged 11-12 years who were forced to be bush wives to the senior commanders); Alice Pyne, Transcript 17 June 2008, pp. 12051-12055 (Alice Pyne was taken with 100 other civilians to Dia training base between Manosewallu and Koindu where they were militarily trained for 3 months. The training commanders, CO Dugba and NPFL fighter Pele Boy, divided about 300 civilians into groups: 80 SBUs and SGUs aged 8-13 years, female and male adults).

<sup>5168</sup> TF1-567, Transcript 2 July 2008, pp. 12825-12826 (TF1-567 named Matthew and Jah Glory, two at the camp. TF1-567 also mentioned Monica Pearson, a Liberian, as part of the group of commanders at the camp at the time); Albert Saidu, Transcript 3 June 2008, pp. 10871-10872, 10874-10875 (Saidu spent three months training in military tactics by NPFL Special forces instructors CO Big Darling, CO Nyamator, CO Rebel Baby. In addition, Special force members in charge of training, CO Sam Tuah, Dopoe, and General Mustapha visited the trainees at the base); Alice Pyne, Transcript 17 June 2008, pp. 12048-12055 (Pyne testified that she was abducted by NPFL soldiers and trained by them at Dia training camp. NPFL CO Dugba was commander and Pele Boy deputised him).

<sup>5172</sup> Augustine Mallah, Transcript 12 November 2008, pp. 20062-20074 (Augustine Mallah was captured in 1991 at Soriegbema and taken to Gissiwulo, Pujehun District for training. There were more than 1,000 people aged from 10 to 22 years that were being trained by NPFL training instructors at Gissiwulo); Mustapha M. Mansaray, Transcript 4 March 2008, pp. 5213, 5223 (Mansaray was captured together with other civilians in April 1991 in Pujehun District by RUF and NPFL soldiers and taken to a training base at Gissiwulo where he stayed until June 1991. At the training base, more than 500 civilians aged between 14 and 45 years old received military training from an NPFL fighter called Bockarie (a.k.a. AB), CO Yagbawolo, an RUF vanguard, and the commander Chico Mayar); Perry Kamara, Transcript 4 February 2008, pp. 3025-3026 (Perry Kamara was captured around April 1991 at Zimmi and together with other civilians, men and women, was taken to the first training base at Gissiwulo in Pujehun District, where he received guerrilla training by NPFL soldiers for two months).

<sup>5173</sup> Issa Sesay, Transcript 5 July 2010, p. 43649 (Top 20 took place in March/April 1992. Top 40 refers to the time in May 1992 when the NPFL fighters arrested Sesay and others and took them to Kuiva); Alice Pyne, Transcript 17 June 2008, p. 12059 (Alice Pyne understood Top 20 to be the result of one NPFL commander killing another RUF commander. Foday Sankoh passed a command for the NPFL commander to be executed, which resulted in infighting); TF1-168, Transcript 21 January 2009, pp. 23205-23208 (CS) (Top 20 were infightings between NPFL and RUF during which NPFL fighters asserted themselves over the RUF Vandguards. NPFL fighters retaliated, killed, burned houses, etc. Civilians and Junior Commandos suffered the most during Operation Top 20); Fayia Musa, Transcript 13 April 2010, pp. 38897-38904 (Top 20 was a killing spree in February and March 1992 during which the Liberians killed anyone that was a Sierra Leonean. During Top 20, Isaac Mongor executed 30 civilians behind a house in the town of Sadiallum Luawa Chiefdom and earned the nickname Tombolo, meaning 'genocide' in Mende. During Top 20 Liberians would force elderly individuals to carry bags of coffee to Foya. If anyone resisted they would be killed. Many rapes took place during the Top 20 period, as well as acts of cannibalism); TF1-516, Transcript 9 April 2008, p. 6992 (Sam Tuah was an NPFL general. He was based in Pendembu. He organised a mission code named Top 20 in which fighters went on a rampage of murder and rape); DCT-292, Transcript 2 June 2010, pp. 41888-41893 (The first operation, Top 20, took place between February and March 1992 and consisted of the arrest of RUF members by NPFL like Peter Vandi, Sesay, Morris Kallon. Witness DCT-292 was arrested in a second operation Top 40, which took place in May 1992. Sankoh unsuccessfully attempted to prevent Kawie arresting RUF members during Top 40); Mohamed Kabbah, Transcript 15 September 2008, pp. 16239-16243 (During the period of Top 20, RUF recruits who escaped to Guinea were mutilated and killed there); Martin George, Transcript 22 April 2010, pp. 39684-39687 (George's group arrived in Kailahun on 1 January 1993. 2385. In the Trial Chamber's view, while it is established that NPFL soldiers committed atrocities in Sierra Leone after the invasion, the evidence fails to establish that these crimes were committed pursuant to an agreement between Taylor and Sankoh. To the contrary, the evidence regarding Sankoh's meeting with Taylor in May 1992, during which Sankoh expressed his concerns regarding crimes committed by the NPFL contradicts the Prosecution's allegation that Taylor and Sankoh had a common purpose to terrorize the civilian population in order to forcibly control the population and territory of Sierra Leone and to pillage its diamonds. If Sankoh and Taylor had agreed to terrorize the civilian population, Sankoh would not have been surprised by the atrocities committed by NPFL troops, let alone complained to Taylor about them.

2386. The Trial Chamber also recalls the evidence that initially, the ideology of the RUF was not to terrorise civilians and that, while in Camp Naama, the RUF recruits received training including basic Geneva Convention regulations on the treatment of civilians.<sup>5178</sup>

2388. In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds that crimes were committed by NPFL soldiers during and after the invasion of Sierra Leone in 1991. However, in the Trial Chamber's view, the evidence is insufficient for a finding that the Accused's support for the invasion of Sierra Leone was undertaken pursuant to a common purpose to terrorize the civilian population.

2389. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that in Voinjama in March 1991, the Accused, Foday Sankoh and Dr Manneh together with NPFL and RUF commanders held a meeting during which they planned and organised the invasion of Sierra Leone in accordance with the strategy hatched in Libya and Burkina Faso.

2390. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused supported the invasion of Sierra Leone.

2391. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that after the invasion, NPFL troops committed crimes against Sierra Leonean civilians.

2392. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the support of the Accused for the invasion of Sierra Leone was undertaken pursuant to a common purpose to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone.

5. Attack on Kono (November 1992 to January 1993)

Submissions of the Parties

2393. The Prosecution alleges that from the very inception of the conflict in Sierra Leone, diamonds were looted from Sierra Leonean civilian and commercial companies in Pujehun and Kailahun Districts and taken to the Accused. Foday Sankoh travelled from Sierra Leone to Gbarnga taking looted diamonds to the Accused and the Accused rewarded Sankoh with arms, ammunition and other supplies which Sankoh took back to Sierra Leone.<sup>5184</sup> The Prosecution further submits that by mid-1992, the Accused and Sankoh had formed a plan to capture Kono District because it was a diamondiferous area. Sankoh subsequently explained the plan to senior members of the RUF, including Sam Bockarie, Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon. Sankoh explained to them that they should capture Kono to get more diamonds so that they would be able to continue the war.<sup>5185</sup>

2394. The Prosecution also submits that by late 1992, the Accused directed Sankoh to capture the diamond mining area of Kono and supplied the arms and ammunition needed for the mission. Sankoh brought back the looted diamonds to the Accused in exchange for arms and ammunition to continue the RUF war effort.<sup>5186</sup>

2395. The Defence acknowledges that in the early years of the Sierra Leone conflict, although the RUF was not engaged in organized mining, it nevertheless had diamonds in its possession captured from civilians. The Defence submits that all these diamonds were “given to the RUF’s External Delegation for their sustenance in the Ivory Coast”.<sup>5187</sup> The Defence contends that nothing in the Prosecution’s evidence supports the assertion that the Accused directed Sankoh to capture Kono.<sup>5188</sup> Moreover, the Defence submits that evidence suggesting that the acquisition of diamonds might also have underlined the JCE directly contradicts other Prosecution evidence that Sankoh in fact discouraged diamond mining, especially in the early years of the war.<sup>5189</sup>

2396. Witness TF1-567 testified that he accompanied Sankoh on two occasions to Taylor’s mansion in Gbarnga, Liberia, in 1991 and 1992, crossing the Sierra Leonean-Liberian border and the NPFL checkpoints without any problem. During his first trip to Liberia in 1991, TF1-567 did not see Taylor personally but was informed by Sankoh that Taylor provided him with arms and ammunitions. TF1-567 and Sankoh came back from Gbarnga with a truck loaded with arms and ammunition.<sup>5190</sup>

2397. TF1-567 testified that during his second trip with Sankoh to Gbarnga, in 1992, Taylor provided the RUF with a truck loaded with food and other supplies. TF1-567 and Sankoh escorted the truck to Bomi Hills, where they met RUF soldiers Philip Palmer, Pa Moriba, Smiling P, and Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito), as well as their commander, the NPFL commander One Man One. There, Sankoh, One Man One and Philip Palmer held a

2398. After this meeting, TF1-567 and Sankoh returned to Gbarnga where Sankoh met Taylor again. During the meeting, Sankoh and Taylor agreed to attack Kono as a priority because Kono was a diamond mining area. In order to attack Kono, Taylor provided arms, ammunition and food to Sankoh, which were loaded onto a truck from Taylor's mansion. While they were at Taylor's mansion, TF1-567 saw Charles Taylor for the first time. TF1-567, Sankoh and Bockarie drove the truck back to Pendembu, Sierra Leone.<sup>5192</sup>

2400. By late 1992 Sankoh left Koidu Town, leaving TF1-567 there to supervise the distribution of rice and other materials to the RUF soldiers. TF1-567 heard from Bockarie that Sankoh had been summoned by Taylor to Gbarnga. Sankoh sent a message to Bockarie that Taylor had provided more arms and ammunition but that ULIMO had blocked the road back to Sierra Leone, between Voinjama and Kailahun. Bockarie told Sankoh not to worry, that he would get some men to go and clear the way to Kailahun.<sup>5195</sup> When Sankoh finally arrived in Kailahun, he asked Bockarie to come and meet him. TF1-567 joined Bockarie on his journey to Kailahun, during which they captured civilians along the way to carry items that the RUF had looted from civilians.<sup>5196</sup> When TF1-567 and Bockarie arrived in Kailahun, Sankoh called a meeting. During this meeting, Sankoh said that he had given some of the diamonds looted from Kono to Taylor, who in exchange provided him with more arms and ammunition including RPGs, GPMGs and AK rounds. These weapons were later distributed to the front lines.<sup>5197</sup>

Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara

2401. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF recruit, testified that in 1992, ULIMO attacked the RUF troops forcing them to retreat to Pujehun and to cross the border with Liberia. Kamara was among the RUF soldiers who crossed the border to take refuge in Kakata, Liberia.<sup>5198</sup> Kamara testified that in early November 1992, during the parade, Isaac Musa, one of Taylor's commanders, explained that Taylor had requested him to regroup all the RUF soldiers of Kakata and the surrounding villages in order to allow Foday Sankoh to collect them and bring them to Sierra Leone for "a very big mission".<sup>5199</sup> While Isaac Musa was conveying this message, Sankoh, Taylor, his commanders and bodyguards arrived at the parade in a convoy.<sup>5200</sup> Foday Sankoh requested the fighters to return to Sierra Leone and explained that Taylor gave him trucks, arms and ammunitions.<sup>5201</sup> Two hours later, trucks carrying arms and ammunitions covered with bags arrived. The RUF fighters then boarded the trucks and moved to Taylor's headquarters in Gbarnga.<sup>5202</sup> Kamara travelled with RUF members including Commander Rashid Mansaray and some Liberians. In the first instance, some men went to Libya, some to Pujehun District in Sierra Leone, and another group, which Kamara moved with, went to Kakata. The first group, to which Kamara belonged, moved to Kailahun and then was based in Pendembu.<sup>5203</sup>

2402. Kamara further testified that in late 1992, Sankoh summoned a meeting in which he told RUF soldiers that he had just returned from Liberia with ammunition and that during this trip, Charles Taylor told him to use the ammunition to attack Kono in order to acquire diamonds and money to buy more ammunition. Mohamed Tarawalli was appointed to lead the attack on Kono. During the attack, the RUF captured diamonds, which were used to purchase more weapons. Kamara testified that he personally saw diamonds in a big bottle and US Dollars that Mohamed Tarawalli brought from Kono after the attack.<sup>5204</sup>

2403. Witness TF1-168 was among the RUF soldiers in Pujehun District under the control of One Man One after the invasion of Sierra Leone. He testified that when the NPFL and RUF troops captured Pujehun District, diamonds were taken. The NPFL/RUF forces captured the mining company MMC, killed its manager and captured its diamonds. However, Sankoh did not want his soldiers to conduct mining operations since he considered that such operations could make soldiers forget about war.<sup>5205</sup>

2404. TF1-168 testified that in 1992, Sankoh informed him that he had taken the diamonds captured during the attack of Pujehun to his brother, Charles Taylor, in Gbarnga. On cross-examination TF1-168 stated that he did not know if Sankoh was telling him the truth.<sup>5206</sup>

2405. TF1-168 further testified that around August 1991, the RUF was pushed back to Liberia by ULIMO.<sup>5207</sup> Subsequently, TF1-168 moved to Bomi Hills where he stayed until the NPRC Coup in April 1992.<sup>5208</sup> In late April 1992, TF1-168 travelled to Gbarnga.<sup>5209</sup> The witness stated that during a meeting in Gbarnga around May/June 1992, Sankoh told his senior officers including TF1-168, Rashid Mansaray, Noah Kanneh and Pa Kallon that Taylor was reducing his support to Sankoh's RUF without any reason. TF1-168 considered that the fact that Sankoh was not bringing in precious minerals like diamonds for Taylor anymore was probably the explanation.<sup>5210</sup> In June 1992, after discussion with Taylor about crimes committed by NPFL soldiers in Sierra Leone, Sankoh left Liberia, taking with him arms and ammunition he obtained from Taylor.<sup>5211</sup>

2406. TF1-168 further stated that in October 1992, Sankoh returned to Gbarnga and told the RUF troops remaining in Gbarnga that his plan was to advance toward Kono District. However, he told the troops en route from Kailahun to wait until he was also on the ground in order to launch the attack. Sankoh used NPFL radios to convey messages to the RUF troops while he was mobile.<sup>5212</sup>

2407. TF1-168 testified that shortly after he left Gbarnga, he was arrested and detained on Sankoh's order for insubordination. Around October/November 1992, during TF1-168's detention, the RUF troops led by Sam Bockarie captured Kono, but lost it in late January 1993.<sup>5213</sup>

2408. TF1-168 testified that the RUF wanted to capture Kono District because it was one of the two roads to Freetown but also because Kono was a diamondiferous area.<sup>5214</sup> However, TF1-168 considered that between 1991 and 1996 diamonds did not really play any major role in the war because no organised mining was taking place. TF1-168 stated that it was Sankoh who, confronted with the lack of support of his allies, decided to use diamonds as a way of financing the purchase of weapons for the RUF struggle.<sup>5215</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-367

2409. Witness TF1-367, an RUF Vanguard, arrived in Koindu in the Kailahun District two days after the NPFL invaded Sierra Leone. TF1-367 spent 3 months there, after which he was sent by Sankoh to Gbarnga where he was appointed ground commander of Sankoh's house in Gbarnga.<sup>5216</sup>

2410. TF1-367 stated that while he was ground commander in Gbarnga he accompanied Sankoh on several occasions on trips from Gbarnga, Liberia to Sierra Leone, during which

Sankoh brought the arms, ammunitions and condiments provided by Taylor to RUF troops in Sierra Leone.<sup>5217</sup>

2411. TF1-367 stated that in 1992, the RUF captured Koidu Town, Kono District, and managed to keep control over it for approximately 3 months before being pushed back by ULIMO. The RUF re-captured Koidu Town in 1995 after TF1-367 was appointed as commander of this area.<sup>5218</sup>

2412. In a prior statement to the Prosecution read by Defence Counsel during TF1-367's cross-examination, TF1-367 had said that during all this period, RUF was not mining but seized diamonds and other precious minerals from civilians which were taken to Charles Taylor in Gbarnga. This was confirmed by the witness, TF1-367 himself escorted Sankoh from Sierra Leone to Taylor's residence in Gbarnga on a couple of occasions. The witness confirmed that he did not see the actual handover of diamonds from Sankoh to Taylor, but he stayed with Taylor's bodyguards while Sankoh and Taylor entered a room together in private.<sup>5219</sup>

2413. In this prior statement, TF1-367 stated that he attended a meeting during which Sankoh told Bockarie and Issa Sesay to continue to bring diamonds to Charles Taylor during his absence.<sup>5220</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

2414. Witness TF1-371, an RUF officer, testified that before 1996, the RUF did not conduct mining operations in the areas they conquered. TF1-371 heard from Sankoh that even when the RUF conquered Kono district in 1992/1993, they merely washed the gravel that the miners had already extracted to get diamonds without really mining. TF1-371 stated, however, that the NPFL commander of Bomi County, Oliver Varney, conducted mining operations at Zimmi border in 1991 when the RUF initially invaded Sierra Leone.<sup>5221</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2415. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie, an RUF radio operator, testified that during the 1992 rainy season, ULIMO captured Bomi Hills, forcing the RUF to retreat to the Liberian border. Fornie was assigned by Sankoh to Kakata, Liberia. While he was there, Fornie heard from Bockarie that Sankoh wanted the RUF soldiers present in the area to gather at the MP headquarters in Kakata. Two days later, Sankoh came in a convoy with Charles Taylor. The convoy was carrying various weapons including twin barrels. Sankoh alighted and spoke to the RUF soldiers briefly, informing them that trucks would come to collect them to bring them back to Sierra Leone. Fornie did not see Taylor because the door and the windows of the vehicle remained closed, but Bockarie told Fornie that Taylor was in the vehicle. Fornie testified that later a big three wiper [sic] Toyota truck was sent and brought around 70 RUF soldiers to Kailahun, Sierra Leone passing through Gbarnga.<sup>5222</sup>

Prosecution Witness Foday Lansana

2416. Witness Foday Lansana, a senior RUF radio operator, testified that in 1992, after the National Provisional Ruling Council (NPRC) overthrew the legitimate government of Sierra Leone led by Joseph Saidu Momoh, the NPRC called for a ceasefire with the RUF which was observed for a while. Later, however, the ceasefire was broken by the Guinean and Nigerian contingents of the NPRC. During the attacks, the RUF captured a large quantity of arms and ammunition.<sup>5223</sup>

2417. Foday Lansana testified that after the attack, Sankoh contacted Taylor over the radio and informed him that he had captured heavy artillery. Sankoh told Taylor that he could not use the artillery because he had no ammunition and that he would need light weapons. Taylor told Sankoh to come to Gbarnga with the artillery in his possession to exchange it for light weapons and ammunitions. Lansana stated that he was the radio operator for this conversation and that, as such, he heard the entire conversation.<sup>5224</sup>

2418. Foday Lansana further testified that, as a result of the conversation, Sankoh left Pendembu for Gbarnga. Around mid-1992, Sankoh returned to Pendembu with a large quantity of arms and ammunition. Upon Mr Sankoh's return, Mohamed Tarawalli , Sam

Bockarie, Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon were instructed to go to Koidu, Kono District in order to attack government troops and conquer the area because it was a diamond rich mining area. Lansana did not participate directly in the operation but was aware of the evolution of the operation when transmitting the radio reports sent by Mohamed Tarawalli to Sankoh. Lansana testified that the operation went smoothly but that the RUF was chased out of Koidu into Pendembu at the end of 1992.<sup>5225</sup>

Prosecution Witness Albert Saidu

2419. Witness Albert Saidu testified that Captain Ben, whom he knew because they had been captured together in Bunumbu and taken for training,<sup>5226</sup> came from Kono with diamonds sewn into his trousers in the belt area.<sup>5227</sup> Captain Ben showed the witness the place where the diamonds were sewn and told the witness that he was taking the diamonds to Foday Sankoh.<sup>5228</sup> Saidu testified that Captain Ben took the diamonds to Sankoh, and that he “felt” that Sankoh then took the diamonds to Charles Taylor.<sup>5229</sup> The witness clarified that he felt that way because “that’s where he used to go to bring ammunition for us to fight”.<sup>5230</sup> Captain Ben also told the witness about his travels to Liberia, and said that they used to bring back arms and ammunitions from Liberia for the revolution.<sup>5231</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-338

2420. Witness TF1-338 testified that Sankoh used to go to Taylor’s mansion in Gbarnga and return to Kailahun in Sierra Leone with arms and ammunition. TF1-338 himself travelled twice as a security accompanying Foday Sankoh to Taylor’s mansion in Gbarnga.<sup>5232</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2421. Expert witness Stephen Ellis testified that at the beginning, the Sierra Leonean conflict was primarily about political and social matters. However, in the late 1990s the control of diamonds became a key factor in the hostilities because participants were able to use the profits from diamonds to fuel the continuation of the war.<sup>5233</sup> According to Ellis, there were reports of RUF rebels smuggling diamonds from Sierra Leone to Liberia as early as 1991. The expert witness noted that the Sierra Leone TRC identified three phases of the Sierra Leonean war that is 1991-1994, 1994-1997, and the period after 1997. According to the witness, it was only during the latter period that the diamond trade expanded.<sup>5234</sup>

The Accused

2422. The Accused testified that from August 1991 until May 1992 he provided small amounts of arms and ammunition to Foday Sankoh and the RUF with the strategic purpose of having the RUF fight ULIMO in Sierra Leone, so he would not have to fight them in Liberia. ULIMO had been armed by the Sierra Leonean Government.<sup>5235</sup> The Accused stated that he only provided the RUF with ammunition and not big weapons; the NPFL did not have a strategic partnership with the RUF to enable the RUF to gain military power in Sierra Leone. The Accused explained that he deliberately under-supported Sankoh. As a result, in May 1992 Foday Sankoh wrote a letter expressing his disappointment, to which the Accused responded that he did the best he could do. After May 1992, the links between Sankoh and the Accused were severed and the Accused stopped providing arms and ammunition.<sup>5236</sup>

2423. The Accused also denied having discussed with Foday Sankoh the capture of Kono as alleged by the Witness TF1-567.<sup>5237</sup> The Accused recalled that there was no link between the NPFL and RUF after May 1992.<sup>5238</sup> The Accused denied receiving diamonds or anything from Foday Sankoh, Sam Bockarie or Issa Sesay.<sup>5239</sup> The Accused further denied that his motivation for stopping the provision of materiel to Sankoh was because he expected to receive diamonds.<sup>5240</sup>

2424. The Accused testified that he routinely visited Kakata. However, he did not recall any instances when the RUF was repelled by ULIMO and had to retreat to Kakata. In any event, there were no RUF soldiers in Liberia around November 1992 since the NPFL had split with the RUF at that time.<sup>5241</sup> He also denied Perry Kamara's testimony that he, Taylor, gave a message to Musa to collect all the RUF in Kakata and take them to Sierra Leone for a big mission.<sup>5242</sup>

2425. Witness Issa Sesay testified that after April 1992, when the NPFL left Sierra Leone, NPFL troops took their arms and ammunition with them. As a consequence, the RUF was short of weapons. In order to get arms and ammunition, the RUF set ambushes and traded with Guineans. This continued from 1992 until the RUF joined the AFRC in 1997.<sup>5243</sup>

2426. Issa Sesay further stated that Charles Taylor did not provide any weapons to the RUF after he withdrew his troops in April 1992. There was no communication between Sankoh and Taylor during this time. Sesay would have known if this were the case since he was based in Kailahun from 1991 to 1997.<sup>5244</sup>

2427. Issa Sesay denied that the RUF sent to Taylor the artillery it had captured, as recounted by Foday Lansana. Sesay testified that the artillery captured was used by the RUF.<sup>5245</sup> Sesay submitted that he was in a better position to know since he was on the front lines while Foday Lansana was not.<sup>5246</sup>

2428. Witness Sam Kolleh, an RUF Vanguard, testified that around August/September 1991, the government troops and ULIMO attacked the RUF troops, forcing them to retreat to the border between Sierra Leone and Liberia and to take refuge in the bush, where they created “jungles”.<sup>5247</sup>

2429. Kolleh stated that, while he was in the bush, Sankoh assigned him to be a transporter. As such, Kolleh transported letters from the different RUF Jungles to Sankoh’s headquarters in Zogoda.<sup>5248</sup> On three occasions between 1994 and 1995, Sankoh also asked Kolleh to transport diamonds to Issa Sesay. Kolleh testified that the diamonds were captured during ambushes. After Kolleh took the diamonds to Kailahun to Issa Sesay, Kolleh and Sesay moved to the Guinean border where they gave the diamonds to members of the External Delegation Fayia Musa, Deen-Jalloh and Philip Palmer. Kolleh never transported any diamonds to Liberia, and he did not know whether the RUF provided Taylor with diamonds.<sup>5249</sup>

Defence Witness Martin George

2430. Witness Martin George testified that in late 1992 or early 1993, Sankoh ordered Sam Bockarie to launch an attack on Kono to capture the diamond mining area from Momoh’s soldiers because it was the government stronghold and a place which could support the RUF.<sup>5250</sup> George stated that when the Kono attack was successful, the RUF began looking for diamonds. They did not dig mines but rather instructed civilians to wash gravel to find diamonds. When diamonds were found, the mining commander gave them to Foday Sankoh, who was also in Kono. The witness was not there himself and did not know what Foday Sankoh did with the diamonds.<sup>5251</sup>

was bad.<sup>5252</sup> After Top Final, Sankoh never returned to Liberia; he was disappointed by Charles Taylor, who had promised to provide him support but failed to do so. Sankoh made it clear that from that point the RUF should rely on its own resources to run the campaign.<sup>5253</sup>

2432. Fayia Musa testified that, in late 1992 and early 1993, things were becoming really difficult for the RUF; the RUF forces had been pushed into the Kissi Teng chiefdom while the rest of the country had been recaptured by government troops. The RUF was surrounded.<sup>5254</sup> Fayia Musa stated that Sam Bockarie used his military creativity and a trick called 'Porosound' in order to make the government soldiers believe that they were surrounded and being attacked by a large number of RUF soldiers. The ploy worked and the government soldiers retreated to Pendembu, leaving behind guns and ammunition.<sup>5255</sup>

2434. Fayia Musa stated that between 1991 and March 1996 the RUF did not engage in diamond mining. Indeed, from the first day the RUF captured Kono, Sankoh prohibited the mining. Nevertheless, the government forces did not let the RUF stay in Kono long enough to engage in mining. However, Fayia Musa testified that diamonds abandoned by the miners of Kono were captured by the RUF.<sup>5257</sup> Fayia stated that the diamonds captured during the attack on Kono were taken to Sankoh in Kailahun, where he kept them until he left to start the peace process in Abidjan. The diamonds were then given to Ms. Isatu Kallon, an RUF procurement officer.<sup>5258</sup>

2435. Witness Charles Ngebeh, an RUF recruit, testified that in 1992 Captain Strasser and his NPRC forces overthrew the APC government. Strasser announced that he would not negotiate with the RUF and that he would push them out of the country.<sup>5259</sup> Shortly after this announcement, Sam Bockarie attacked Gandorhun. During the attack, the RUF captured a lot of ammunition, as well as two grenade launchers.<sup>5260</sup> Ngebeh also stated that in June or July 1992, on his way to attack Kono, Sam Bockarie's troops captured a war tank with ammunition from the NPRC that enabled the RUF to capture Kono. Ngebeh denied that the RUF received any materials from Liberia and testified that the struggle was entirely self-reliant.<sup>5261</sup>

Defence Witness DCT-025

2436. Witness DCT-025, an RUF soldier in charge of stores of supplies and weaponry,<sup>5262</sup> testified that Foday Sankoh did not leave Sierra Leone in 1992. At times Sankoh went to Pendembu or Mobai, but he always returned to Kailahun afterwards. DCT-025 never heard of Sankoh going to Gbarnga to see Taylor during this period and bringing back food, arms and ammunition. Similarly, DCT-025 was not aware of the RUF mining for diamonds and had not seen Sankoh with diamonds during this period.<sup>5263</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-018

2437. Exhibit P-018 is the Report of the Panel of Experts established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1306. Paragraph 67 of the Report states as follows:

The Revolutionary United Front initiated the war in 1991. Until 1995, RUF diamond mining and digging was probably done on a sporadic and individual basis. By 1995, however, the RUF and its patrons were clearly taking a much greater interest in the diamond fields of Kono District, and had to be removed forcefully at that time by the private military company, Executive Outcomes. From then on, the RUF interest in diamonds became more focused, especially with the 1997 imprisonment of Foday Sankoh in Nigeria. During his imprisonment and subsequently, the diamond areas of Kono and Tongo Field became a primary military focus of the RUF, and diamond mining became a major fund-raising exercise.<sup>5264</sup>

2438. Exhibit P-065 is a letter from RUF leader Foday Sankoh to Charles Taylor, dated 5 May 1992. In the letter Foday Sankoh thanked Charles Taylor for his offer of boxes of AK-47 ammunition and ten boxes of RPG rockets but states that what was offered was not enough to carry out "Operation Capture Daru". In the letter, Sankoh asked Taylor to increase the amount to 20 boxes of AK-47 ammunition and 12 RPG rockets plus some Beretta rounds and stated that this would sustain the RUF "while awaiting the long term supply that you have promised us".<sup>5265</sup>

2439. Exhibit P-497 is Volume Two of the Report of the Sierra Leone Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Paragraph 130 of Volume Two of the Report states:

The RUF was responsible for the first sustained assault on Koidu Town, Kono District, from October 1992 until February 1993. This assault resulted in a spate of violations against local residents including the killing of Chiefs, government officials, businesspersons and members of the Lebanese community.<sup>5266</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-498

2440. Exhibit P-498 is Volume Three of the Report of the Sierra Leone Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Paragraph 49 of Volume Three of the Report states:

The Commission's research demonstrates that the RUF could not have earned all the money attributed to it in official reports from conflict diamonds alone. Except for a brief period in 1992 when the RUF occupied Koidu, the headquarters of the diamond-rich Kono District, it did not have access to the major diamond-producing areas of the country until 1995, when it occupied Koidu again for four months before being driven out by Executive Outcomes. RUF's diamond pickings in those areas could not have constituted the colossal amounts reflected in the literature. Figure 1 shows that, except in 1986, Belgian imports of diamonds from Liberia have always outstripped those from Sierra Leone. Yet Liberia is not reputed to have substantial diamond deposits and does not have gemstone-quality diamonds. The conclusion to be drawn from the above tables and Figure 1 is that diamond smuggling within the axis of Guinea, Sierra Leone, Liberia and Côte d'Ivoire has been going on for more than 30 years, with Liberia being the principal conduit. This would suggest that those involved in diamond smuggling had developed networks and contacts in Liberia, which facilitated their smuggling and export of diamonds from within the region. Even in 1990, before the war in Sierra Leone started, Liberia exported more than 5 million carats of diamonds.<sup>5267</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-123G

2441. Exhibit D-123G is a photo of a long-range artillery gun which was given to the NPFL by Foday Sankoh. It came from Sierra Leone in late 1991 or early 1992.<sup>5268</sup> Taylor testified that this gun was donated to him by the RUF. The picture was taken during its delivery.<sup>5269</sup>

Deliberations

2442. It is undisputed that after June 1991 the Accused provided the RUF with arms and ammunition.<sup>5270</sup> However, while the Defence submits that the cooperation between the NPFL and the RUF stopped entirely after the withdrawal of NPFL forces from Sierra Leone around May/June 1992,<sup>5271</sup> the Prosecution contends that even after the withdrawal the Accused continued to provide the RUF with materiel in exchange for diamonds. The Prosecution submits that by mid-1992 the lull in the supply of diamonds from the RUF to the Accused corresponded to the diminution of materiel from the Accused to the RUF.<sup>5272</sup>

2443. In this context the Prosecution, relying on the testimony of TF1-567, alleges that during a meeting in Gbarnga in November 1992, the Accused and Sankoh formed a plan to attack Kono in order to get diamonds.<sup>5273</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that the Prosecution also alleges that the Accused directed Foday Sankoh to capture Kono District.<sup>5274</sup>

2444. The Trial Chamber will first assess the evidence regarding an alleged provision of diamonds in exchange of arms and ammunition, before turning to the evidence regarding the Accused's alleged involvement and support in the attack on Kono in late 1992.

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIODProvision of diamonds in exchange of arms and ammunition in 1991-1992*

2445. Evidence from both Prosecution and Defence witnesses shows that during the invasion of Sierra Leone, RUF soldiers captured diamonds from civilians and companies.<sup>5275</sup>

TF1-367 testified that he accompanied Foday Sankoh on several trips from Gbarnga, Liberia, to Sierra Leone, in which Sankoh brought arms, ammunition, and condiments provided by Taylor to RUF troops in Sierra Leone.<sup>5276</sup> In a prior statement to the Prosecution, affirmed in his testimony under cross-examination, TF1-367 said that diamonds seized from civilians were taken by Sankoh to Taylor in Gbarnga and that the witness himself escorted Sankoh on a couple of these trips.<sup>5277</sup>

2446. With regard to TF1-367's general credibility, the Trial Chamber notes that he provided generally clear and comprehensive evidence. The Trial Chamber does not consider the witness's apparent confusion as to the date he became mining commander in Kono<sup>5278</sup> to be detrimental to his overall credibility. Under cross-examination, TF1-367's testimony remained consistent although the Defence raised a number of inconsistencies with his prior statements. In that regard, the witness openly admitted that large parts of his first statement to the Prosecution were untrue<sup>5279</sup> but the Trial Chamber accepts his explanation that he was

motivated to lie by fear of arrest by the Special Court.<sup>5280</sup> The Trial Chamber finds the remaining inconsistencies to be generally minor<sup>5281</sup> and is largely satisfied by the explanations TF1-367 provided, particularly in view of the consistency with which the witness maintained his in-Court testimony. The Trial Chamber therefore finds TF1-367 to be generally credible and will consider further issues relating to his credibility in context as they may arise.

2447. While TF1-367 was the only witness who testified that he was with Sankoh when Sankoh took diamonds to the Accused during this period, the Trial Chamber notes that his evidence is corroborated by Witnesses TF1-168 and TF1-567, both of whom testified that Sankoh told them that diamonds were brought to the Accused.<sup>5282</sup> TF1-168 stated that he was unable to tell if Sankoh was telling the truth.<sup>5283</sup> TF1-567 testified that he saw Bockarie give Sankoh plenty of diamonds captured from civilians<sup>5284</sup> and that at a meeting called by Sankoh, Sankoh said that he had given some of the diamonds looted from Kono to the Accused in exchange for arms and ammunition.<sup>5285</sup>

2448. On the basis of this evidence, the Trial Chamber concludes that Sankoh gave diamonds to the Accused. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that the evidence does not conclusively establish that these diamonds were given to the Accused in payment for arms and ammunition. In his letter to Taylor, dated 5 May 1992, Foday Sankoh did not mention any kind of payment – including diamonds- in exchange for the support he was seeking from the Accused.<sup>5286</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls also that significant evidence has been adduced showing that the Accused's main reason to support the RUF during the early years of the

<sup>5280</sup> TF1-367, Transcript 28 August 2008, pp. 14879-14884. See also TF1-367, Transcript 21 August 2008, p. 14276: the witness explained that after Issa Sesay et al. had been arrested, there were rumours that anybody who had been in the RUF would be arrested.

<sup>5281</sup> See for example TF1-367, Transcript 1 September 2008, pp. 15025-15029 regarding whether, as recorded in his prior statement, TF1-367 travelled to Monrovia with Bockarie two or three times or, as he testified, TF1-367 went to Liberia two or three times but to Monrovia only once.

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

Sierra Leonean war was his desire to avoid fighting ULIMO in Liberia.<sup>5287</sup> Moreover, TF1-168 testified that between 1991 and 1996 diamonds did not play a major role in the Sierra Leonean war.<sup>5288</sup> 2449. In the Trial Chamber's view the evidence adduced, and in particular the alternative explanation for the Accused's support to the RUF, in the interest of fighting ULIMO, suggests that during the early years of the invasion the provision of materiel by the Accused to the RUF was not necessarily in exchange for diamonds, although the delivery of diamonds to the Accused may have been one consideration among others.

The Accused's alleged involvement and support in the attack of Kono in late 1992

2450. TF1-567's testimony that at a meeting Sankoh and Taylor agreed to attack Kono because Kono was a diamond mining area<sup>5289</sup> is corroborated in part by Perry Kamara. The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that both TF1-567 and Kamara are generally credible witnesses.<sup>5290</sup> Kamara testified that in early November 1992, during a parade in Kakata, Liberia, he saw Sankoh, Taylor, his commanders and bodyguards arriving in a convoy.<sup>5291</sup> Sankoh said that Taylor had given him trucks, arms and ammunition<sup>5292</sup> and after bringing back these materials to Sierra Leone, Sankoh called a meeting of RUF soldiers at which he said that Charles Taylor had told him to attack Kono in order to acquire diamonds and money to buy more ammunition. TF1-567 testified that Bockarie was appointed to lead the attack on Kono, while Kamara testified that Mohamed Tarawalli was appointed to lead the attack,<sup>5293</sup> but apart from this detail, the witnesses corroborate each other on the fact that around November 1992, in Gbarnga, Taylor provided Sankoh with arms and ammunitions to attack Kono.

2451. TF1-567's account is further corroborated by Dauda Aruna Fornie who testified that while he was in Kakata, Sankoh told the RUF soldiers that trucks loaded with ammunitions would come to collect them to bring them back to Sierra Leone. While Kamara saw Taylor, Fornie testified that he did not see Taylor because the door and the windows of the vehicle remained closed, but he said Bockarie informed him that Taylor was inside the vehicle.<sup>5294</sup>

2452. Foday Lansana also corroborates the account of these witnesses in his testimony that Sankoh returned from Gbarnga to Pendembu with a large quantity of arms and ammunition and that upon his return, Mohamed Tarawalli, Sam Bockarie, Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon were instructed to go to Koidu, Kono District in order to attack government troops and conquer the area because it was a diamond rich mining area.<sup>5295</sup> While Lansana placed this event in mid-1992 his account corresponds in all other respects to the other witnesses' testimony and the Trial Chamber therefore accepts this evidence.

2453. In light of the evidence, the Trial Chamber does not accept the blanket denials of the Accused<sup>5296</sup> and of Issa Sesay that there were no links between the NPFL and RUF after May 1992 or the blanket denial, made also by Charles Ngebeh,<sup>5297</sup> that no materiel was sent to the RUF after this time. Moreover, the Trial Chamber does not find credible the Accused's denial of having received diamonds from Sankoh. Defence Witness Sam Kolley testified that he did not know whether the RUF provided Taylor with diamonds. Defence Witness Martin George testified that diamonds found after the successful attack on Kono were given to Sankoh, and he said he did not know what Sankoh did with the diamonds.<sup>5298</sup>

Fayia Musa's testimony that diamonds from Kono were given by Sankoh to Isatu Kallon does not, in the Trial Chamber's view, negate the possibility that diamonds were also given by Sankoh to the Accused. In the Trial Chamber's view, the testimony of these Defence witnesses does not raise any doubt that the Accused was involved in the attack of Kono by providing arms and ammunitions to Sankoh.

2454. Finally, regarding the Accused's involvement in the decision to attack Kono, the Trial Chamber notes that TF1-567 testified that Sankoh and Taylor had agreed or "arranged" to capture Kono<sup>5299</sup> while Perry Kamara testified that Taylor told Sankoh to capture Kono.<sup>5300</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls that none of the witnesses was present during Sankoh's meeting with Taylor. As their testimonies are unclear and inconsistent on Taylor's exact role in the decision to attack Kono, the Trial Chamber is unable to determine what this role was. The Trial Chamber further notes that TF1-168 testified that around October 1992, Sankoh went to Gbarnga in order to explain to the RUF troops remaining in Gbarnga that his plan was to advance towards Kono District.<sup>5301</sup> This testimony of TF1-168 therefore suggests that the plan to attack Kono was made before Sankoh's trip to Gbarnga.

2455. The Trial Chamber considers that it has insufficient evidence to determine when and where the decision was made to attack Kono. It can only be concluded on the basis of the evidence adduced that the Accused and Sankoh discussed the decision to attack Kono, not that Taylor ordered it or planned it with Sankoh.

<sup>5299</sup> TF1-567, Transcript 2 July 2008, p. 12854 ("Well he told him that he and his brother had arranged that this was the time that they were to capture Kono, because Kono was a diamond mining area and that they should try and capture there. Later Charles Taylor gave the arms and ammunition. Q. And what type of arms and ammunition -- JUDGE LUSSICK: Well I am sorry to interrupt, but it is just that I don't understand that last answer. The answer was "Well, he told him that he and his brother..." It looks as though there is a third person in there somewhere. MS HOLLIS: Thank you, your Honour, I will clarify that: Q. Mr Witness, you said that Foday Sankoh went to his brother Charles Taylor and "... he told him that he and his brother had arranged that was the time that they were to capture Kono". Now when you say, "... he told him that he and his brother had arranged ...", who told whom? A. Well he was trying to talk to us that he and his brother, he and Charles Taylor, have arranged that Charles Taylor was to help with arms and ammunition to go and capture Kono because Kono had diamonds. Q. Just to be absolutely clear, when you say, "He and Charles Taylor", who is the "he"? A. Foday Sankoh").

<sup>5300</sup> Perry Kamara, Transcript 4 February 2008, p. 3046 ("The RUF leadership summoned a meeting and that was Foday Sankoh. He said he [was] just returning back from Mr Taylor and now he said he is there to organise us so that we will use this ammunition to attack Kono so that we will be able to get diamonds and money that will help us to get more ammunition. That was what he said Taylor told him. So he sent Mohamed Tarawalli on that particular mission. Luckily for Mohamed Tarawalli he succeeded").

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2456. Finally, turning to the motivation behind the Kono attack, the Trial Chamber heard substantial evidence establishing that the presence of diamonds was indisputably one motivation behind the attack.<sup>5302</sup> However this was not the only motivation. For example, TF1-168 testified that the RUF wanted to capture Kono District because it was a diamondiferous area but also because it was a strategic road to Freetown.<sup>5303</sup> Furthermore, the evidence on record shows that while in control of Kono, the RUF did not try to start mining operations.<sup>5304</sup> Expert witness Stephen Ellis testified that it was only during the later 1990s that diamonds became a key factor in the hostilities. In the Trial Chamber's view, this failure to start mining operations suggests that the acquisition of diamonds was not the primary purpose of the attack on Kono, although it notes the evidence that diamonds were seized from civilians when Kono was captured.<sup>5305</sup>

Findings

2457. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that, around November 1992, the Accused provided Sankoh with arms and ammunition for an attack on Kono.

2458. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that during this time the Accused received diamonds from Sankoh.

2459. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that in 1992 the Accused and Sankoh formed a common plan to capture Kono, or that the Accused directed Sankoh to capture Kono, because it was a diamondiferous area.

6. Alleged RUF Assistance to Fight ULIMO in LiberiaSubmissions of the Parties

2460. The Prosecution alleges that throughout the conflicts in Liberia and Sierra Leone, Taylor made free use of his proxy force, the RUF. Specifically, the Prosecution submits that in 1993, at Taylor's direction, Sankoh sent RUF personnel under the command of Morris

Kallon to Liberia to fight with Taylor's NPFL against ULIMO. Kallon was tasked to open the way to Gbarnga and get materiel from Taylor. The attempt was unsuccessful and Kallon returned to Sierra Leone from Liberia in about 1994 via Guinea, without arms or ammunition.<sup>5306</sup>

2461. The Defence concedes to a mutual pact between Taylor and Sankoh to neutralise ULIMO.<sup>5307</sup> It submits however that this cooperation stopped after Operation Top Final and the withdrawal of NPFL forces from Sierra Leone.<sup>5308</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Perry Kamara

2462. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>5309</sup> testified that in 1993 the RUF supply route was blocked by ULIMO. Taylor asked Sankoh to send a group in order to fight ULIMO there. Accordingly, Mr Kallon led a group to Liberia and attacked ULIMO positions in order to enable the RUF to access supply routes to Taylor's headquarters.<sup>5310</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-567

2463. Witness TF1-567, an RUF member,<sup>5311</sup> testified that in 1993, ULIMO captured the areas of Kailahun, Foya, and Voinjama, blocking the routes of the RUF to Liberia. TF1-567 testified that during a meeting Sankoh explained that Charles Taylor suggested to him that he should send some soldiers from Sierra Leone in order to get more arms and ammunition. Accordingly, Foday Sankoh selected some RUF Liberian soldiers, including Morris Kallon, and asked them to go to Liberia. Morris Kallon and his men left but never managed to pass through the border. The border was closed until 1998, cutting off the road of communications between the RUF and NPFL.<sup>5312</sup>

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

2464. Witness Isaac Mongor, an RUF Commander,<sup>5313</sup> testified that around 1993, ULIMO occupied Voinjama in Liberia. Sankoh called Mongor and told him that Taylor asked him to send RUF troops in order to repel ULIMO troops from Voinjama. Mongor left for Voinjama and fought together with NPFL troops. Together the NPFL and RUF managed to capture Voinjama from ULIMO.<sup>5314</sup>

2465. Mongor testified that while he was fighting in Voinjama, Kallon and his men, together with NPFL troops, also fought ULIMO but could not dislodge them. Kallon planned to take a bypass to go to Gbarnga, but all his men were killed. Morris Kallon was the only one who survived that attack.<sup>5315</sup>

2466. Witness TF1-168, an RUF officer,<sup>5316</sup> testified that by January/February 1993 ULIMO had spread into Lofa County in Liberia, threatening the supply route to Gbarnga. TF1-168 said that Sankoh informed him that the RUF received a message to send RUF troops to Mendekoma going towards Voinjama, in order to help NPFL troops to stop ULIMO from closing the route to Gbarnga. Most of the Liberian vanguards volunteered to go on that mission under the command of Morris Kallon. TF1-168 testified that the mission failed and the supply route to Gbarnga was completely cut off. None of the men except Morris Kallon returned.<sup>5317</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2467. Witness Albert Saidu, an RUF adjutant from 1991 to 2001,<sup>5318</sup> testified that before April 1992, the border between Liberia and Sierra Leone was still open. However, after the NPRC led by Strasser King overthrew Momoh's government, ULIMO intensified their attacks and the RUF lost Kono and were pushed back to the Koindu border, cutting the supply road between Sierra Leone and Liberia.<sup>5319</sup>

2468. Albert Saidu testified that before the border was cut off, Morris Kallon entered Liberia with RUF soldiers to bring back ammunition, but he was still in Liberia when ULIMO took over the border. Around 1993, Morris Kallon and his men, together with NPFL soldiers, tried to open the border but failed to do so. Albert Saidu testified that RUF lost fighters during the fight but that Morris Kallon managed later on to reach the RUF territory, passing through Guinea.<sup>5320</sup>

Prosecution Witness Jabaty Jaward

2469. Witness Jabaty Jaward, an RUF soldier based in Pendembu,<sup>5321</sup> testified that after the invasion of Sierra Leone, RUF arms and ammunition and food supplies were coming from the NPFL territory in Liberia. Jaward used to see Foday Sankoh passing through Pendembu from Gbarnga in trucks loaded with arms and ammunition.<sup>5322</sup>

2470. Jaward stated that in 1993, ULIMO conquered the border between Sierra Leone and Liberia, cutting off the RUF supply route from Liberia. Before the border was completely closed in November 1993, Sankoh sent a group of fighters led by Morris Kallon across the border to go to Gbarnga for arms and ammunition, during which time they were cut off. Jaward testified that the group was not able to come back to Sierra Leone and that Morris Kallon had to pass through Guinea in order to come back to RUF territory.<sup>5323</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2471. Witness TF1-516, an RUF member,<sup>5324</sup> testified that while he was at a muster parade in Buedu, in early 1993, Sankoh informed the RUF that ULIMO had captured Voinjama, Kolahun and Foya, cutting off the RUF from the NPFL. Sankoh asked Morris Kallon to go to Gbarnga in order to get materials and gave him a good number of RUF fighters for this mission. The RUF fighters crossed into Liberia and manoeuvred on to Gbarnga. When Morris Kallon and those men arrived, a radio message was sent to Sankoh explaining that the RUF fighters, led by Morris Kallon, arrived in Gbarnga, though they had met some obstacles on the way. Kallon only came back after the AFRC coup in 1997.<sup>5325</sup>

The Accused

2472. The Accused testified that between August 1991 and May 1992, he provided minimal assistance to Sankoh by sending small amounts of ammunition from time to time.<sup>5326</sup> However, after 1992 and Operation Top Final, the Accused cut off all links with the RUF and gave them no assistance.<sup>5327</sup> Moreover, ULIMO had closed the entire border between Liberia and Sierra Leone around August 1992.<sup>5328</sup>

Defence Witness Charles Ngebeh

2473. Witness Charles Ngebeh, an RUF soldier,<sup>5329</sup> testified that in 1994 Morris Kallon was in Liberia. Ngebeh did not know whether Sankoh sent Kallon to Liberia to assist the NPFL but testified that Kallon came back from Liberia to Sierra Leone, passing through Guinea.<sup>5330</sup>

Deliberations

2474. It is undisputed that after Operation Top Final and the withdrawal of NPFL forces from Sierra Leone,<sup>5331</sup> ULIMO and Sierra Leonean government troops intensified their attacks against the RUF, cutting off the border between Liberia and Sierra Leone and preventing the RUF from getting any supplies from Liberia.<sup>5332</sup>

2475. In that context the Prosecution alleges that in 1993, in an unsuccessful attempt to keep the supply lines open and at the Accused's direction Sankoh sent RUF personnel under the command of Morris Kallon to Liberia to fight with the Accused's NPFL against ULIMO. The Prosecution further submits that Kallon was tasked to open the way to Gbarnga and get materiel from the Accused but that Kallon returned to Sierra Leone from Liberia in about 1994 via Guinea, without arms or ammunition.<sup>5333</sup> While the Defence concedes to a mutual pact between the Accused and Sankoh to neutralise ULIMO, it denies that this was pursuant to any Joint Criminal Enterprise and submits that this cooperation ended after Operation Top Final around June 1992.<sup>5334</sup>

2476. The evidence establishes that in 1993, Sankoh sent a group of RUF fighters led by Morris Kallon to Liberia in order to open the border controlled by ULIMO and to purchase arms and ammunition.<sup>5335</sup> The mission failed and most of the border was cut off.<sup>5336</sup> Morris Kallon survived and came back later to Sierra Leone, passing through Guinea.<sup>5337</sup> The question for the Trial Chamber is whether the Accused requested Sankoh's assistance to open the border controlled by ULIMO.

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2477. Witnesses Perry Kamara and TF1-567 testified that Sankoh sent Kallon and his men at Taylor's direction. Similarly, Isaac Mongor testified that at the same period, Sankoh sent him to fight ULIMO, saying that this was at Taylor's request. TF1-168 testified that Sankoh told him that he had received a message asking him to send troops in order to help NPFL troops to stop ULIMO from closing the route to Gbarnga, although TF1-168 did not specifically mention the Accused.<sup>5338</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Kamara, TF1-567, Mongor and TF1-168 are all generally credible witnesses.<sup>5339</sup>

2478. TF1-567 and Mongor testified that it was Sankoh who informed them that Taylor requested the RUF's assistance to fight ULIMO in the border area.<sup>5340</sup> Kamara did not explain how he obtained this information.<sup>5341</sup>

2480. In the light of the foregoing evidence, and particularly the testimonies of Perry Kamara, TF1-567 and Isaac Mongor, who all specifically mentioned the Accused, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that Sankoh sent RUF forces to Liberia at the request of the Accused.

In 1993 when our supply route was blocked by ULIMO Mr Kallon had to send - I am sorry, Mr Kallon had to lead a group to go and fight in Liberia. It was a request from Mr Taylor to Sankoh at that time. That was the first group I can remember went to Liberia. They were the ones who went and formed - I mean they attacked ULIMO positions so that we could get supply routes to Mr Taylor's headquarters").

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIODFindings

2481. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in 1993, following a request from the Accused, Sankoh sent RUF personnel under the command of Morris Kallon to Liberia to fight with the NPFL against ULIMO.

7. Alleged Supply of Materiel to the RUF from Guinea during ULIMO OccupationSubmissions of the Parties

2482. The Prosecution submits that at the end of 1993/beginning of 1994, the border area between Liberia and Sierra Leone was controlled by ULIMO. Such severe restriction of access to the border areas effectively cut off the direct supply lines from Taylor in Liberia to the fighters in Sierra Leone. However, Taylor devised other means of delivering materiel to his surrogate force there, the RUF. He instructed Joseph (“Zigzag”) Marzah to establish a relationship with persons in Guinea in order to take materiel into Guinea for the RUF. To that end, Taylor provided Marzah with a vehicle and the “start up” money to establish the relationship. In this way, Marzah was able to transport ammunition into Guinea and hand it over to one of Taylor’s Special Forces, Tiagan Wantee, who was at that time Taylor’s “ambassador to Guinea” for onward transit to Sierra Leone. This was a similar method to that established with Isatu Kallon when she went to Guinea from Taylor’s controlled territory in Liberia by way of the NPFL stronghold in Danané, Côte d’Ivoire. Just as he did with Marzah, no doubt Taylor gave this trader the “start up” money and other assistance to secure a trading alliance with Guineans in Guinea. From that alliance she was able to purchase or barter for ammunition which she then provided to the RUF. In this way Taylor was able to indirectly provide some amount of materiel to his proxy force in Sierra Leone at a time when the direct overland route was not completely open to him.<sup>5342</sup>

2483. The Defence challenges Marzah’s general credibility<sup>5343</sup> and submits that the allegation is characterized by hyperbole, duplicity and made purely by assumption.<sup>5344</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIODProsecution Witness Joseph Marzah

2484. Witness Joseph (“Zigzag”) Marzah, an NPFL soldier,<sup>5345</sup> testified that after 1991, ULIMO occupied Lofa County in Liberia blocking the supply road between Liberia and Sierra Leone.<sup>5346</sup> As a result, Taylor instructed Marzah to “penetrate through” with arms and ammunition. Taylor gave Marzah $USD 1,600 and a Nissan pickup. Marzah pretended to be a businessman selling kola nuts and established relationships with a couple of Guinean customs officers who, after being given a balawala bag of kola nuts, assisted him in transporting the kola nuts bags as far as Kissidugu. Marzah testified that ammunition from Charles Taylor, like rockets, was hidden in the bags. In Kissidugu, Tiagen Wantee and a Mandigo friend collected the kola nuts bags and brought them to the Liberian Embassy in Conakry.<sup>5347</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

2485. Witness TF1-168, an RUF officer, was with Sankoh in the RUF headquarters until the end of 1994. TF1-168 testified that from 1993 until December 1994, the only source of weapons were those captured from the enemy. TF1-168 further stated that the RUF was not receiving arms from Guinea since it was not controlling the Kailahun area but had retreated to the jungle of Zogoda.<sup>5348</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIODThe Accused

2488. The Accused denied having given any instruction to Marzah to transport materials through Guinea. He admitted to having an ambassador named Tiagen Wantee in Guinea but only after late 1997, when he was elected President of Liberia.<sup>5351</sup>

Deliberations

2489. It is undisputed that around 1993, ULIMO took control of Lofa County in Liberia, cutting off the supply road between Liberia and Sierra Leone.<sup>5352</sup>

2490. The Prosecution, relying on Joseph Marzah's testimony, alleges that in 1994 the Accused instructed Marzah to establish a relationship with persons in Guinea in order to take materiel into Guinea for the RUF.<sup>5353</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Marzah's testimony, particularly as it relates to his personal interaction and communication with the Accused, must be considered with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>5354</sup>

2491. Marzah did not provide any specific dates for his alleged trips to Guinea. However, he testified that he made his trips to Guinea while ULIMO occupied Lofa County in Liberia.<sup>5355</sup> No other witness corroborated Marzah's account that while the supply road between Liberia and Sierra Leone was blocked by ULIMO, Taylor devised another means of delivering materiel to the RUF. To the contrary, TF1-168, an RUF officer who was with Sankoh at the RUF headquarters until the end of 1994, testified that the only source of weapons for the RUF were those captured from the enemy. TF1-168 further stated specifically that the RUF was not receiving arms from Guinea.<sup>5356</sup> In the Trial Chamber's view, this testimony from a well informed RUF officer, casts further doubt on Marzah's uncorroborated testimony.

2492. In light of the evidence of TF1-168, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be generally credible,<sup>5357</sup> and its general reservations regarding Marzah's evidence, which is

Findings

2493. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused instructed Joseph (“Zigzag”) Marzah to establish a relationship with persons in Guinea in order to take materiel into Guinea for the RUF.

8. Sierra RutileSubmissions of the Parties

2494. The Prosecution submits that Taylor advised Sankoh to attack a major place and terrorise the area, starting with the civilians, including white employees, in order to raise the concern of the international community and to force the government and international community to agree to a peace deal. Following this advice, Sankoh’s troops left burned villages and dead civilians in their wake as they moved to Sierra Rutile and its environs. During the attack on Sierra Rutile and environs, the RUF also abducted staff and looted a substantial sum of money from the company. After the attack, Sankoh reported to Taylor via NPFL radio stations. Taylor told Sankoh to save the money in order to buy ammunitions, food and drugs for the fighters and to establish diplomatic relations with the outside world. The Prosecution relies primarily on the testimonies of Augustine Mallah and Perry Kamara.<sup>5358</sup>

2495. The Defence contends that the testimony of Augustine Mallah and Perry Kamara lacks credibility and contradicts the testimony of other Prosecution witnesses. The Defence further submits that this evidence is an elaborately made up story deliberately designed to directly implicate Taylor in the planning of RUF combat activities in Sierra Leone.<sup>5359</sup>

2496. Witness Augustine Mallah, a former RUF member,<sup>5360</sup> testified that at the end of 1994, while he was at the RUF base in the jungle in Zogoda, Foday Sankoh told him that he, together with Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) and Jalloh, a Sierra Leonean RUF Junior Commando, would be sent on a mission to Sierra Rutile under the command of CO Mohamed Tarawalli (a.k.a. Zino).<sup>5361</sup>

2497. Four or five days later, Sankoh assembled a formation and said that he had received advice from “the other side”, to attack and terrorise the area of Sierra Rutile by killing civilians, burning villages and abducting white employees of the Sierra Rutile mining company located there. Sankoh told Mallah later that “the other side” meant Charles Taylor. Sankoh explained that the purpose was to frighten the population and the soldiers there and to raise concern in the international community in order to force the international community to concentrate on peace in Sierra Leone.<sup>5362</sup> Mallah stated that while he was at Zogoda, in 1994, he saw Sankoh having conversations with Taylor by radio on a daily basis. Mallah heard their conversations clearly because the radio had a speaker.<sup>5363</sup>

2498. In accordance with Sankoh’s order, Mallah and the other RUF soldiers attacked Sumbuya, Tikonko, Bo Town, Njala University and Kanbaima. Most of the towns were burned and civilians were killed. Sierra Rutile mining company was burned and its equipment destroyed. Three employees of the company were captured. Mallah further testified that four employees of a company named Sironco Company were also captured and sent to Sankoh at Zogoda. During the attack, Mallah and other RUF soldiers reported to Mohamed Tarawalli, who informed Sankoh regularly of the crimes committed. Mallah testified that when Mohamed Tarawalli spoke to Sankoh, all the RUF commanders listened to the conversation with radio sets. After the attack Mallah remained in Sierra Rutile for eight months, after which he came back to Zogoda.<sup>5364</sup>

2499. Witness Perry Kamara, a former RUF Junior Commando<sup>5365</sup> and an RUF radio operator, testified that in 1994, Taylor and the RUF used to have radio communications every two or three days.<sup>5366</sup> As a radio man he received and monitored the radio transmissions and read from the log books. Kamara testified that Sankoh “was always advised by Mr Taylor” and that “any time Mr Sankoh received message from Mr Taylor we will undertake a serious attack”.<sup>5367</sup> In late 1994-1995, Taylor advised Sankoh to attack major places like Kono or Sierra Rutile. As a result, Sankoh informed his men, including the witness, that he wanted to attack the mining company of Sierra Rutile in Bonthe District, in the southern part of Sierra Leone.<sup>5368</sup> The RUF mission on Sierra Rutile was commanded by CO Mohamed Tarawalli. During the attack on Sierra Rutile, RUF soldiers captured the manager of the company and other white men. After the mission, the commander Mohamed Tarawalli came back with money wrapped in a rice bag. When Tarawalli came back to the base, Sankoh reported to Taylor who advised him to buy ammunitions, food and drugs for his fighters with the money looted.<sup>5369</sup>

2500. Taylor also advised Sankoh to use the money and the white hostages in order to establish diplomatic relations with other countries. More specifically, he said Sankoh should send educated RUF members to Côte d’Ivoire in order to establish RUF representation there. Fayia Musa, Deen Jalloh, Philip Palmer and their families were chosen for this diplomatic mission.<sup>5370</sup>

For this purpose, on 11 December 1994, Sankoh sent RUF members including Philip Palmer, Deen-Jalloh, Isatu Kallon, Daniel Kallon, Philip Sannoh, Alhaji Kamara and Issa Sesay to Côte d'Ivoire in order to establish a public relations campaign for the RUF. The members of the RUF delegation left Sierra Leone passing through Guinea.<sup>5373</sup> On or about 13 December 1994, while in Gueckedou on their way to Côte d'Ivoire, Philip Palmer and Alhaji Kamara were arrested by an anti gang unit of the police for being members of a rebel group. They were moved to Conakry and detained there until May 1995. After being released in May 1995, Palmer remained with the Sierra Leonean Ambassador to Guinea, in Conakry, for two weeks.<sup>5374</sup>

2502. TF1-168 further testified that Foday Sankoh had European, American and Sierra Leonean hostages, abducted from Sierrromco and Sierra Rutile. The hostages were held prisoners at the RUF's headquarters in Zogoda and later turned over to a special envoy, who in turn delivered them to the ICRC.<sup>5375</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-567

2503. Witness TF1-567, an RUF security officer in Zogoda,<sup>5376</sup> testified that in 1994, Foday Sankoh asked Mohamed Tarawalli (a.k.a. Zino) and Superman to come to Zogoda. There, he instructed them to attack Sierra Rutile and the western jungle and to open a base in the Western Area, because it was close to Freetown. TF1-567 went there with Zino. He testified that while there, the RUF used to set ambushes on the highway to get food from civilian vehicles and arms and ammunition from military vehicles.<sup>5377</sup>

The Accused

2504. The Accused denied having any contact with Foday Sankoh from 1992 onwards and denied giving any advice to attack Sierra Rutile.<sup>5378</sup> He added that he did not know what or where Sierra Rutile was.<sup>5379</sup> The Accused also denied advising Foday Sankoh that the RUF should establish diplomatic relations with the outside world.<sup>5380</sup>

Defence Witness Martin George

2505. Witness Martin George, an RUF Lieutenant,<sup>5381</sup> testified that, around mid-1994, he went to the RUF headquarters in Zogoda and attended a meeting during which Sankoh assigned Mohamed Tarawalli to capture Sierra Rutile and Sam Bockarie to capture Matru Jong. Sankoh explained that Sierra Rutile was an important target because it was a major government base and if they “got it” they would “shake up the government”. The witness never heard Sankoh speak of Charles Taylor during the meeting or mention that this attack had been ordered by Taylor. George stated that the decision came from Sankoh directly.<sup>5382</sup> George further stated that during the meeting with Sankoh at Zogoda he did not hear anyone saying that the RUF should terrorise, capture or kill any civilians. The objective of the mission was to capture Sierra Rutile, a mining company which was an important source of supply for the Government.<sup>5383</sup>

2506. George testified that Sam Bockarie and Mohamed Tarawalli both passed by his base in Ngolahun Vaama on the way to Sierra Rutile and Matru-Jong and on their return. Moreover, the witness and his radio operator, Dauda Aruna Fornie, received frequent reports on the operations by radio. During the operation in Sierra Rutile, Mohamed Tarawalli took 16 hostages including three white British citizens. The hostages were taken to Sankoh’s base in Zogoda. Sankoh had the 3 British nationals escorted to Guinea and released upon the request of the international community. The witness did not know what happened during the attacks in Sierra Rutile or in Njala, Kambaima or Sumbuya since he was not part of the mission.<sup>5384</sup>

2507. George testified that during the attacks on Sierra Rutile and Matru Jong, he never heard that the RUF was in communication with anyone in Liberia nor of arms and ammunition being sent from Liberia. The witness stated that the RUF obtained arms and ammunition to attack Sierra Rutile and Matru Jong by attacking military bases belonging to Momoh's soldiers.<sup>5385</sup>

2508. George did not remember the name of Augustine Mallah. However he did remember the nickname of OG. He testified that OG was part of the mission attacking Sierra Rutile. However, he said OG was not an RUF commander.<sup>5386</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

2509. Witness Issa Sesay, senior RUF commander,<sup>5387</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>5388</sup> testified that in 1995 RUF troops, led by Mohamed Tarawalli and Superman, attacked Sierra Rutile from the Kangari Hills. During the attack, the RUF captured American and British expatriate workers who were taken to the Sankoh headquarters in Zogoda.<sup>5389</sup> Between April and June 1995, the ICRC contacted Foday Sankoh on the radio in order to organise the release of the hostages. Sankoh agreed to release them and asked Sesay to escort them to the Guinean border. Sesay escorted them to the Guinean border where they were received by the ICRC.<sup>5390</sup>

2510. Sesay testified that the order to release the hostages did not come from Charles Taylor but from Sankoh. Similarly, it was Sankoh himself who ordered the attack on Sierra Rutile. At this time, Sankoh was angry at Taylor and refused to talk to him. Accordingly, the RUF and Taylor had no communications.<sup>5391</sup>

Defence Witness Fayia Musa

2511. Witness Fayia Musa, an RUF member of the External Delegation,<sup>5392</sup> testified that in 1994 Foday Sankoh gave the order to attack Sierra Rutile in order to expand his territory before the peace talks started. Sankoh knew that peace talks would begin soon and that military activity would lose its relevance. Many individuals were captured during this operation. Among those captured at Sieromco mines was Dr Barrie, a Sierra Leonean, who decided to join the RUF External Delegation after he was offered release instead of being returned to Freetown.<sup>5393</sup>

2512. Fayia Musa further testified that in December 1994, Sankoh agreed to send out an External Delegation comprised of Ibrahim Deen-Jalloh, Isatu Kallon, Agnes Deen-Jalloh, Philip Palmer, Kono Manyi and Alhaji Brima Kamara.<sup>5394</sup> The delegation was picked up by Mr Addai-Sebo in Kailahun and went to Côte d'Ivoire passing through Guinea. Fayia Musa explained that the most direct route from Sierra Leone to Côte d'Ivoire was through Liberia, but that the RUF decided not to have anything to do with Liberia.<sup>5395</sup>

2513. The External Delegation did not reach Danané without incident. Madame Isata Kallon managed the programme poorly, and when the RUF delegation reached Gueckedou, police officers arrested Mr Kamara and Palmer. Palmer was held in Guinea until July 1995.<sup>5396</sup>

2514. Witness Charles Ngebeh, an RUF member, testified that in late 1994, Foday Sankoh ordered CO Mohamed Tarawalli to carry out an attack on Sierra Rutile, where a ship laden with arms and ammunition intended for the NPRC was sitting in the port.<sup>5397</sup> RUF troops attacked Sierra Rutile and captured a lot of materiel including AK-47, RPG, GPMG, and anti-aircraft arms.<sup>5398</sup>

2515. Ngebeh did not participate in the attack on Sierra Rutile but was sent together with Gibril Massaquoi to Mile 91 on 25 December 1994, during which the RUF captured arms and ammunitions.<sup>5399</sup>

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIODDefence Witness Isatu Kallon

2516. Witness Isatu Kallon testified that while she was at the refugee Camp at Danané in Côte d'Ivoire, she met a Red Cross officer named "Dr Sebo" who told her that the Red Cross sent him to Sierra Leone in order to assist in the release of five white men who had been abducted, and requested the witness's help. Kallon heard over the BBC radio that five white persons had been abducted from Kabala and Panguma but did not know who abducted them.<sup>5400</sup> She did not hear that Taylor advised the RUF to capture these men.<sup>5401</sup>

Defence Witness John Vincent

2517. Witness John Vincent, a Liberian Vanguard commander,<sup>5402</sup> testified that a mission in Sierra Rutile was planned. However, Vincent was not in Zogoda at that time and could not provide further information. Vincent stated that Sam Kolleh or Martin George would know more about this mission than he did.<sup>5403</sup>

Deliberations

2518. Having reviewed the evidence, the Trial Chamber notes that it is not disputed that in late 1994 or early 1995, at the RUF headquarters in Zogoda, Foday Sankoh ordered his Deputy Commander CO Mohamed Tarawalli to attack the international mining company Sierra Rutile in Bonthe District.<sup>5404</sup> In accordance with Sankoh's order, Mohamed Tarawalli together with Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) attacked Sierra Rutile.<sup>5405</sup> During this attack several employees of the mining company and some British and American expatriates were abducted and taken hostage to Zogoda.<sup>5406</sup> Subsequently, following discussion with ICRC officials, Sankoh ordered the hostages to be taken to Guinea where they were released.<sup>5407</sup>

2520. Augustine Mallah, an RUF officer and commander of the Sankoh Strike Force Commanders Unit, testified that Sankoh told him that he had received advice from Charles Taylor to attack and terrorise the area of Sierra Rutile.<sup>5408</sup> Mallah stated that while he was at Zogoda, in 1994, he saw Sankoh having conversations with Taylor on a daily basis.<sup>5409</sup> Mallah further stated that he heard their conversations clearly since the radio they used had a speaker and Mallah was in the room.<sup>5410</sup>

2521. Before evaluating the merits of Augustine Mallah's testimony, the Chamber will consider his general credibility.

2522. Mallah gave generally coherent and detailed testimony although the Trial Chamber observed that on a few occasions, his evidence became confused, particularly when providing extensive answers during his examination-in-chief.<sup>5411</sup> Mallah was careful to distinguish between those events about which he had direct knowledge, and those events which he had not personally witnessed and openly admitted not personally knowing key figures such as Ibrahim Bah.<sup>5412</sup> Despite holding a position which allowed him close access to the RUF high command, Mallah admitted that his main focus during the conflict was on military operations and that he “did not have much concerns [sic] about government”.<sup>5413</sup> In the Trial Chamber’s view, this explains otherwise incongruous gaps in Mallah’s knowledge, such as his uncertainty over the meaning of the term “Honourable”<sup>5414</sup> and his use of the nomenclature “Yamousoukro Peace Accord” to refer to the Abidjan Peace Accord.<sup>5415</sup> When confronted on cross-examination by prior inconsistent statements, the Trial Chamber found Mallah’s testimony to be consistent and candid when addressing inaccuracies in his prior statements.<sup>5416</sup> Although his explanations did not, as discussed below, cure all these inconsistencies, the Trial Chamber noted that his testimony was substantially corroborated by other reliable witnesses. On the basis of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds Augustine Mallah to be generally credible and will consider further issues relating to his credibility in context as they may arise.

2523. In this particular instance, the Trial Chamber notes that Mallah’s testimony evolved considerably between his initial statement to the Prosecution on 1 March 2003 and his testimony in Court in November 2008. In a statement dated 1 March 2003, Mallah said that he inferred that Taylor communicated with Sankoh because he saw a man named Action Man bring two letters from Taylor requesting to talk with Sankoh in 1994 and 1996.<sup>5417</sup> Mallah admitted that what he said to the Prosecution investigators at that time was “not correct” but explained that he had his reasons for doing so.<sup>5418</sup> In a subsequent document dated 16 July 2006, the Prosecution’s investigator noted Mallah as having stated that “the radio operator never told him what Charles Taylor wanted Foday Sankoh on the radio and he is not aware of the nature of their conversation”.<sup>5419</sup> Mallah read this statement again on 23 May 2007 and signed it on 3 July 2007.<sup>5420</sup> He was offered the opportunity to change his statement on several occasions but did not choose to do so.<sup>5421</sup> He acknowledged the inconsistency between his prior statements and his testimony, maintaining that he had his reasons for not having made truthful statements, although he did not say what those reasons were. The Trial Chamber notes that Perry Kamara’s testimony corroborates Mallah’s evidence that the Accused advised Sankoh to attack major places in Sierra Leone, and that the Sierra Rutile attack followed upon such advice.

2524. Perry Kamara also testified that Taylor and the RUF had radio communications every two or three days and that Taylor advised Sankoh to attack major places such as Sierra Rutile, resulting in attacks, including the attack on Sierra Rutile.<sup>5422</sup> As a radio man, Kamara received and monitored radio transmissions and read the logbooks.<sup>5423</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that when describing the conversation, Kamara quotes the Accused’s alleged statement as if he directly heard this conversation.<sup>5424</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Perry Kamara is generally a credible witness.<sup>5425</sup> Kamara testified that following the Sierra Rutile attack, Sankoh reported to Taylor who advised him to buy ammunitions, food and drugs with the money that had been looted, and to use the money and the hostages taken to establish diplomatic relations with other countries.<sup>5426</sup> This evidence does not indicate that the Accused advised Sankoh to loot and capture hostages. However, it does indicate that the Accused was aware of these crimes and advised Sankoh on the use of the money and the hostages. The Trial Chamber notes that according to Kamara, Taylor advised Sankoh to send

RUF members to Côte d'Ivoire to establish RUF representation there. As discussed in the context of the External Delegation that was subsequently sent to Côte d'Ivoire, the Trial Chamber has noted and considered the inaccuracy of Kamara's account of the travel of the delegation and related issues.<sup>5427</sup>

2525. Numerous other witnesses, both for the Prosecution and the Defence, gave evidence with regard to Sankoh's order to attack Sierra Rutile.<sup>5428</sup> None of those witnesses mentioned the Accused's involvement in this attack. However, the Trial Chamber notes that there is nothing inconsistent in their testimony that Sankoh ordered the attack on Sierra Rutile with the testimony of Mallah and Kamara that the Accused advised him to do so. The Trial Chamber does not find the testimony of these witnesses probative as it does not confirm or refute the involvement of the Accused.

Findings

2526. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in 1994, the Accused advised Sankoh to attack a major place in Sierra Leone, and that pursuant to this advice Sankoh ordered the RUF to attack Sierra Rutile. Following the attack, the Accused gave Sankoh further advice with regard to the use of the money looted and the hostages abducted during the course of the attack on Sierra Rutile.

political, military and other matters.<sup>5429</sup> The Prosecution submits in particular, that in accordance with the Accused's approval and guidance, Foday Sankoh implemented an RUF campaign of terror in 1996, known as "Operation Stop Election" during which the hands of any civilian captured would be amputated in order to terrorise the civilian population to gain the international community's attention and to prevent civilians from voting in the 1996 elections. The aim of the operation was to disrupt the elections by instilling terror in the civilian population and preventing them from voting, while at the same time raising concern of the Government and international community about holding the said elections before the signing of the Abidjan Peace Agreement.<sup>5430</sup> The Prosecution alleges that, although this plan was not devised by the Accused, Sankoh sought the Accused's approval for it, and the Accused told him in response that the plan was "not a bad one".<sup>5431</sup> 2528. The Defence does not dispute that Foday Sankoh ordered the RUF to carry out Operation Stop Election in early 1996 to disrupt the electoral process. The Defence argues, however, that while the RUF's plan was to make the operation fearful, Sankoh's orders did not involve planned atrocities, and challenges the credibility of witnesses Isaac Mongor<sup>5432</sup> and Alice Pyne.<sup>5433</sup> It submits further that the Accused played no role in Operation Stop Election, as cooperation between the NPFL and the RUF ceased in 1992 after Taylor withdrew his fighters from Sierra Leone in the operation known as "Top Final".<sup>5434</sup> The Trial Chamber considered the evidence of Prosecution witnesses Isaac Mongor, Augustine Mallah, Alice Pyne, Samuel Kargbo and protected witnesses TF1-371, TF1-168 and TF1-375, and Defence witnesses Charles Taylor, Martin George, Issa Sesay, John Vincent, and Fayia Musa, and Exhibits P-568, P-277 and D-062.

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2529. Witness Isaac Mongor, an RUF commander,<sup>5435</sup> testified that in 1996, while the RUF was still in the bush, they learned that elections were going to be held in Sierra Leone.<sup>5436</sup> Foday Sankoh called the RUF Commanders to his base at Zogoda in Kenema District and expressed concern that while fighting was still going on between the NPRC Government and the RUF, the former had decided to hold national elections without involving the latter. Sankoh told the RUF Commanders that since the Government did not acknowledge the RUF, the latter should carry out an offensive to stop the elections.<sup>5437</sup>

2530. Mongor attended this meeting in Zogoda along with several other RUF commanders including Mohamed Tarawalli, Issa Sesay, Augustine Gbao, CO Rocky (Emmanuel Williams), Rambo (Boston Flomo) and Jungle (Daniel Tamba).<sup>5438</sup> While Mongor was there, an RUF radio operator named Z-Man<sup>5439</sup> told Sankoh that Charles Taylor wanted to speak with him on the radio set. Mongor joined Sankoh and both went to the thatched hut where the radio was located. Mongor stood just in front of the radio room within earshot as Sankoh spoke to Taylor.<sup>5440</sup> During the radio conversation, which lasted 20 to 25 minutes, Mongor overheard Sankoh explain to Taylor that the RUF had been cut off by ULIMO<sup>5441</sup> and were not getting supplies from Liberia anymore; that the NPRC Government had decided to carry on with the elections; that Sankoh had summoned his commanders to instruct them to carry out an offensive to disrupt the elections; and that the offensive entailed a plan to instil terror in the voters by amputating the hands of captured civilians who had participated or were going to participate in the voting and asking them to “take their hands off the election”. Mongor overheard Taylor responding that “the plan was not a bad one”. After the radio conversation, Sankoh told the RUF commanders that he had discussed the planned offensive with Taylor who considered it “not a bad plan at all”.<sup>5442</sup> Two days later, the RUF launched “Operation Stop Election”.<sup>5443</sup>

2531. At the meeting, each commander was assigned an area to attack. Mongor was to attack Masingbi; Mohamed Tarawalli and Superman were to attack Magburaka and Makeni, while RUF Rambo and Mosquito were to attack Kenema Town.<sup>5444</sup> Mongor testified that Operation Stop Election was not successful in Masingbi as his fighters were unable to overrun the SLA and Kamajors or to capture or amputate any civilians taking part in the elections there.<sup>5445</sup> However, he heard that Mohamed Tarawalli and Superman successfully carried out the operation in Magburaka where RUF Commanders captured civilians, amputated their hands and carved RUF on their chests with razor blades.<sup>5446</sup>

2532. The Defence cross-examined Mongor at length as to why he failed to mention the alleged conversation between Taylor and Sankoh regarding “Operation Stop Election” in his 4 September 2006 statement to the Prosecution investigators, and instead waited until February 2008, just before his testimony, to do so. Mongor stated that he did mention the information to the investigators in 2006 but that they failed to record it.<sup>5447</sup>

Prosecution Witness Augustine Mallah

2533. Witness Augustine Mallah, a former RUF fighter,<sup>5448</sup> testified that in 1996 just before the elections in Sierra Leone, while he was at the RUF headquarters in Zogoda, Foday Sankoh called a formation where most of the senior commanders were present, and Sankoh was giving instructions to soldiers and the commander he had named to attack Kenema, Morris Kallon. During this meeting, Sankoh explained that the Sierra Leonean Government had contacted him and told him that it had decided, despite the RUF’s opposition, to hold elections while the peace process was not completed and that in response, Sankoh had decided to “teach the Government and the international community a lesson” by obstructing the elections.<sup>5449</sup> The plan known as “Operation Stop Election” would entail the RUF attacking all the major towns where the elections were scheduled to take place and shooting dead or chopping off the hands of civilians going out to vote, in order to

2534. Morris Kallon and Issa Sesay were in charge of the operation in Kenema Town.<sup>5452</sup> Augustine Mallah participated in this operation. He testified that he would fire at any civilian he would find on the street and that he witnessed three civilians in Kenema Town who had their hands cut off by RUF soldiers.<sup>5453</sup> Mallah stated that although the RUF did not succeed in stopping the elections altogether, they succeeded in dissuading a lot of potential voters who ultimately did not go to vote for fear of the RUF reprisal.<sup>5454</sup>

Prosecution Witness Alice Pyne

2535. Witness Alice Pyne, a former RUF radio operator,<sup>5455</sup> testified that while at Black Water in 1996 before the elections, she was monitoring radio frequencies used by the SLA and RUF when she overheard President Maada Bio and Foday Sankoh agree over the radio to observe a ceasefire in order to bring the war between the RUF and the SLA to an end.<sup>5456</sup> The next day, Foday Sankoh sent a radio message to all the RUF frontlines ordering the RUF to observe a ceasefire.<sup>5457</sup> A month later, discussions about a proposed Abidjan Peace Accord took place.<sup>5458</sup> Around the same time, Maada Bio contacted Sankoh again by radio and informed him of their wishes to organise free and fair and genuine elections in Sierra Leone but that the fighting should cease before free and fair elections could be held.<sup>5459</sup> Soon afterwards, there was a media announcement that Tejan Kabbah and his SLPP Party and the people of Sierra Leone had chosen to hold the elections before negotiating peace with the RUF.<sup>5460</sup> After the media announcement, Sankoh, who at this time was in Côte d'Ivoire,<sup>5461</sup> sent a radio message through CO Mohamed<sup>5462</sup> to all the RUF frontlines to run

“Operation Stop Election” by going to all the major cities where the elections were scheduled to take place, by shooting in public places and causing panic in the civilian population with a view to disrupting or stopping the elections.<sup>5463</sup> Alice Pyne did not participate in the attack but testified that CO Isaac Mongor led armed RUF men and attacked anyone participating in the election, along the Matotoka - Masingbi axis.<sup>5464</sup> Pyne stated that “Operation Stop Election” was “not successful” in that the elections went ahead and were won by Tejan Kabbah.<sup>5465</sup> The Abidjan Peace Accord was signed after the elections on 30 November 1996.<sup>5466</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

2536. Witness TF1-371, an RUF officer, testified that while he was at the outpost called Blama Highway in 1996, the commander of the outpost, a former SBU named Base Marine, told him that before the general elections of 1996 Sankoh ordered the RUF to carry out an operation called “Operation Stop Election”. Base Marine told TF1-371 that the purpose of this operation was to stop people from voting and that although no specific orders were given to amputate civilians, some RUF soldiers used the operation to cut off people's hands.<sup>5467</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

2537. Witness TF1-168, an RUF officer, testified that while he was out of the country, a national forum was held in Sierra Leone in early 1996 under the Maada Bio regime, which unanimously agreed that elections in Sierra Leone should be held before peace.<sup>5468</sup> The RUF did not attend the forum although they were invited.<sup>5469</sup> In response, Foday Sankoh called a meeting of the RUF leadership,<sup>5470</sup> held in Zogoda, during which he expressed his dismay at the decision taken by the national forum and told those present that both he and Brigadier Julius Maada Bio, whom Sankoh had consulted, were not in favour of holding elections before negotiating peace.<sup>5471</sup> Sankoh ordered RUF combatants to go to the polling stations in all major towns where the elections were scheduled to take place and to run an operation to stop the elections, by cutting off the hands of the people taking part in the vote.<sup>5472</sup>

2538. Witness TF1-375, a former RUF fighter,<sup>5473</sup> testified that in 1996, while in the Western Area, he received orders from Superman to go to the crossing points at Kangari River in order to meet CO Mohamed (a.k.a. “Zino”),<sup>5474</sup> who would tell them about a mission, Peace Before Election.<sup>5475</sup> There, CO Mohamed addressed the RUF soldiers at a muster parade at which he stated that Sankoh had gone for peace talks leaving him in charge of the RUF. He then ordered the RUF soldiers to attack Magburaka during which they would cut off the fingers of anybody who took part in the voting. TF1-375 did not participate in the mission but heard on the radio that a lot of amputations took place during this operation.<sup>5476</sup>

Prosecution Witness Samuel Kargbo

2539. Witness Samuel Kargbo testified that prior to the 1996 elections, while he was serving as an NPRC soldier in Freetown,<sup>5477</sup> he was sent to Joru near Kenema with instructions to repel the RUF who had declared “Operation No Election”.<sup>5478</sup> After repelling the RUF from Joru, Kargbo went to Kenema National Hospital to visit some NPRC soldiers who had sustained injuries during the attack.<sup>5479</sup> At the hospital, Kargbo observed one or two people who had four fingers cut off, leaving them with only the thumb. These mutilated civilians told Kargbo that the RUF soldiers cut off their fingers and sent them with a message to the Government soldiers that the RUF did not want an election.<sup>5480</sup>

<sup>5470</sup> At Transcript 22 January 2009, p. 23266 (CS) TF1-168 states that the RUF External Delegation was represented by spokesperson Fayia Musa who specifically travelled from Danané in Côte d’Ivoire to Zogoda to attend the meeting and who reported back to the external delegation upon his return.

The Accused

2540. The Accused denied any involvement in “Operation Stop Election” and stated that he did not hear of the RUF committing atrocities in Sierra Leone in 1996 or carrying out amputations to stop elections.<sup>5481</sup> The Accused refuted Isaac Mongor’s testimony implicating him, stating that after the breakdown of relations between the NPFL and RUF in 1992 (referring to Operation Top Final) he had nothing to do with Foday Sankoh or the RUF.<sup>5482</sup> The Accused further testified that as a member of the Council of State in Liberia at the material time, he was busy trying to broker peace in Liberia in preparation for his own election as President the following year and as such had everything to lose in stopping the elections in Sierra Leone as that would only have disrupted peace in the whole sub-region.<sup>5483</sup>

2541. Witness Martin George, a former RUF fighter,<sup>5484</sup> testified that in early 1996 he was based in Ngolahun Vaama, and that he visited the RUF headquarters in Zogoda every weekend.<sup>5485</sup> George stated that in 1996, Kabbah decided to hold elections before completing peace talks with RUF. However, the RUF considered that these elections would not be free and fair, and Sankoh decided that the RUF should sabotage the elections. Accordingly, Sankoh convened a forum in Zogoda with various RUF jungle commanders. George attended the meeting.<sup>5486</sup> During the meeting, Sankoh ordered the RUF to attack the soldiers guarding the polling stations on election-day in order to disrupt the elections.

George clarified that Sankoh's orders were targeted at the Government soldiers guarding the polling stations but not the civilians.<sup>5487</sup> George stated that Sankoh initiated the order himself and that he (George) did not hear Foday Sankoh or anybody else say that the order to stop the elections came from Liberia or from Charles Taylor.<sup>5488</sup> At the meeting, Morris Kallon was assigned to head the attack on polling stations in Kenema while Boston Flomo was to head the attack on those in Bo.<sup>5489</sup> Refuting the testimony of Witnesses Augustine Mallah, Fayia Musa and Exhibit P-277, George stated that he did not hear Sankoh issue orders to amputate civilians taking part in the voting in order to raise the concern of the international community.<sup>5490</sup> However, in cross-examination George admitted that he heard about the RUF amputating civilians who had ink on their thumbs on polling day.<sup>5491</sup> George did not participate in the operation but heard that on polling day "bullets were flying".<sup>5492</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

2542. Witness Issa Sesay testified that he was in Côte d'Ivoire with the RUF External Delegation from November 1995 until April 1996.<sup>5493</sup> While in Côte d'Ivoire in March 1996, Sesay travelled with the RUF External Delegation, which included Philip Palmer, Fayia Musa, Deen Jalloh and Tom Nyuma, to Yamoussoukro where they met Foday Sankoh.<sup>5494</sup> In Yamoussoukro, Sankoh and the RUF External delegation met with Maada Bio and the NPRC delegation including Tom Nyuma, Kes Boya and the former Chief of Defence Staff, Carew.<sup>5495</sup> Sankoh and Maada Bio agreed that elections should not come before disarmament.<sup>5496</sup> Maada Bio devised a plan that if the NPRC politicians in Freetown forced him to hold an election before peace, the RUF should attack the cities of Bo, Kenema and Magburaka on the day of the election. In response, Maada Bio would instruct his army to withdraw from these areas, letting the RUF take control. Thus with part of the country under the control of the RUF, no free and fair elections could be held.<sup>5497</sup> Following this agreement, Sankoh gave the order from Côte d'Ivoire, instructing Mohamed Tarawallie (a.k.a. Zino) in Zogoda by radio that the RUF should attack Bo, Kenema and Magburaka.<sup>5498</sup> The RUF carried out Operation Stop Election by attacking those locations but Maada Bio did not withdraw his troops as planned.<sup>5499</sup> The RUF, having encountered stiff resistance from the NPRC forces, resorted to carrying out amputations.<sup>5500</sup>

2543. Sesay was not aware of a direct order from Sankoh to carry out amputations and claimed that they arose spontaneously as a consequence of the betrayal of the RUF by the NPRC forces.<sup>5501</sup> Refuting the testimony of Isaac Mongor, Sesay stated that Taylor could not have ordered the RUF to carry out Operation Stop Election as Taylor and Sankoh had no contact during this period.<sup>5502</sup> Sesay stated that he did not attend the January 1996 meeting of RUF commanders convened by Sankoh in Zogoda,<sup>5503</sup> neither was he in Sierra Leone at the time of Operation Stop Election, nor was he able to monitor the radio message in which Sankoh issued the orders for the operation.<sup>5504</sup> However, he heard that the amputations happened in the Northern jungle under the command of Isaac Mongor.<sup>5505</sup> Sesay also stated that although the RUF carried out some amputations during Operation Stop Election, the majority of amputations in Sierra Leone were committed by the AFRC in the Districts of Kono, Koinadugu, Bombali, Port Loko and Freetown during the period of February 1998 to January 1999.<sup>5506</sup>

2544. In cross-examination however, Sesay admitted that Foday Sankoh gave the order for the RUF to amputate civilians during Operation Stop Election.<sup>5507</sup> He also conceded that the

Defence Witness John Vincent

2545. Witness John Vincent, a former RUF fighter,<sup>5509</sup> testified that in early 1996 he was assigned with the RUF to Kangari Hills, in the Northern Jungle.<sup>5510</sup> Vincent stated that the RUF was opposed to the 1996 elections in Sierra Leone, which took place before any peace was made between the RUF and the Sierra Leonean Government.<sup>5511</sup> The RUF developed a strategy to sabotage the elections by targeting the military personnel guarding the polling stations and harassing citizens so that they would be too scared to vote.<sup>5512</sup> Vincent stated that during the operation, the RUF did not intentionally target civilians, but that during the fighting civilians were accidentally killed.<sup>5513</sup> However, Vincent did not participate in this operation and did not know if any civilians were injured or amputated in the operation.<sup>5514</sup>

Defence Witness Fayia Musa

2546. Witness Fayia Musa, a former senior RUF officer,<sup>5515</sup> testified that the RUF External Delegation officially launched the RUF publication “Footpaths to Democracy”<sup>5516</sup> in December 1995 in Côte d’Ivoire<sup>5517</sup> in the context of the peace process.<sup>5518</sup> Also in December 1995, a National Forum of all stakeholders was held in Freetown under the NPRC regime of Brig. national elections before signing a peace accord.<sup>5519</sup> Although the RUF was invited to the forum, Sankoh did not send a representative and was unhappy about the outcome as he preferred a completion of the peace process before holding elections.<sup>5520</sup>

2547. Musa travelled to the RUF Headquarters in Zogoda in Sierra Leone in January 1996, taking with him copies of the publication “Footpaths to Democracy” for distribution in RUF-held territory.<sup>5521</sup> As representative of the RUF External Delegation, the purpose of Musa’s journey to Zogoda was firstly, to try and persuade the RUF Leader to respect the peace process by accepting the decision of the National Forum in Freetown and secondly, to “come out of the bush” as the armed aspect of the struggle was no longer relevant and to encourage him to take refuge in Côte d’Ivoire pending the completion of the peace process and the transition to democratic elections in Sierra Leone.<sup>5522</sup>

2548. Musa confirmed that he attended a meeting in Zogoda in January 1996 where Sankoh told the RUF commanders present that in his opinion, the proposed elections could not be free or fair while part of the country was still at war and that it was necessary to attain peace first before holding democratic elections. Sankoh further stated that he had talked to Brig. Maada Bio who was also not in favour of holding elections before peace.<sup>5523</sup> Sankoh then instructed his combatants including “Mosquito” and “Fula Mon Ami”,<sup>5524</sup> to “stop the election” by disrupting polling stations in all major towns including Kenema, Bo and Magburaka, and ensuring that any civilians insisting on turning up to vote have their hands amputated.<sup>5525</sup> After the meeting, Musa and Mohamed Tarawallie spoke to Sankoh expressing their displeasure at his instruction to amputate and harm the very civilians that the RUF claimed to save.<sup>5526</sup> Musa later learned that the RUF had carried out Sankoh’s instructions by burning polling booths and amputating voters.<sup>5527</sup> He stated that this was the first time during the Sierra Leone conflict he heard of the RUF amputating civilians.<sup>5528</sup>

2549. After spending a week in Zogoda, Fayia Musa returned to Côte d'Ivoire.<sup>5529</sup> In March 1996 Foday Sankoh arrived in Yamoussoukro, Côte d'Ivoire for talks with, inter alia, officials of International Alert and of the Ivorian Government, seeking international support for the peace process.<sup>5530</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-568

2550. Excerpts of a draft publication entitled "African Elections Database" admitted into evidence as Exhibit P-568 show that the first round of voting in the 1996 Sierra Leone election took place on 26-27 February 1996, while the run-off or second round took place on 15 March 1996.

Confidential Exhibit P-277

2551. An excerpt of Confidential Exhibit P-277 states in paragraph 5.5:

At the end of the National Forum on whether there should be elections before peace or Vice-versa held in Freetown in 1995, delegates from all walks of life in the country voted by a large majority for elections before peace. The only interest group conspicuously absent at that forum was the RUF though she was invited.

The RUF argued that peace before elections would provide a conducive atmosphere for democratic elections to be held in all parts of Sierra Leone. The National Elections Commission, using the mandate given her by the National Forum, set the time table for proportional representation (PR) system of elections for February 1996. Cpl. Sankoh then held a meeting with his senior battle front commanders at his Zogoda headquarters in February 1996 in the presence of RUF spokesman Fayia Musa who had travelled from Côte d'Ivoire to Zogoda on Cpl. Sankoh's instruction. In that meeting, Cpl. Sankoh launched "Operation Stop Election" and appointed Sam Bockarie (Mosquito) and Mohamed Jalloh (Fullah Monamie) as the mission commanders to Kenema and Bo, respectively.

Cpl. Sankoh informed his Commanders that he had received assurances from the NPRC that the Sierra Leone Army (SLA) would collaborate with the RUF in stopping the election process. He gave a very firm instruction that if citizens still came out of their homes to vote on that polling day, the very hands the citizens would use to cast their votes should be immediately chopped off. The then RUF Field Commander Mohamed Tarawallie (Zeno) arrived in Zogoda after the meeting was over and the missionaries had left. But he was disappointed that Cpl. Sankoh could instruct his combatants to cut the hands of the very Sierra Leonean his revolution came to save. He therefore tried to prevail on his leader (Sankoh) to reverse that instruction but to no avail.

The mission itself failed as the SLA was on full alert in every village and town on polling day thus preventing the RUF from entering Kenema and Bo. In the ensuing [sic] battle, the RUF sustained a lot of casualties, much to the dismay and anger of the RUF fighters and their leader Cpl. Sankoh. Though the cutting of hands was done during that mission on a small scale, it continued uncontrolled within RUF circles even after 'Operation Stop Election'. However, the amputations and mutilations on a very large scale was carried out by members of the AFRC that invaded Freetown on February 6, 1999.<sup>5531</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-062

2552. An excerpt of a document entitled "Chronology of Sierra Leone, Special Report, Africa Confidential: April 1998" admitted into evidence as Exhibit D-062 shows at p. 4 that on 26 February 1996 Presidential and Legislative elections were held but none of the presidential candidates won the required percentage of votes in the first round. On 15 March 1996 Ahmad Tejan Kabbah of the SLPP won the second round with a 59.9% of the votes.<sup>5532</sup>

Deliberations

2553. The Trial Chamber observes that the evidence establishes the following sequence of events in Sierra Leone, leading up to "Operation Stop Election". In December 1995, a National Forum was held in Freetown to decide whether the people of Sierra Leone wanted to hold elections before the peace process was completed or whether they preferred to complete the peace process before holding the elections.<sup>5533</sup> The RUF, although invited, did not attend or take part in the Forum, which decided by an overwhelming majority to hold elections before peace.<sup>5534</sup> Subsequently, the NPRC Government under Brig. Julius Maada Bio conducted elections in February and March of 1996 in which Ahmad Tejan Kabbah of the SLPP was elected President.<sup>5535</sup> Foday Sankoh, the RUF leader, opposed the decision to

<sup>5535</sup> Although testimonial accounts vary as to the actual dates of the 1996 Sierra Leone elections or the regime under which they were conducted, the Trial Chamber finds most reliable the documentary evidence in Exhibits P-568 and D-062 both of which establish that the first and second rounds of elections were held on 26-27 February 1996 and 15 March 1996, respectively.

hold democratic elections before the completion of the peace process, and considering that holding the elections during a period when parts of the country were inaccessible due to the war would unfairly prejudice the RUF.<sup>5536</sup> Consequently, before the elections, Sankoh summoned a meeting or meetings of his commanders at the RUF headquarters in Zogoda and instructed them to disrupt the elections in an operation dubbed “Operation Stop Election”.<sup>5537</sup> The operation was carried out on polling day, with limited success, as Alhaji Tejan Kabbah was elected President.<sup>5538</sup> In March 1996 Sankoh travelled to Yamoussoukro, Côte d’Ivoire to continue the peace process.<sup>5539</sup>

2554. Regarding the specific orders given by Foday Sankoh to the RUF commanders, the Trial Chamber is satisfied based on the testimony of witnesses Isaac Mongor, Augustine Mallah and Defence witness Fayia Musa, all of whom attended the Zogoda meeting or meetings, that Sankoh gave orders to attack and burn polling stations in all major towns including Kenema, Bo and Magburaka and to shoot and kill or to amputate the hands or fingers of any civilian believed to participate in the elections. The Trial Chamber is also satisfied that Sankoh’s objective was to disrupt the elections by instilling terror in the civilian population and preventing them from voting, while at the same time raising concern of the Sierra Leone Government and international community about holding the said elections before the signing of the Abidjan Peace Agreement. The above evidence is corroborated by Witnesses Alice Pyne, TF1-168, TF1-375, Samuel Kargbo and Exhibit P-277. In the Trial Chamber’s view, the fact that Martin George “did not hear such an order”,

<sup>5537</sup> While accounts as to the timing of the Zogoda meeting vary, Witnesses Isaac Mongor, Augustine Mallah, Martin George and Fayia Musa all of whom attended the said meeting are consistent as to the location and purpose of the meeting called by the RUF leader. These witnesses are corroborated by Witnesses TF1-168, TF1-371, TF1-375, John Vincent, and Exhibit P-277. The Trial Chamber finds the evidence of witness Alice Pyne to the effect that Sankoh was in Côte d’Ivoire and not in Zogoda when he issued the instructions for Operation Stop Election by radio message, doubtful in light of the chronology of events discussed above.

<sup>5538</sup> Witnesses Isaac Mongor, Augustine Mallah, Alice Pyne, Samuel Kargbo and Issa Sesay all described “Operation Stop Election” as “partially successful” in that while the RUF carried out acts to disrupt the voting, its stated purpose of actually stopping the election was not achieved.

<sup>5539</sup> The Trial Chamber finds the detailed account of Fayia Musa to the effect that Sankoh travelled to Yamoussoukro, Côte d’Ivoire in March 1996 after the elections, credible. This account is corroborated by Exhibits P-277 and P-568. Alice Pyne’s evidence as to where Sankoh was when he sent a radio message to Mohammed Tarawalli is not reliable as it is based on her speculation or assumption through monitoring various conversations rather than from direct knowledge. Issa Sesay conceded in cross-examination that Sankoh travelled to Yamoussoukro after Tejan Kabbah was elected President.

or that Issa Sesay “was not aware of such an order” does not negate the credible evidence establishing that such an order was in fact issued.

2555. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber is satisfied based on the above evidence that Sankoh also issued orders assigning specific commanders to lead the attack on specific areas. These include CO Mohamed Tarawallie (a.k.a. Zino) and Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) to attack Makeni and Magburaka;<sup>5540</sup> Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito), Morris Kallon, Augustine Mallah, Boston Flomo (a.k.a. RUF Rambo) and Issa Sesay to attack Kenema Town and Magburaka;<sup>5541</sup> Isaac Mongor to attack Matotoka and Masingbi;<sup>5542</sup> and Fula Monami to attack Bo.<sup>5543</sup>

2556. It is undisputed that it was Sankoh, not the Accused, who planned and ordered Operation Stop Election.<sup>5544</sup> Nonetheless, the Prosecution, relying solely on the evidence of Isaac Mongor, alleges that before ordering his troops to launch the operation, Sankoh received a radio call from the Accused during which he told the Accused of the plan to instil terror and amputate civilians to prevent or punish their participation in the elections, and the Accused commented that the plan to disrupt the elections “was not a bad one”.<sup>5545</sup>

2557. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Mongor is a generally credible witness.<sup>5546</sup> It has considered Mongor’s testimony that the alleged radio conversation took place inside a hut and that he was not inside the hut when he over-heard the conversation but rather was eavesdropping from outside the hut. Mongor further stated that apart from over-hearing the said radio conversation between Taylor and Sankoh, the latter in his subsequent address to the meeting of RUF commanders in Zogoda, told them that “he had discussed the planned offensive with Taylor who considered it not a bad plan at all”.<sup>5547</sup> However, of the other witnesses who attended a meeting or meetings in Zogoda, including Augustine Mallah, Martin George, and Fayia Musa, none mention hearing Sankoh openly make such a statement during the meeting. On the contrary, a number of these witnesses refer to Sankoh's statement that he had consulted Brig. Julius Maada Bio of the NPRC (not Charles Taylor) who shared the RUF's preference for "peace before elections" and who was prepared to "cooperate" with the RUF plan to sabotage the said election.<sup>5548</sup> The evidence of Fayia Musa in this regard is particularly noteworthy as he was part of the RUF External delegation and had on previous occasions met with and received assistance from the Accused. The Trial Chamber finds that Fayia Musa is a generally credible witness.

2558. The Trial Chamber has considered whether or not there may have been two meetings, as Augustine Mallah in his testimony did not name, other than Sankoh, any of the many commanders Mongor named as having attended the meeting, and the commander Mallah named to lead the attack, Morris Kallon, was not mentioned by Mongor in his testimony as having been present at the meeting. However, the content of the meeting described by both witnesses is fairly consistent, and the Trial Chamber is unable to conclude definitively that these were two separate meetings.

2559. In the light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber is of the view that given that Mongor was not inside the hut where the conversation allegedly took place but rather was eavesdropping from outside, where he may have misheard or taken certain information out of context, and given that other witnesses at a meeting in Zogoda which may have been in the same meeting did not say that Sankoh mentioned the radio conversation with the Accused to the meeting, the Trial Chamber cannot rely solely on the testimony of Mongor that Sankoh sought Taylor's approval and guidance in relation to the plan known as Operation Stop Election, and that Taylor told him in response that the plan was "not a bad one".

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIODFindings

2561. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in early 1996 before the elections, Foday Sankoh ordered the RUF to attack and burn polling stations in all major towns including Kenema, Bo and Magburaka and to shoot and kill or to amputate the hands or fingers of any civilian believed to participate in the elections, an attack dubbed "Operation Stop Election".

2562. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that before ordering the attack, Sankoh sought the approval and guidance of the Accused.

Summary of Findings

2563. The Trial Chamber has found that -

- (i) Between 1986 and 1989, revolutionary movements and their leaders received training in Libya. The Trial Chamber further found that at some point, between 1986 and 1989, the Accused, Foday Sankoh and Dr Manneh were in Libya, and that the Accused met Sankoh in Libya during this time;
- (ii) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that between 1986 and 1989, the Accused, Sankoh and Dr Manneh met together and established a common plan to terrorize the Sierra Leonean population and to forcibly control the population and territory of Sierra Leone;
- (iii) In 1989, after their training in Libya, the Accused and his Liberian revolutionary group and Dr Manneh and his Gambian revolutionary group went to Burkina Faso;

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

- (iv) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that in 1989, Foday Sankoh was also in Burkina Faso and that the Accused, Sankoh and Dr Manneh met and agreed to support each other in their respective wars;
- (v) From August 1990 until March 1991, the Accused provided the RUF with the training camp of Crab Hole, instructors, recruits and material support, including food and other supplies;
- (vi) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that from August 1990 until March 1991, as a matter of policy, NPFL instructors in Crab Hole taught terror methods to RUF recruits;
- (vii) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Liberian and Sierra Leonean trainees at Camp Naama had no separate chain of command and were treated as one body under the command of the Accused;
- (viii) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that in Voinjama in March 1991, the Accused, Foday Sankoh and Dr Manneh together with NPFL and RUF commanders held a meeting during which they planned and organised the invasion of Sierra Leone in accordance with the strategy hatched in Libya and Burkina Faso;
- (ix) The Accused supported the invasion of Sierra Leone;
- (x) After the invasion, NPFL troops committed crimes against Sierra Leonean civilians;
- (xi) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the support of the Accused for the invasion of Sierra Leone was undertaken pursuant to a common purpose to terrorize the civilian population of Sierra Leone;
- (xii) Around November 1992, the Accused provided Sankoh with arms and ammunition for an attack on Kono;
- (xiii) During this time the Accused received diamonds from Sankoh;

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

- (xiv) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that in 1992 the Accused and Sankoh formed a common plan to capture Kono, or that the Accused directed Sankoh to capture Kono, because it was a diamondiferous area;
- (xv) In 1993, following a request from the Accused, Sankoh sent RUF personnel under the command of Morris Kallon to Liberia to fight with the NPFL against ULIMO;
- (xvi) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused instructed Joseph (a.k.a. Zigzag) Marzah to establish a relationship with persons in Guinea in order to take materiel into Guinea for the RUF;
- (xvii) In 1994, the Accused advised Sankoh to attack a major place in Sierra Leone, and pursuant to this advice Sankoh ordered the RUF to attack Sierra Rutile. Following the attack, the Accused gave Sankoh further advice with regard to the use of the money looted and the hostages abducted during the course of the attack on Sierra Rutile;
- (xviii) In early 1996 before the elections, Foday Sankoh ordered the RUF to attack and burn polling stations in all major towns including Kenema, Bo and Magburaka and to shoot and kill or to amputate the hands or fingers of any civilian believed to participate in the elections, an attack dubbed "Operation Stop Election";
- (xix) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that before ordering Operation Stop Election, Sankoh sought the approval and guidance of the Accused.

Conclusion

2564. At the end of the 1980s, a number of West African revolutionaries were trained in Libya, including the Accused, Ali Kabbah and Foday Sankoh from Sierra Leone and Kukoi Samba Sanyang (a.k.a. "Dr Manneh") from the Gambia.<sup>5553</sup> The Accused met Sankoh in Libya, although the exact circumstances of their meeting are not known.<sup>5554</sup> Contrary to the Prosecution's submissions, the evidence did not establish that prior to 1996, the Accused, Sankoh and Dr Manneh participated in any common plan, nor that the three men even met together.

PRE-INDICTMENT PERIOD

2566. During the pre-Indictment period, the Accused provided the RUF with a training camp, instructors, recruits and material support, including food and other supplies. However, again contrary to the Prosecution's submissions, the evidence did not establish that the RUF was under the superior authority of the Accused or the NPFL chain of command, or that they were instructed in NPFL terror tactics.

2567. The Accused supported the invasion of Sierra Leone in March 1991 and NPFL troops actively participated in it. However, the Prosecution failed to prove that the Accused participated in the planning of the invasion. The Prosecution also failed to prove that the support of the Accused for the invasion of Sierra Leone was undertaken pursuant to a common purpose to terrorize the civilian population. Rather, the evidence shows that the Accused and Sankoh had a common interest in fighting a common enemy, ULIMO, a Liberian insurgency group in Sierra Leone, and the Sierra Leonean Government forces which was supporting ULIMO.

2568. The Accused withdrew his NPFL troops from Sierra Leone after the fallout between the NPFL and RUF troops in 1992, culminating in Operations Top 20, Top 40, and Top Final. While the Defence maintains that the Accused had no further contact or cooperation with Sankoh after 1992 following Top Final, the Trial Chamber has found otherwise. Although the Liberia-Sierra Leone border was closed by ULIMO and the Sierra Leone Government forces, it remained porous, enabling the flow of arms, ammunition and other supplies from Liberia during the remainder of the pre-Indictment period. The Trial Chamber has found that the Accused provided arms and ammunition to Sankoh for an attack on Kono in November 1992, and that he advised Sankoh prior to and following the attack on Sierra Rutile. The Accused also asked Sankoh to send troops in 1993 to help him fight ULIMO.

2569. Having failed to prove the existence of a common plan formulated in Libya and Burkina Faso, the evidence relied on by the Prosecution indicates that during this pre-Indictment period Sankoh operated independently of the Accused, and while relying at times on his guidance and support, did not take orders from the Accused.

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

B. The Role of Intermediaries

2570. Before turning to the specific allegations of the Prosecution relating to the role of the Accused during the Indictment period, the Trial Chamber has considered generally the role of several intermediaries alleged to be acting on behalf of the Accused. The Trial Chamber notes that the roles of Benjamin Yeaten, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and Ibrahim Bah during the Indictment period are heavily disputed by the parties throughout their submissions. For this reason, the Trial Chamber has considered their roles on the basis of the evidence as a whole, and has drawn some preliminary conclusions with respect to each of them individually. These preliminary conclusions are subject to further consideration in the context of specific events and in light of specific evidence related to those events as it is considered by the Trial Chamber.

1. Benjamin Yeaten

Submissions of the Parties

2571. From 1995 until 1997 Benjamin Yeaten served as Deputy Director of the Special Security Service (“SSS”) of the Government of Liberia. After the Accused’s election to the presidency, Yeaten became the Director of the SSS.<sup>5556</sup> He was promoted to Deputy Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in around 2000, putting him in charge of the generals of the Liberian armed forces for combat taking place within Liberia.<sup>5557</sup>

2572. The Prosecution refers to Yeaten as the Accused’s “most trusted military man” and his “trusted subordinate”.<sup>5558</sup> When the RUF submitted a request for materiel to Yeaten he indicated that he would pass the request on to his “dad” Taylor, or “the father” or “the pa”,<sup>5559</sup> and the Prosecution describes him as a “skilled, vicious subordinate who was completely loyal to Taylor, carrying out all of Taylor’s directives without a second thought”.<sup>5560</sup> The Prosecution contends that the claim of the Defence that Yeaten engaged in trading of arms and ammunition without the Accused’s knowledge is “both implausible and incompatible with the Accused's own claims that his forces had no arms or ammunition to give because of disarmament.<sup>5561</sup>

2573. The Defence submits that “[d]ue to his access to President Taylor, Yeaten may have become more powerful than the vice-president and other ministers. Significantly, he became powerful enough that he could act without first receiving orders from Charles Taylor, and without Taylor learning of his actions”. In his supervisory capacity of the RUF Guesthouse in the second half of 1998, Yeaten was an intermediary between the RUF and the Accused, and possibly developed a “close personal relationship” with Bockarie during that time with “no hierarchy involved”.<sup>5562</sup>

2574. The Defence contends that under the directive of Yeaten, intermediaries such as Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag), Sampson Weywhee<sup>5563</sup>, and other unnamed individuals, delivered arms and ammunition to the RUF throughout 1998 and possibly into 1999. The Defence describes this alleged operation as a “private enterprise that was mutually beneficial to themselves, but unknown to President Taylor”.<sup>5564</sup> The Defence submits that the evidence shows that Yeaten was “established as an intermediary, but it is not clear how much was actually relayed back to the Accused about Yeaten's dealings with the RUF at the Guesthouse”, and that “even evidence to the effect that Yeaten gave Bockarie ammunition [...] stating that it was from Charles Taylor for Sankoh, says nothing about Taylor's actual role or knowledge. Thus, based on circumstantial and incredible evidence, Taylor cannot be held responsible for any ultra vires dealings between the RUF and Yeaten”.<sup>5565</sup>

2575. The Defence additionally submits that it is possible that the Accused was unaware of Yeaten's activities as from 1998 to 2003 Liberia was under threat from LURD and MODEL, and there were inadequate numbers of security personnel to patrol the border. The Accused had reason to send arms and ammunition with his own fighters to the border areas, “especially with Generals such as Yeaten and his SSS bodyguards. In a poverty-stricken, war-torn society it is quite understandable that these same people would look for any possible way to supplement their meagre income”. The Defence argues that nonetheless it is “not self-evident that Taylor should have known that some of it was given instead to the RUF by Yeaten”.<sup>5566</sup> Further, the Accused denies that he supplied arms or ammunition to the RUF during the Indictment period.<sup>5567</sup>

2576. Concerning Yeaten’s alleged role in this “private enterprise”, the Defence relies on evidence from the Accused, TF1-371, DCT-008, Moses Blah, TF1-567, Sam Kolley, Varmuyan Sherif, Abu Keita, Dauda Aruna Fornie, and Issa Sesay, as well as Exhibit P-018.

Evidence

Prosecution Witness Moses Blah

2577. Witness Moses Blah, Inspector General of the NPFL from 1990 to 1997,<sup>5568</sup> Liberian Ambassador to Libya and Tunisia following Taylor’s election until 2000,<sup>5569</sup> and Vice-President of Liberia from 2000 to 2003,<sup>5570</sup> testified that he first met Benjamin Yeaten in Tajura Camp in Libya when Yeaten was about 14 to 15 years old. Because Yeaten was very effective in training, Charles Taylor recognised him and drew him nearer to him by appointing him to be his bodyguard and to be director of certain units that would be close to the President at the time. Eventually Yeaten became the Director of the SSS. Yeaten maintained his relationship with Taylor until Taylor left Liberia.<sup>5571</sup> Only Taylor could give Yeaten orders. Blah stated that “[n]obody could disobey an order from Taylor. You would be punished severely, including myself. We could not disobey his orders”.<sup>5572</sup>

2578. Blah testified that in 2003 Yeaten took a group of Liberian men who had been wounded in battle to the Mahare River and executed them. Blah was informed about the event a few days later but he did not ask Taylor or Yeaten about it in part because Blah had limited authority if the Executive Mansion Guards were involved and because he was “not authorised, more especially when Benjamin Yeaten was involved”. Blah further testified that “[k]nowing [Yeaten] to be a crucial man and a most powerful man working with the President, I left that up to him. It was up to him to find it out by himself”.<sup>5573</sup>

2579. Blah stated that there were various commanders in charge of each and every unit but Yeaten was the overall commander and could move from unit to unit taking instructions and carrying messages from President Taylor.<sup>5574</sup> During the latter part of Taylor’s presidency “Yeaten grew so powerful that he did not even have regard for the Vice-President of Liberia [...] and the defence minister also was not considered to be anything in the face of Benjamin Yeaten and his powers”.<sup>5575</sup> However, Yeaten was not more powerful than Taylor.<sup>5576</sup>

2580. Blah testified that even the commander of one unit could not give orders to the commander of another, and that commanders did not take orders from him, even as Inspector General and even as Vice President of Liberia. Taylor “was the sole commander of everything, even the defence minister could not give orders at that time. [Taylor] was the sole commander-in-chief of the entire operations of the army”.<sup>5577</sup>

2581. Blah testified that in 2003 he had a conversation with Taylor concerning Sam Bockarie’s presence in Liberia, as Sierra Leone was searching for him. Blah advised Taylor to turn Bockarie over to the Sierra Leonean government in order for the Liberian Government to maintain “a good face”.<sup>5578</sup> Later Blah was driving back to Monrovia when he came upon a road block and could not pass through. Yeaten was at a nearby camp and asked to speak to Blah. Yeaten told Blah to look in his pick-up truck to see the mission he had been on the night before, and Blah saw the dead bodies of Sam Bockarie and another person. Yeaten said he was sending the pick-up with the corpses inside to the Chief in Monrovia. A week or two later, when they were back in Monrovia, Yeaten jokingly told Blah that he had killed Bockarie to destroy evidence so they would not be exposed, and that, in reference to Blah’s advice to Taylor concerning Bockarie, “[t]he way you were thinking was the wrong way”. When Blah arrived in Monrovia he went to White Flower and reported what he had seen. Taylor told him that it was not his, Blah's, business as it was a military operation.<sup>5579</sup>

Prosecution Witness Joseph Marzah

2582. Witness Joseph Marzah, an SSS member,<sup>5580</sup> testified that he made 20 to 40 trips to Sierra Leone carrying arms, ammunitions and artillery. He testified that these trips were undertaken "on the direct instructions of Charles Taylor". He further stated that Taylor led the "government that had a constitution" which governed the country, "anything we did was by his orders".<sup>5581</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

2583. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>5582</sup> testified that Issa Sesay had complained to him that Benjamin Yeaten had taken for himself $USD 30,000 from the proceeds of mining that was meant to go to Charles Taylor. Sesay confronted Yeaten who admitted that he did take the money, but he also said that he would pay it back.<sup>5583</sup> The witness further testified that he agreed that behaviour such as this by Yeaten and other "honourables" was indicative "of a general sense of indiscipline and private enterprise which pervaded much of the behaviour of many people involved in this conflict".<sup>5584</sup>

2584. TF1-371 also testified on cross-examination that the commanders were in a habit of bribing Yeaten so that they would not be delayed in their missions in Monrovia. More specifically, when Sam Bockarie would go to Monrovia, "because Mr Taylor can be very busy [...] he takes some time with Benjamin Yeaten, the commander, before he sees Mr Taylor. So, they had this habit of giving him a present, sometimes diamonds or money, to have [...] quick access".<sup>5585</sup> TF1-371 said that all access to Taylor for the RUF, including

In this exhibit, which is a report on the meeting that Sam Bockarie convened in order to report on the external mission to Burkina Faso in December 1998, Bockarie "inferred re that he went with a two and half carats (2 1/2 carats) diamond and some other items which he gave as present to

Prosecution Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie

2585. Dauda Aruna Fornie (“DAF”), an RUF radio operator<sup>5588</sup> who worked in Buedu from early 1998 until late April 1999,<sup>5589</sup> testified that throughout this period, Bockarie, through his radio operators, would contact Benjamin Yeaten or Taylor to request military supplies.<sup>5590</sup> Base 1 was the station that coordinated between Sam Bockarie and Mr Taylor. Sunlight would tell Bravo Zulu to inform Mosquito to switch on his satellite phone.<sup>5591</sup> Yeaten’s radio operator, Sunlight, would then respond that Bockarie should wait while Yeaten consulted with “the Papay”, or “the old man”<sup>5592</sup> or “Zero-Four-Seven”, which Fornie understood to refer to Taylor.<sup>5593</sup>

Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara

2586. Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>5594</sup> testified that Bockarie would send vehicles to collect deliveries of arms and ammunitions from Foya and bring them to Buedu. Civilians were used to carry loads from the Moa River. Bockarie would then send a message to his commanders “that he had brought ammunitions from Mr Charles Taylor”.<sup>5595</sup> Food, including rice, was also sent from Liberia, and Bockarie would send a message to the RUF that he had received food or ammunition - “whatever he get [sic] from Taylor”.<sup>5596</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

Prosecution Witness TF1-567

2587. Witness TF1-567, an RUF member,<sup>5597</sup> testified that the RUF Guesthouse was established in 1999, pursuant to Taylor's instruction. Sankoh appointed a caretaker of the Guesthouse with Benjamin Yeaten's agreement and told the caretaker that Benjamin Yeaten was his immediate boss because Yeaten was in Monrovia and because he was the security commander for Taylor. Sankoh also instructed the caretaker to take a record of everything that was going on. Yeaten instructed the caretaker that as he, Yeaten, was the security commander under Taylor's government, he would act as a "mediator" for any messages from Taylor because "his dad" Taylor had too many things to do to speak to them directly. The caretaker would also act as a "mediator" on behalf of the RUF for any messages from the RUF side. TF1-567 testified that when Issa Sesay wanted arms and ammunition, he would send the message, which the caretaker would take to Yeaten, and Yeaten would say "he will send it to his dad", meaning Taylor.<sup>5598</sup>

2588. TF1-567 testified that Sankoh instructed the caretaker to take "record of everything that was going on"<sup>5599</sup> but that Yeaten also instructed the caretaker that he should not keep any documents pertaining to any transaction between Taylor and the RUF. Yeaten explained that "he did not want there to be any proof in the future that would show a document between the RUF and Charles Taylor". Sometime in 2000, when Yeaten discovered that, despite his strict warning, the caretaker was maintaining records of materials, arms and ammunition that were being taken from the Guesthouse, Yeaten punished him by sending him to the front line in the Voinjama area. Yeaten informed Issa Sesay of this incident, and Sesay responded that as Yeaten and others were their "big brothers" the caretaker should follow their instructions.<sup>5600</sup>

2589. TF1-567 testified that in 2000 to 2001 Yeaten was the overall commander in charge in the Foya area. He knew this because Yeaten said that Taylor had appointed him to be the Joint Chief of Staff to command all the other front line commanders and generals.<sup>5601</sup> TF1-567 further testified that "[a]t all times when ammunition were given Benjamin Yeaten will say that it is his dad Charles Taylor who provided them”<sup>5602</sup> and “as far as I was concerned, I knew that whatever arms and ammunition that were coming from Benjamin Yeaten and he himself told me, I knew that they were from Charles Taylor.”<sup>5603</sup>

Prosecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif

2590. Witness Varmuyan Sherif, a former ULIMO-K fighter who was the Assistant Director of Operations for the SSS from August 1997 until the end of 1999, described the relationship between Taylor and Yeaten as being “like father and son”. Sherif testified that “Mr Taylor, made it clear to all of us, the SS members, that Benjamin Yeaten is like his son.” He said that if Yeaten did anything, he would not be questioned and that “sometimes in fact he did certain things before taking instruction from Mr Taylor and, even when Mr Taylor got to know about it, he would just forget about it”. He mentioned one occasion when the Special Court of Sierra Leone wanted to arrest Taylor in Ghana, and within an hour Yeaten had executed two of the ministers in Liberia and arrested the Vice-President. When Taylor came, he explained publicly on the radio to the Liberian people that they should consider this as just a mistake.<sup>5604</sup>

The Accused

2591. The Accused testified that he met Benjamin Yeaten in 1987 in Libya because he was one of his special forces who were taken to the base. Taylor did not closely follow the “progression” of Yeaten through the ranks until 1994, when Yeaten was identified to him as someone who showed promise in command capabilities throughout the combat period. The Accused testified that prior to this, he had met Yeaten many times. He thought that Yeaten spoke Gio and English, and was one of the few members of the Special Forces who had a high school education.<sup>5605</sup>

2592. From 1994 to 1995, when the Accused was serving on the Council of State, Yeaten was the Deputy Director of the SSS.<sup>5606</sup> He became Director of the SSS fairly quickly after the election of the Accused as President of Liberia. As Director of the SSS, he was responsible for the personal protection of the President, his family, and other senior members of the government and their families, VIPs, and all very important individuals within the government. According to the laws of Liberia, he reported directly to the Minister of State. The Accused testified that he could order Yeaten to instead report directly to him, but that he would not, as he thought that would be in violation of the law.<sup>5607</sup> The Accused chose Yeaten to be the Director of the SSS because he had fought brilliantly during the war, and had taken not just military but security and secret service training. He was recommended highly by the military and by the Minister of State during the vetting process, and he was nominated by the Senate.<sup>5608</sup>

2593. The Accused testified that the amount of contact he had with Yeaten depended on when he wanted to see Yeaten, as the Director of the SSS did not have any direct physical reason to be with the President. The Accused estimated that he would meet with Yeaten once or twice a week if he had to speak to him about a specific matter, but it was not a part of Yeaten's official duties to meet with him. However, beginning in 1998 Yeaten began to report to the Accused concerning specific assignments related to Sam Bockarie and "dealing with military situation [sic] of that sort". Otherwise Yeaten was only obligated to report to the Minister of State.<sup>5609</sup>

2594. The Accused elaborated on Yeaten's responsibilities towards Bockarie as falling under the duties of the SSS as "VIP Protection". The Accused explained further that when the RUF wanted to come to Liberia, the SSS was put in charge of the entry and exit of those military personnel into Liberia and their protection. Written reports regarding this were submitted to the Ministry of State, and the Accused would read them and ask to see Yeaten in his capacity as Director of the SSS if he had any questions. The Accused did not believe that Yeaten had contact with Bockarie until Bockarie's first trip to Monrovia to meet the Accused in September 1998.<sup>5610</sup>

2595. When questioned about the importance of the position of Director of the SSS, the Accused agreed that it was an important position as this person was charged with protecting the President's life. The Accused did not agree that the position required someone who was extremely loyal, and said instead that "we tried to make [the SSS] professional", and that Yeaten was vetted and selected based on his qualifications at the time. The Accused agreed that Yeaten was loyal to him on a personal level from NPFL times, but that his loyalty lay first with the Republic and that he was also loyal to his President.<sup>5611</sup>

2596. During direct examination, the Accused was questioned on the testimony of Prosecution Witness TF1-579, who had testified that on his second trip to Liberia, which he took with Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag), Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), and Sampson Weah, they drove to Benjamin Yeaten's house in Monrovia. Yeaten told them to follow him "to the warehouse which was right at Taylor's house, on the left hand side" and which was located just up the hill from Yeaten's house. Yeaten gave a list of things that they needed to the G4 section. The Commander there was Moses Duoh.<sup>5612</sup>

2597. The Accused denied that there was a warehouse attached to his residence in Monrovia and that Duoh was the G4. He stated that Duoh was one of the workers in the SSS building "located outside [...] in the vicinity of White Flower", which was separated by a fence from White Flower. A man named Kai Sony was in charge of the warehouse, which was a two story building that hosted the SSS. On the top floor were the SSS offices, and on the bottom floors were where the SSS kept the supplies that they needed for presidential protection, including food. This warehouse was under the command of the SSS Director, Benjamin Yeaten. The Accused stated that Yeaten's house is "a little, it's far" and then stated that the house is located several houses away from White Flower. The Accused did not have direct access to the warehouse.<sup>5613</sup>

2598. The Accused was read the testimony of Moses Blah that "Benjamin was moving everywhere, wherever there was fighting. I didn't know whether it was by the order of the

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

President or himself [...] He became so powerful that he could do anything and go anywhere”.<sup>5614</sup> The Accused agreed that Yeaten could go practically anywhere, and stated that Blah was referring to the time period in 2001 and the war in Lofa against LURD. At this time Yeaten was not only Director of the SSS but a General, and one of the brave people that could go to the front lines. Further, Yeaten was moving to any place where there was major combat and he did not require the Accused’s consent to move around. At this time the SSS was mostly being run by Montgomery, Yeaten’s Deputy, and during the tough part of the war Yeaten was made Deputy Chairman of the Joint Chiefs in Charge of Combat. Therefore, he visited the different front lines and divisional headquarters.<sup>5615</sup>

2599. Concerning Blah’s testimony that Yeaten “became so powerful that he could do anything”, the Accused testified that he did not claim to know everything that Yeaten did, nor did he claim that he was aware of, or that he ordered Yeaten to do everything that he did. However, “as far as being so powerful that he could do anything within the law that reached to me, yes, there are a lot of things that he could do and a lot of things that Moses was powerful too that he could do”. When asked again by Defence counsel whether “Yeaten was all powerful and could do anything”, the Accused replied “No”.<sup>5616</sup>

2600. The Accused addressed Blah’s evidence that Yeaten could go anywhere with Taylor’s permission, and that “Each time you see Benjamin you will see the chief. He had greater power in a way. The only person that was above Benjamin at that time that I know was President Taylor. Nobody else”. The Accused responded that Blah saw things from a different perspective, and was “saying this in the context of Benjamin’s refusal to take his order to carry out a coup d’etat” but that this “other power in the land” did not exist.<sup>5617</sup>

2601. The Accused was also questioned on the testimony of Varmuyan Sherif that Taylor and Yeaten had a very cordial relationship like father and son and that because of this “Yeaten would not be questioned”. The Accused agreed that there were times when Yeaten acted without first seeking instructions from him because “[i]f a President had to operate with everyone calling and getting instructions before he could take certain crucial decisions I don't think the President would have a minute of his own. So most individuals in fact are trained to take "prudent decisions". The Accused added that there was nothing cordial between Yeaten and himself. Yeaten was a general, "[he] performed".<sup>5618</sup>

<sup>5615</sup> Charles Ghankay Taylor, Transcript 4 November 2009, p. 31108. The Accused testified that by June 2003 Yeaten was not just Director of the SSS but also the Deputy Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and he was in charge of the military operations of the entire Republic. Prior to this he carried the rank of lieutenant general but he did not perform with the army (Charles Ghankay Taylor, Transcript 19 November 2009, p. 32139).

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

2602. In reply to the evidence of TF1-567 of Yeaten's role as a mediator between the caretaker of the RUF Guesthouse and Taylor, the Accused testified that he disagreed with the characterisation of Yeaten as a mediator, and said that it was more accurate to say that Yeaten, as the Director of the SSS, was "just a security responsible for their protection".<sup>5619</sup>

2603. The Accused testified that during the time that Yeaten, as Director of the SSS, had "total" involvement in supervising the RUF Guesthouse, Yeaten and Bockarie developed a close relationship.<sup>5620</sup> The Accused further testified that Bockarie was a good friend of Yeaten and would visit him from time to time.<sup>5621</sup> However, Taylor also testified that he never appointed Yeaten to be "an immediate boss for the Guesthouse". The Accused explained that he would not have needed Yeaten to pass messages to him from the caretaker of the RUF Guesthouse, because at that time the Accused was in direct contact with Foday Sankoh, who would only needed to have called him from Freetown.<sup>5622</sup>

2604. When questioned about TF1-375's testimony that Benjamin Yeaten was the second man to the President, the Accused countered that this was total nonsense, asserting that "[t]here were a whole line of other people that [...] had ten times more power than the SSS Director. Far, far, far more", including the Vice President, the Speaker, the Defence Minister, and the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces.<sup>5623</sup>

2605. The Accused also testified that he never provided Sam Bockarie with arms or ammunition.<sup>5624</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

2606. When read the testimony of TF1-371 that RUF Commanders were in the habit of bribing Yeaten with diamonds and other items in order to facilitate quick access to Taylor, the Accused testified that if he had known that Yeaten was accepting these bribes he would have never been SSS Director. The Accused queried the necessity of such a bribe, asking “why would he want to pay Benjamin when either I sent for him or I know he is coming?” He further explained that I can see now that there were some things going on that I didn't know about. I would not have known that. But it's possible that they would have done that because [...] at this time there is a lot of corruption, there is a lot of things going on, but I am not aware of it.<sup>5625</sup>

2607. Further, when asked whether in hindsight he should have dismissed Yeaten rather than allowing him to maintain his position until Taylor left Liberia in August 2003, the Accused responded that “a person is innocent until proven guilty” and said he would reappoint him again today unless there was factual evidence that Yeaten had been charged and convicted of a crime, that “[u]ntil now and up until there was nothing before me or that had been brought in any way that would have led me to not reappointing him”.<sup>5626</sup>

2608. When questioned concerning the testimony of Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah stating that the RUF and the government of Liberia were like brothers and sisters, Witness DCT-008, a Liberian radio operator,<sup>5627</sup> countered that it was incorrect because the connection between Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten was a personal connection, and not because Yeaten was representing the interests of the government of Liberia.<sup>5628</sup> He also denied Kabbah's testimony that there were daily communications from the RUF to Taylor through Sunlight stating that “Sunlight being used by Benjamin Yeaten to communicate with the RUF was not to the knowledge of the President of Liberia”.<sup>5629</sup>

The Accused believed that it was highly probable that officials in his government, such as Yeaten who he “was hearing about” were engaged in such activities.

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

2609. DCT-008 testified that Yeaten had told Sunlight, a radio operator assigned to Yeaten, that Charles Taylor did not know about the relationship between Yeaten and Bockarie, and that Sunlight must also keep it a secret.<sup>5630</sup> Yeaten said that this secret should be disclosed to no one, because if Taylor discovered it, he would arrest Yeaten and “finish” him. Yeaten also threatened that he would “deal with” whoever disclosed this secret first.<sup>5631</sup>

2610. DCT-008 testified that there was never an occasion when Yeaten himself used the radio at Base 1 to communicate with the RUF, nor did he communicate on the radio on behalf of Liberia as he was afraid of being intercepted, and he did not know the communication codes.<sup>5632</sup> When asked whether in late 1998 there were communications between Base 1 in Monrovia and any other RUF stations, DCT-008 testified that the relationship between Bockarie and Yeaten was only between themselves, so the communication was only between Base 1 and Bravo Zulu 4 and was limited to the two of them.<sup>5633</sup>

2611. When asked why it was important to keep the communication between Bockarie and Yeaten secret, DCT-008 testified that after Bockarie’s first visit to Monrovia<sup>5634</sup> they became very close friends, and within this friendship they made secret deals between themselves. There were very many secret deals that Charles Taylor did not know about, mostly concerning the selling of ammunition to Bockarie for cash.<sup>5635</sup> These deals included Musa Cissé, who was also doing business with the RUF or with Bockarie at this time.<sup>5636</sup>

<sup>5630</sup> DCT-008 testified that Benjamin Yeaten told Sunlight that, “What I have told you should be kept to yourself and [sic] must not share it with any other government radio operator or anyone around you, not even your wife, because this relationship between myself and the friend over there”, that is Sam Bockarie, “the President does not know about it [...] and you should keep it as a secret to yourself”. He further went on to say that, “if this secret is disclosed to anyone and the President discovers this, I will be arrested by the President and I will be finished. But before the President deals with me, I would have dealt with that person first” (DCT-008, Transcript 24 August 2010, p. 47047). See also DCT-008 concerning the satellite phone conversations between Yeaten and Bockarie: “[Taylor], I believe, did not know about this communication. The reason is that, earlier, Ben had told Sampson, Sunlight, and those close to him that his relationship with Sam Bockarie was personal and secret, and [Taylor], or even the Government of Liberia, does not know about it, so they should be very careful so that they wouldn’t disclose this relationship to the President” (DCT-008, Transcript 24 August 2010, p. 47386).

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

2612. When asked to clarify that his testimony was that Yeaten “was stealing ammunition under the nose of the President of Liberia and selling it to the RUF”, DCT-008 responded affirmatively that Yeaten used to send people all around to collect ammunition including from the ex-Liberian Peace Council (“LPC”) in the south-eastern part of Liberia, that he would then sell to Bockarie without the knowledge of Taylor.<sup>5637</sup> DCT-008 further explained that things were difficult during this time and as a result there was a lot of corruption by officials in the government that Taylor was unaware of, including these ammunition sales. Taylor was also unaware that the ex-ULIMO members in Lofa County were selling ammunition to the RUF.<sup>5638</sup> For example, on one occasion Bockarie told Jungle, who told DCT-008, that Varmuyan Sherif, an ex-ULIMO fighter, had sold ammunition to him. Yeaten’s close bodyguards knew about these transactions so he instructed them to keep it very secret because if Taylor found out he would arrest and prosecute Yeaten, and Yeaten himself would “deal with” whoever exposed the secret before he was arrested.<sup>5639</sup>

2613. When asked how Taylor would not have gotten word of these clandestine sales as there would have been many people involved in handing the ammunition over to the RUF and transporting it out of Liberia, DCT-008 testified that Taylor was too far up the line to know what was going on. Further, because Yeaten, as Director of the SSS, and Cissé, as the President’s Chief of Protocol, were high-ranking government officials, they and even their bodyguards would not be searched when they were driving around. Therefore these people used their positions to carry out these secret transactions without the knowledge of the President. DCT-008 testified that he knew these things because he travelled with Yeaten and saw that when they came to checkpoints, no one would check their car. He added that Yeaten was highly respected and that people feared him a lot.<sup>5640</sup>

2614. DCT-008 testified that these secret deals began in late 1998 after Bockarie’s first visit to Monrovia. Because Bockarie and Yeaten were very close, Yeaten would send ammunition using Jungle or Sampson who would then take the ammunition to Bockarie. On

<sup>5637</sup> DCT-008 testified that Yeaten would send people to collect ammunition in the south-eastern part of Liberia, specifically Grand Gede, Sinoe, and Maryland because before the 1997 election those areas were occupied by the LPC (DCT-008, Transcript 27 August 2010, pp. 47389, 47393).

<sup>5638</sup> DCT-008 testified that Sampson told him that prior to the Liberian presidential election in 1997, ULIMO-K had not completely disarmed. Therefore, after the election Sampson and Jungle used to go there to buy ammunition from them (DCT-008, Transcript 24 August 2010, p. 47394).

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

some occasions they would pick up the ammunition from Yeaten or Cissé's yard at night. DCT-008 testified that "we" discussed these things, and that on most occasions Jungle would tell him about these things.<sup>5641</sup>

2615. The movement was always done at night by Sampson and Jungle because that is who Yeaten normally sent, and sometimes they would be escorted by Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag), who was one of the drivers. Sometimes they would use Yeaten's pick-up and sometimes they used a four-tyred Nissan pick-up. Concerning the amount of ammunition, DCT-008 testified that on one occasion when he saw them leaving with ammunition, they had approximately five boxes of AK-47 rounds and a few RPG rockets in rice bags.<sup>5642</sup>

2616. During the times that Jungle came to Base 1, Jungle did not transmit any messages on behalf of Benjamin Yeaten.<sup>5643</sup> Sometimes Sella from Base 1 asked for Jungle but Jungle was absent. However, there was one occasion in 1998 when Sella gave a message to Sunlight asking him to tell Jungle that Bockarie wanted him to go to Cissé and tell him that they needed food. Sunlight gave the message to Jungle, who then left.<sup>5644</sup> Furthermore, at one point Bockarie, who was in Sierra Leone, contacted Jungle, who was at Base 1, and told him to tell Cissé and Yeaten that they were running out of food and asked for their assistance. This occurred after Jungle's first communication with Sella. DCT-008 is unaware of whether Yeaten or Bockarie responded to this request.<sup>5645</sup>

2617. DCT-008 testified that the secret deals or radio contact between Bockarie and Yeaten ended in December 1999 when Bockarie moved to Liberia to seek refuge for himself and for his family from the Liberian Government, because the deals were only between Bockarie and Yeaten, and not the RUF and Yeaten.<sup>5646</sup>

2618. Issa Sesay, senior RUF commander,<sup>5647</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>5648</sup> testified that around January or February 2000 Foday Sankoh appointed a caretaker of the RUF Guesthouse.<sup>5649</sup> As far as Sesay was aware, the caretaker's duties were limited to taking care of the house. He was not a radio operator, he did not have any assignments relating to the procurement of ammunition from any source, and did not have custody of any ammunition. Sesay testified that the caretaker only had contact with Yeaten when Sesay was in Monrovia and Yeaten came to the Guesthouse to take Sesay to Roberts International Airport. The caretaker also did not run any errands specifically relating to the delivery of ammunition from Liberia to Sierra Leone during the time that he was based in Monrovia.<sup>5650</sup>

Defence Witness Sam Kolleh

2619. Sam Kolleh testified that he agreed with the statement that “corruption can occur in any army where people are selling small amounts of arms and ammunition for their own profit” but denied that the RUF sold ammunition.<sup>5651</sup> He said he did not know who Benjamin Yeaten was, and had never met him or heard about him.<sup>5652</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-018

2620. Exhibit P-018 is a Report of the Panel of Experts Established by Resolution 1306-S/2000/1195, adopted on 20 December 2000. In pertinent part, the report describes efforts made by the UN and ECOWAS to stop the trade of arms in West Africa in 1997 and 1998. It also states that

[g]uerilla armies receive weapons through interlinked networks of traders, criminals and insurgents moving across borders. Arms also travel from one unstable zone to another, and rebel movements or criminal gangs in one country sell their arms to groups they are aligned with elsewhere. In other instances governments may see opportunities for their own regional ambitions in West Africa, supplying rebel groups with weapons in order to further these ambitions [...] Few States in the region have the resources or the infrastructure to tackle smuggling, a situation that creates opportunities for the smuggling of weapons across all major borders in the region. Officials acknowledge the existence of a large and largely uncontrolled informal weapons trade and outright illicit trafficking. The extent of such practices, far beyond normal levels of informal trade, aggravate corruption and criminalization throughout the region.<sup>5653</sup>

Deliberations

2621. Both Prosecution and Defence witnesses testified that Yeaten was extremely powerful but still subject to the Accused's authority. Moses Blah, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be a credible witness,<sup>5654</sup> said Yeaten had no regard for the Vice-President or the Defence Minister and called him "the most powerful man working with the President".<sup>5655</sup> The Accused agreed, responding to Blah's testimony, that Yeaten was powerful and able to move around without Taylor's consent, but when asked whether Yeaten was "all powerful and could do anything", the Accused replied "No".<sup>5656</sup> The Accused notably downplayed Yeaten's power, saying that "[t]here were a whole line of other people that [...] had ten times more power than the SSS Director. Far, far, far more".<sup>5657</sup>

2622. The Trial Chamber notes that when asked whether in hindsight he should have dismissed Yeaten, the Accused replied that that he would appoint him again today unless there was factual evidence that Yeaten had been charged and convicted of a crime, and that then and now "there was nothing before me or that had been brought in any way that would have led me to not reappointing him".<sup>5658</sup> The Trial Chamber finds this testimony of the Accused inconsistent with a belief that Yeaten was trading arms and ammunitions without his knowledge.

2623. Varmuyan Sherif characterised the relationship between the Accused and Yeaten as one of father and son and said that there were times that he did things "even before taking instruction from Mr Taylor" but that Taylor, upon learning this, would "just forget about it". The Trial Chamber notes its finding that Sherif is a generally credible witness.<sup>5659</sup> The Accused agreed that there were times when Yeaten acted without seeking instructions from him but explained that this was a normal delegation of decision-making as the President would not have time for everyone to call and get instruction before taking action. The Trial Chamber notes that in neither Sheriff's nor the Accused's evidence on this point is there the suggestion that the actions taken were covert rather than simply without specific authorisation, and recalls Blah's testimony that it was rare for someone to disobey Taylor as they would be severely punished.<sup>5660</sup> It is clear from the evidence that Yeaten had a close relationship with the Accused, which bypassed the line of reporting to the Minister of State referred to by the Accused in his testimony and emboldened Yeaten to take action without prior direction from the Accused.

2624. There is also evidence that Yeaten did certain things on the Accused's behalf that were kept from others, though not from the Accused. Blah recalled his encounter with Yeaten after Blah had advised Taylor to turn Bockarie over to Sierra Leone. Yeaten showed him Bockarie's corpse and told him "The way you were thinking was the wrong way". When he reported back to Taylor, Taylor told Blah this was not his business. Similarly, TF1-567, whom the Trial Chamber has previously found to be a generally credible witness,<sup>5661</sup> testified that Yeaten punished the caretaker of the RUF Guesthouse for maintaining records of dealings between the RUF and Taylor, which Yeaten had warned him not to keep.<sup>5662</sup> There is no indication in his testimony that these private dealings did not involve the Accused. TF1-567 repeatedly maintained in cross-examination that Yeaten himself always said that the arms and ammunition in question came from Taylor.<sup>5663</sup> When the caretaker of the RUF Guesthouse sent messages from Sesay to Taylor seeking arms and ammunition, Yeaten would say "he will send it to his dad".<sup>5664</sup>

2625. The Trial Chamber notes that DCT-008 is the only witness who testified that Yeaten's arms trading was being carried out independently of and covertly from the Accused.<sup>5665</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the testimony of DCT-008 must be treated with caution and requires corroboration<sup>5666</sup> and notes that the testimony of the Accused does not corroborate this testimony of DCT-008.

2626. Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes the evidence contradicting DCT-008's testimony, such as the testimony of Dauda Aruna Fornie that when Bockarie contacted Yeaten to request military supplies through his radio operators,<sup>5667</sup> Yeaten's radio operator Sunlight would respond that Bockarie should wait while Yeaten consulted with "Zero-Four-Seven", which Fornie understood to refer to Taylor.<sup>5668</sup> Perry Kamara testified that Bockarie would send messages to his commanders "that he had brought ammunitions from Charles Taylor",<sup>5669</sup> and TF1-567 testified that Yeaten would say when ammunition was given to them "that it is his dad Charles Taylor who provided them".<sup>5670</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Fornie, Kamara and TF1-567 are all credible witnesses.<sup>5671</sup> At the same time, the Trial Chamber finds no corroboration of DCT-008's evidence that Yeaten was acting independently of the Accused, while there is substantial evidence that Yeaten was representing, and was perceived to be representing, the Accused.

2627. The Defence also relies for support of its submission that Yeaten was acting independently of the Accused in arms transactions on the evidence of Prosecution Witness TF1-371 that "a general sense of indiscipline and private enterprise" spread through the actions of many involved in the conflict,<sup>5672</sup> as well as Exhibit P-018, a United Nations Panel of Experts Report which states that there was a significant amount of materiel being traded informally in a corrupt and uncontrolled environment.<sup>5673</sup> The Trial Chamber does not consider that this evidence rebuts the direct evidence that Yeaten was acting with the Accused's knowledge and direction.

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

2628. TF1-371, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be a generally credible witness,<sup>5674</sup> also testified that Yeaten took some money that was meant to go to Taylor and that when confronted, Yeaten admitted taking the money but said he would pay it back.<sup>5675</sup> TF1-371 further testified that Yeaten was regularly bribed with diamonds and money to get quick access to Taylor. This evidence indicates corruption in Yeaten's conduct. However, it does not implicate Yeaten in covert arms trading independently of the Accused. To the contrary, TF1-371 testified that Yeaten pocketed the mining proceeds destined for Taylor.

Findings

2629. In light of these considerations, the Trial Chamber finds that the Defence arguments and the evidence of DCT-008 do not in themselves establish that Yeaten was engaged in the trade of arms and ammunition for the RUF independently and without the knowledge of the Accused. More specific allegations relating to the role of Yeaten and the role of the Accused in transactions for arms and ammunitions will be addressed in the context of the Trial Chamber's consideration of those transactions.

Submissions of the Parties

to the Accused from RUF, AFRC/RUF territories,<sup>5681</sup> and materiel from the Accused to the RUF, AFRC/RUF forces.<sup>5682</sup> In this way, Tamba acted as the Accused's "eyes and ears",<sup>5683</sup> spending a considerable amount of time in AFRC/RUF territory during the time crimes against civilians were being committed.<sup>5684</sup> The Prosecution further submits that Tamba was killed by the Accused's men after the indictment against the Accused was issued, as Tamba was a key liaison between the Accused and the RUF throughout the Indictment period.<sup>5685</sup> The Prosecution relies upon witnesses TF1-371, TF1-579, TF1-567, Dauda Aruna Fornie, TF1-375, TF1-585, Jabaty Jaward, TF1-516, Mohamed Kabbah, John Vincent, Mustapha Mansaray, TF1-539, Joseph Marzah, Suwandi Camara, Abu Keita, Augustine Mallah, TF1-367, Isaac Mongor, TF1-168, Karmoh Kanneh, DCT-008, and Albert Saidu as well as exhibits P-045A-B, P-068, P-153A-B, P-163, P-069 and P-600C in support of its allegations.

2631. The Defence challenges the Prosecution's evidence that Tamba was present in Kenema from May 1997 until the Intervention in February 1998, or that he delivered ammunition to the RUF during this period, arguing that the RUF's only source of ammunition at that time was the AFRC.<sup>5686</sup> The Defence also disputes the evidence that Daniel Tamba was a liaison between the Accused and Sam Bockarie.<sup>5687</sup> According to the Defence, it was Yeaten who coordinated with Tamba, as the Accused did not know Tamba and had no contact with him, and that Tamba and Bockarie formed their own relationship based on the time they spent together, and their tribal links.<sup>5688</sup> The Defence notes the significant body of evidence that arms and ammunition were delivered to the RUF throughout 1998 into 1999 under Yeaten. However, the Defence avers that Tamba, and others involved, acted independently of the Accused transporting arms and ammunition in the operation of their own private enterprise without the Accused's knowledge.<sup>5689</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

2633. The Defence relies upon the Accused, DCT-008, John Vincent, Sam Kolley, Issa Sesay, Jabaty Jaward, TF1-371, TF1-567, TF1-516, TF1-585 and Exhibit D-316 in support of its submissions.

Prosecution Witness TF1-579

2634. Witness TF1-579, an SSS member,<sup>5692</sup> identified Jungle in Exhibit P-153A and Confidential Exhibit P-068.<sup>5693</sup> TF1-579 testified that around 1990 or 1991, he first came across Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), in Gbarnga, when Jungle was assigned to Sankoh. The witness saw Jungle again around the time of the Camp Johnson Road incident in September 1998,<sup>5694</sup> when the witness, Tamba and Sampson Weah brought ammunition, including grenades, 106 rockets,<sup>5695</sup> LAR rounds and AK-47 rounds, to Sam Bockarie in Buedu.<sup>5696</sup> The witness knew Jungle to be Sankoh’s senior aide-de-camp and the chief liaison officer between the RUF and NPFL.<sup>5697</sup> The witness testified that Tamba also used to receive $USD 400 in pay from the SSS, and was issued an SSS ID card.<sup>5698</sup> The witness also testified that, prior to the September 1998 trip to bring ammunition to Bockarie, Jungle had been bringing <sup>5694</sup> TF1-579, Transcript 5 November 2008, pp. 19793-19794, 19830. The Trial Chamber notes that the witness could not provide a year, but is satisfied based on the testimony of other witnesses that the Camp Johnson Road incident that the witness is referring to occurred in 1998.

<sup>5695</sup> The witness described “106 rockets” as a “very long rocket”, which the Trial Chamber has distinguished from a quantity of 106 rockets (TF1-579, Transcript 5 November 2008, pp. 19832-19833).

The witness explained that the NPFL became the NPRAG after the Accused became president of Liberia, but referred to the NPFL and NPRAG synonymously throughout his testimony.

ammunition to Sierra Leone on previous trips.<sup>5699</sup> According to the witness, in 1998, Tamba lived in a house that Bockarie rented at the Young Women's Christian Association ("YWCA") in Monrovia with his family, the witness, Joseph Marzah and Sampson Weah.<sup>5700</sup> The witness further testified that "Jungle was one of Mosquito's main men" and an RUF member,<sup>5701</sup> and that he took orders directly from Yeaten and Taylor.<sup>5702</sup> The witness explained that the RUF and NPFL were "one" at that point, meaning that the RUF commanders could go to Monrovia to a special guesthouse and the NPFL could go to RUF controlled areas.<sup>5703</sup>

Prosecution Witness Karmoh Kanneh

2636. In 1998, after the Intervention, the witness was present at a meeting where Sam Bockarie told Johnny Paul Koroma and the AFRC that Jungle was Taylor's representative in RUF territory and the witness concluded that Jungle was the person that linked the RUF to

Taylor.<sup>5711</sup> Jungle spoke and buttressed Bockarie's comments and said that "he would do his utmost best to see that things worked out well".<sup>5712</sup> On cross-examination, the witness clarified that during that meeting Sankoh told the men that Jungle was Taylor's representative, but the witness did not know if that had been arranged through Taylor. The witness understood that Jungle was Taylor's "eye in the movement", and before becoming Taylor's representative, he was an NPFL member.<sup>5713</sup>

2637. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>5714</sup> testified that he met Dennis Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) in Freetown around October 1997.<sup>5715</sup> Tamba came from Kenema to meet Sesay, who told the witness that Tamba was a liaison between the RUF and NPFL.<sup>5716</sup> The witness also learned from Foday Sankoh that Tamba had been a runner between the RUF and NPFL in 1992. In addition to Sesay's statements, the witness also learned, through his interactions with "other securities", like Sampson and Marzah, in 1998, that Tamba was a liaison between the RUF and NPFL.<sup>5717</sup> The witness understood that Jungle was a member of Mr Taylor's securities, and later learned that Jungle had been with Musa Cissé before he was "recognized" by Mr Taylor.<sup>5718</sup>

Taylor.<sup>5721</sup> The witness stated it was no secret that they did so as they were part of the senior security of Taylor, working with his SSS director.<sup>5722</sup>

2639. Witness TF1-567, an RUF member,<sup>5723</sup> testified that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), a Kissi Liberian, was not an RUF fighter. The witness first knew Jungle in 1992, when he came with Foday Sankoh to Gbarnga. Later, the witness saw Jungle “close” to Sam Bockarie, and later again with Foday Sankoh.<sup>5724</sup> The witness testified that at the end of 1997 he visited Bockarie in Kenema and met Daniel Tamba, who told the witness that Charles Taylor sent him and that he told Bockarie not to be too involved in the AFRC government.<sup>5725</sup>

2640. The witness stated that after diamonds were taken from Johnny Paul Koroma, he met Bockarie in Buedu, who had just returned from Monrovia with Tamba and other Liberian securities. Bockarie introduced them as “the Liberian brothers sent by Charles Taylor”. Tamba and Marzah were wearing blue/black overalls, and SOD was written on the side of the pocket. Later, Tamba told the witness that SOD meant “Special Operations Division”, which was a police branch directly under Taylor. Thereafter, the witness saw the Liberians at other occasions when he visited Buedu. Sampson, Tamba and others used to come to Buedu, and according to what they told the witness, they came with a truck which contained food, arms and ammunition from Taylor.<sup>5726</sup>

2641. TF1-567 also testified that when the RUF delegation was in Lomé for the peace negotiations, Tamba and Ibrahim Bah went to Lomé to speak to Sankoh on two occasions. During Tamba’s first visit, the witness overheard him telling Sankoh that Charles Taylor had sent him to come and see him to find out how the conditions were. The witness did not

2642. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie ("DAF"), an RUF radio operator,<sup>5728</sup> testified that Jungle was part of the Liberian SS unit that was with Yeaten, a direct security to Yeaten and "one of the liaisons from the Liberian side" between Yeaten and Sam Bockarie, or the RUF directly.<sup>5729</sup> Jungle frequently escorted ammunition from Monrovia to Sierra Leone and there were only a few trips where materials were brought to Sierra Leone in which Jungle was not involved.<sup>5730</sup> Fornie also testified that Jungle visited Lomé during the negotiations.<sup>5731</sup>

Prosecution Witness Joseph Marzah

2643. Witness Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag), an SSS member,<sup>5732</sup> testified that Jungle was "one of the key men operating under [Marzah] from the directive from Charles Taylor. He used to transport the ammo and arms to Freetown".<sup>5733</sup>

about a year.<sup>5738</sup> Jungle then crossed through Guinea and into Liberia, and became part of Charles Taylor's securities.<sup>5739</sup> The next time that Jaward saw Jungle was in 1998 at Sam Bockarie's house in Kenema.<sup>5740</sup> At that time, Jungle was a coordinator between Sam Bockarie and Charles Taylor, "especially in terms of the arms deal".<sup>5741</sup> Later, when the witness went to Monrovia in 2000, he "recognised" Jungle as an SSS.<sup>5742</sup> Jaward testified that Jungle was well known "as one of the members of the Special Security Services of Charles Taylor",<sup>5743</sup> and Jaward personally knew that Jungle was an SSS member because Jungle "always used to say it".<sup>5744</sup> Jaward further testified that Colonel Jungle was one of Benjamin Yeaten's bodyguards who came with Yeaten to Gbankoi around 2002 or 2003.<sup>5745</sup>

2645. The witness testified that Colonel Jungle was one of the escorts that brought supplies of arms and ammunition and food from Liberia to Buedu in 1998 and 1999, under Charles Taylor's instructions.<sup>5746</sup> He testified that the escorts used to "express their relationships" with Charles Taylor's government in Liberia when they came.<sup>5747</sup> He said that Jungle went to Buedu once in a while, and sometimes he would spend some time there before returning to Liberia, as he had a girlfriend in Buedu.<sup>5748</sup>

2646. On cross-examination, the witness affirmed his prior statement to the Prosecution that, after Bockarie left Sierra Leone for Liberia in 1999, "Colonel Jungle came with [...] additional messages from" Taylor to Bockarie, that "Bockarie supporters could either be trained as ATU and put on salary, or they could stay on their own in Liberia, where they would not be protected by anyone".<sup>5749</sup>

Prosecution Witness Augustine Mallah

2647. Witness Augustine Mallah, a security officer to Mike Lamin from 1996 to disarmament,<sup>5750</sup> testified that when he was in Zogoda and Danané in 1994, he heard about CO Jungle from RUF commanders like Mosquito, Superman, and Issa in the Kailahun area. They told him that Jungle was a liaison and protocol officer who would go from Taylor's base in Gbarnga to Buedu, Kailahun District, and "from Sierra Leone, to Liberia and back".<sup>5751</sup> On the two occasions that the witness saw Jungle in Buedu, he was with two other people.<sup>5752</sup>

2648. Mallah clarified that Jungle was not permanently based in Buedu in 1998.<sup>5753</sup> Mallah further testified that in 1999, Jungle left the RUF,<sup>5754</sup> and from that point on, he was not familiar with the movements of Jungle. After Mosquito left Sierra Leone, he did not hear about Jungle anymore.<sup>5755</sup> On cross-examination, the witness testified that between December 1998 through to October 1999, Mosquito and Jungle moved ammunition between Liberia and Sierra Leone in spite of the border closure.<sup>5756</sup>

2650. The witness further testified that, in 1999, he saw Jungle with Bockarie, Varmuyan Sherif and a senior officer in a car going to the Executive Mansion.<sup>5764</sup> The witness testified that Jungle had a satellite phone.<sup>5765</sup>

2651. The witness became very close to Jungle until his death, before which Jungle explained that he was having personal problems with Bockarie in 2001.<sup>5766</sup> Jungle had said that Bockarie was side-lining him, and that he, Jungle, was the one who created contact between Taylor and Bockarie, that he talked to Taylor about Bockarie and the diamonds they used to give.<sup>5767</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-367

2652. Witness TF1-367, an RUF member,<sup>5768</sup> described Jungle as “Charles Taylor’s bodyguard and [...] a friend of the RUF”.<sup>5769</sup> Later he was a bodyguard in a special unit for Taylor, the SSU (Special Security Unit), which the witness knew from his own observation.<sup>5770</sup> The SSU had special black uniforms, which Jungle wore, and Jungle was friendly to all of the officers including the witness.<sup>5771</sup> The witness also saw Jungle in Liberia and Buedu, when ECOMOG was deployed in Lofa district before the AFRC coup.<sup>5772</sup> The witness further saw Jungle when Jungle met Issa Sesay in Sierra Leone during

2653. During cross-examination, the witness clarified that Jungle was an NPFL, who was also an RUF member because the NPFL and RUF were families.<sup>5774</sup>

2654. Witness TF1-516, an RUF radio operator,<sup>5775</sup> testified that Jungle was a Liberian soldier “working under command” from 50, who obtained commands from his chief, Charles Taylor.<sup>5776</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-585

Prosecution Witness Albert Saidu

2656. Witness Albert Saidu, an RUF adjutant from 1991 to 2001,<sup>5782</sup> also gave accounts of an RUF meeting in 1998, after they were “pushed out of the city”, in which Colonel Jungle and Ibrahim Bah were introduced as guests while sitting at a high table in front of the meeting facing the delegates. Colonel Jungle addressed the meeting saying that he was there to tell them that the relationship between the RUF and AFRC was recognised by Charles Taylor. Bah reiterated Jungle's speech, that Taylor sent them to prove to the RUF that he was still with them, and that the relationship between Taylor and the RUF was still strong.<sup>5783</sup>

Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

2657. Witness Mohamed Kabbah, an RUF radio operator,<sup>5784</sup> testified that Jungle became a member of the RUF during the Intervention. He explained that Jungle was part of the RUF since he was the one moving directly from Charles Taylor's mansion to the RUF with information and ammunition. He stated that even during the Junta regime, he saw Jungle going to Bockarie in Kenema, through Kailahun, because he was now part of the RUF. At that time there was no "war" and therefore Jungle would see Bockarie to "take whatever little things" Bockarie had. He did that until ECOMOG pushed the Junta out of power, but Jungle's movement even continued when Bockarie moved to Buedu.<sup>5785</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

2658. Witness TF1-168, an RUF member,<sup>5786</sup> testified that Jungle was an NPFL member that he met in 1993.<sup>5787</sup> After May 1996, the witness testified, Bockarie sent Jungle to Danané via Liberia to meet Corporal Sankoh in Abidjan.<sup>5788</sup> Sankoh gave Jungle $USD 7,000, of which $USD 2,000 was for food and $USD 5,000 for ammunition, which Jungle gave to Bockarie, who said that he could get ammunition from ULIMO fighters along the Sierra Leone-Liberian border.<sup>5789</sup> According to the witness, Sankoh knew Jungle was coming for the money because Bockarie told Sankoh on the radio that Jungle would come.<sup>5790</sup> During cross-examination, the witness testified that over time, Jungle became a trusted member of the RUF.<sup>5791</sup>

Prosecution Witness Abu Keita

2659. Witness Abu Keita, a former deputy chief of staff and commander of ULIMO-K who later became commander of the Scorpion Unit,<sup>5792</sup> identified Jungle in exhibits P-045A and P-045B.<sup>5793</sup> Keita testified that Jungle was a bodyguard to Benjamin Yeaten.<sup>5794</sup> According to Keita, Jungle only went to Sierra Leone when Yeaten sent him.<sup>5795</sup> Keita testified that he saw Jungle often during the couple of years that he was with the RUF in Sierra Leone.<sup>5796</sup> When in Liberia, Jungle reported to Yeaten, and when he would go to Sierra Leone, he would go to either Sam Bockarie or Issa Sesay.<sup>5797</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-539

2660. Witness TF1-539, a member of various fighting groups,<sup>5798</sup> testified that Colonel Jungle was an SSS or SS member, that he was always with Mosquito and that he represented the Liberian Government.<sup>5799</sup> The witness also referred to Colonel Jungle as one of “Bockarie’s men”.<sup>5800</sup> Sometime after March 1999<sup>5801</sup> the witness was arrested by the RUF. Upon his release, he travelled with Colonel Jungle and others to Kangama to see Johnny Paul Koroma.<sup>5802</sup> The meeting with Koroma was recorded and Jungle was given a cassette of the recording, to take to Monrovia to “His Excellency”.<sup>5803</sup> After the meeting, Jungle, the witness and others travelled to Buedu.<sup>5804</sup>

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

2661. Witness Isaac Mongor, an RUF senior commander,<sup>5805</sup> testified that Jungle was in Buedu as a liaison officer between the RUF and NPFL. Jungle carried messages and brought ammunition from Monrovia.<sup>5806</sup> In 1998, Jungle was part of the Executive Mansion guards, but the name later changed to the “SS unit”. Jungle told the witness that he reported to Mr Taylor.<sup>5807</sup>

The Accused

2662. The Accused testified that he did not personally know Jungle or Daniel Tamba and that the first time that he heard those names was before this Trial Chamber.<sup>5808</sup> The Accused did not recognise Jungle in the photographs identified by other witnesses during the Prosecution case.<sup>5809</sup> The Accused generally denied that Jungle worked directly with or for him, and that Jungle reported to or had any association with him.<sup>5810</sup>

2663. The Accused testified that the “Daniel Tamba” mentioned on a list of SSS personnel, Exhibit D-316,<sup>5811</sup> as a member of the “Presidential Advance Team”, was not the same individual known as Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and testified about by other witnesses.<sup>5812</sup> An individual who was the Accused’s runner and assumed the duties asserted by other witnesses to have been carried out by Jungle would have at least been at the rank of Major or

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

Lieutenant Colonel, and the “Daniel Tamba” listed in Exhibit D-316 had the rank of a Second Lieutenant, which was a very low rank.<sup>5813</sup> The Accused testified that he had no reason to disbelieve the evidence of other witnesses that there was an individual named Daniel Tamba or Jungle who was in the SSS, but he did not personally know that individual.<sup>5814</sup> The Accused also testified that Exhibit D-316 was not a complete listing of all SSS personnel. Rather it was an assignment roster of those that have responsibility with the President, either in escorting him or at his residence. He confirmed that every SSS member charged with the security of the President or VIPs was named in that document.<sup>5815</sup> When counsel asked whether the list was time specific, noting that Exhibit D-316 is dated 9 November 2001, the Accused confirmed that it was, but qualified his answer by explaining that while the individuals listed were not always assigned to the same duties listed in the document, the document faithfully represented the organisational structure of those responsible for the various duties and the persons generally responsible for this type of VIP protection.<sup>5816</sup>

2664. While acknowledging that Jungle may have been in the SSS, the Accused denied, as a number of Prosecution witnesses asserted, that Jungle served as his bodyguard or close protection officer.<sup>5817</sup> Referring to Exhibit D-316, he stated there was no such person named Jungle or Daniel Tamba on the list of persons assigned to the close protection unit of the SSS.<sup>5818</sup> Of the three men that Abu Keita testified were “close protection” to the President, Sampson, Jungle and Marzah, the Accused stated that he only knew Sampson as a cousin of Benjamin Yeaten and that all three were personal bodyguards to the SSS director, Benjamin Yeaten.<sup>5819</sup> Similarly, in response to the testimony of TF1-371, the Accused stated that although he was not certain whether Jungle was an SSS member, he was sure that Jungle never provided personal security for him.<sup>5820</sup>

2665. The Accused denied, as TF1-375 testified, that Jungle was a liaison between the Accused and Bockarie.<sup>5821</sup> The Accused stated that there was no need for a liaison between himself and Bockarie because whenever he wanted to communicate with Bockarie, he called him directly by radio, and all their communications were conducted via official channels. The Accused denied that Jungle established initial contact between himself and Bockarie, stating that instead, he received a letter in August 1998, from Ambassador Taigen Wantee that Sam Bockarie and Eddie Kanneh wanted to meet the Accused and with the approval of ECOWAS Committee of Five.<sup>5822</sup> The Accused also queried why there would be any necessity for “runners” such as Jungle, Marzah and Sampson, as TF1-371 testified, to facilitate communications between Bockarie and the Accused, stating that as of late 1998, he sent for Bockarie whenever he needed to and whenever Bockarie wanted to go to Liberia.<sup>5823</sup> The Accused further denied that he ever gave Jungle instructions over the radio to promote Bockarie or Johnny Paul Koroma.<sup>5824</sup>

2666. The Accused expressed scepticism that Jungle, who was “not even a commander in Lofa at the time of the [Liberian civil] war”, would then become a principal link between himself and the RUF.<sup>5825</sup> The Accused denied that Jungle carried ammunition or arms on his behalf to Sierra Leone,<sup>5826</sup> and that Jungle was his runner in relation to diamonds transactions.<sup>5827</sup> The Accused also denied that Jungle, Sampson and Junior were his envoys to Johnny Paul Koroma.<sup>5828</sup> In response to evidence from Albert Saidu that whenever RUF saw Jungle they were expecting Jungle to be coming directly from the Accused, the Accused denied that Jungle ever worked directly with him.<sup>5829</sup>

2668. The Accused testified that the only person that told the truth about Jungle before this Trial Chamber was TF1-168,<sup>5831</sup> who according to the Accused, testified that Jungle was “one of those men that were left behind after ULIMO cut off the NPFL. He was a Gissi boy who got in touch with his brother Sam Bockarie and they were together since 1993”.<sup>5832</sup> He believed that Jungle was like a brother to Bockarie because they were both Kissi.<sup>5833</sup> The Accused testified that Jungle was the deputy commander to “General Fayia” who was commanding the forces in Lofa at the time that ULIMO cut off border access to Sierra Leone.<sup>5834</sup> On the basis of information garnered during the course of the current proceedings,<sup>5835</sup> the Accused maintained throughout his testimony that Jungle was a member of the RUF since 1992 or 1993.<sup>5836</sup> The Accused accepted that because Jungle was Liberian, he could also pass easily between borders and “switch between the two”. Jungle was Kissi, located on the border between Liberia and Sierra Leone, which would explain why, as TF1-371 testified, he was able to speak both Liberian and Sierra Leonean dialects.<sup>5837</sup>

2669. Concerning Karmoh Kanneh’s evidence that Sankoh introduced Jungle to a meeting of Bockarie, Issa Sesay and others as the “pa’s representative” in 1996, the Accused recalled another Prosecution witness who testified that it was in fact Bockarie who introduced Jungle to Sankoh. In any case, the Accused maintained that if, according to TF1-168, Jungle joined the RUF around 1992 or 1993, they would have known him for four years before this point and would not have required any introduction.<sup>5838</sup> Similarly, the Accused noted that TF1-371 had given evidence about first meeting Jungle in 1997, and pointed out that anyone who had spent time with the RUF “long enough” would have known Jungle prior to 1997.<sup>5839</sup>

2670. In relation to TF1-585’s testimony that he bought a house or compound for Bockarie in Monrovia, in which Jungle also resided, he acknowledged that the Liberian Government leased a compound for Bockarie, his family, senior officials and his entourage in December 1999. Although the Accused did not dispute that Jungle and Sampson visited Bockarie at that residence, he denied that Sampson and Jungle ever lived there.<sup>5840</sup>

2671. Concerning TF1-371’s testimony that Jungle took a route through Danané, Côte d’Ivoire and Guinea into Sierra Leone in around 1993 and 1994 when he was sent by Musa Cissé to meet with Sankoh, the Accused testified that Jungle would not have to use such a route if Jungle were working for him in Liberia. The Accused stated that at the point at which Jungle was alleged to have used that route in 1993 and 1994, when the border with Sierra Leone was occupied by ULIMO, Jungle was in Sierra Leone and was not under the Accused’s control. If Jungle was “sent” by anyone, he was sent by Sankoh.<sup>5841</sup>

2672. The Accused denied, as TF1-567 had testified, that Jungle was an SBU, whom he had sent with a message to Bockarie not to be involved with the AFRC, noting that Foday Sankoh had already instructed Mosquito and RUF to join the AFRC in May 1997.<sup>5842</sup> The Accused further denied sending Jungle to the Lomé Peace negotiations, testifying that if Jungle went to Lomé, he went with Sankoh because he was with the RUF.<sup>5843</sup> The Accused asserted that TF1-567 lied when he testified that Jungle and Ibrahim Bah visited him, the Accused, in Monrovia.<sup>5844</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

2673. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>5845</sup> testified that he knew Daniel Tamba personally. He stated that Jungle came from Foya Tinkia and was born to a Sierra Leonean mother and Liberian father.<sup>5846</sup> Sesay stated that Jungle spoke only Kissi, not Mende.<sup>5847</sup>

2674. Sesay testified that he first met Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) in 1992 when Jungle, then an NPFL fighter based in Foya, crossed the border after ULIMO took control of Lofa and joined the RUF in Bendu.<sup>5848</sup> Sesay described Jungle as his friend, explaining that the two of them became close “before Sam Bockarie”<sup>5849</sup> because they had been together in Kailahun since November 1993. They were at the border together until 1994 and in 1995 in Giema,<sup>5850</sup> where they lived in the same village, they would see each other daily. Sesay then left Jungle to go to Côte d’Ivoire.<sup>5851</sup> When Jungle came to Freetown during the Junta period, they were still friends and spent time together there.<sup>5852</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

2676. Sesay noted the existence of other individuals called Jungle. He testified that when Senegalese came with Mike Lamin in 1997, he came with ULIMO Jungle, not Daniel Tamba. This Jungle became commander for the RUF in Matotoka in the late part of 2000 and 2001.<sup>5857</sup>

2677. Sesay testified that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) was a member of the RUF from 1992.<sup>5858</sup> Sesay testified that Jungle was not a liaison between the RUF and NPFL, was not a runner between the RUF and NPFL in 1992 and the early 1990s, and was not a runner between Taylor and Mosquito.<sup>5859</sup>

2678. Between April and June 1996, Sankoh called Jungle to Abidjan to join him there as one of his security guards. Sesay did not know Jungle as an agent of Charles Taylor at this time and between 1992 and 1996, Jungle did not travel to Liberia.<sup>5860</sup> Specifically, Sesay testified that he did not hear of any occasion when Sankoh sent Jungle to Liberia to meet Taylor while Jungle was in Côte d'Ivoire.<sup>5861</sup> Jungle remained at Sankoh's Cocody house until after the Intervention in 1998.<sup>5862</sup>

2679. In response to the testimony of Karmoh Kanneh regarding a meeting called by Sankoh in Giema in November 1996, Sesay testified that when Sankoh returned from Abidjan, there was a meeting of senior officers at Sankoh's mansion ground but denied that Sankoh said Jungle was Taylor's representative during this meeting, and denied that Jungle was even present at the meeting in Kailahun because he was in Abidjan at the time and did not travel with Sankoh to the meeting.<sup>5863</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

2680. Also in response to Kanneh's testimony, Sesay testified that Jungle was in Abidjan when Tongo Fields was captured in August 1997. He was not in Sierra Leone with the commanders after the attack, as Kanneh claims.<sup>5864</sup>

2681. When Sankoh went to Nigeria, he would call Jungle on the telephone to pass a message on to Bockarie and this continued until the 1997 coup.<sup>5865</sup> During the AFRC time period, Pa Kallon sent Jungle to Freetown to get supplies "food money" from Bockarie and that was the only time that Jungle went to Sierra Leone during the days of the AFRC; he was there for three days.<sup>5866</sup>

2682. Jungle remained at Sankoh's Cocody house until after the Intervention in 1998.<sup>5867</sup> Sesay denied that Jungle was in Buedu in 1998. In 1998, Sesay only saw Jungle when he was in Monrovia in April 1998.<sup>5868</sup>

2683. When Sesay travelled to Monrovia in April 1998, Jungle travelled from Abidjan under the instruction of Sam Bockarie to meet Sesay there.<sup>5869</sup> It was on this trip that Sesay lost the parcel of diamonds in the rain.<sup>5870</sup> Jungle was transiting from Abidjan through Monrovia on his way to Buedu to answer a summons from Bockarie. He was staying with his brother while he was in Monrovia. Jungle delayed going to Buedu until June 1998 because he was afraid to face Bockarie after the diamonds were lost.<sup>5871</sup>

2684. Around June 1998, Jungle came to Buedu in Sierra Leone. From then until about December 1998, Bockarie sent Jungle to Liberia to buy cocoa and coffee from two Lebanese men based in Monrovia.<sup>5872</sup> Jungle told Sesay that he would also buy rice, medicines and other supplies; Sesay described Jungle as a runner for Sam Bockarie.<sup>5873</sup> When Jungle went on these trips, he would sometimes stay for one week to one month and at times visited his family in Foya Tengia or his mother in Foya.<sup>5874</sup> Sesay did not witness Jungle bringing ammunition from Liberia.<sup>5875</sup>

2685. Sesay did not recall that Jungle worked with Musa Cissé during the time that he was with the RUF and Sesay was not aware that Jungle was a bodyguard to Taylor, or a member of the SSS at any time before he left the RUF in December 1999<sup>5876</sup> and testified that he never saw Jungle wearing a Liberian uniform.<sup>5877</sup> However, Sesay stated that he would not dispute the possibility that Jungle joined the SSS.<sup>5878</sup>

2687. Sesay denied that, in his role as a runner, Jungle met him in early 2001 and conveyed him to Monrovia.<sup>5882</sup>

2688. When presented with Exhibit D-316<sup>5883</sup>, Sesay did not comment upon Jungle's alleged position in the SSS as "because that was in Liberia" but confirmed that Tamba was not a member of the RUF between January 2000 and November 2001.<sup>5884</sup>

2689. Witness DCT-008, a Liberian radio operator,<sup>5885</sup> identified Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) in exhibits P-153A, P-153B and P-068,<sup>5886</sup> as a Liberian RUF member from Lofa County, Foya district.<sup>5887</sup> In late September 1998, Sampson introduced Daniel Tamba to Sunlight, and informed him that Benjamin Yeaten said the witness should bring Tamba to Sunlight so that he could use the radio to Sierra Leone.<sup>5888</sup> The witness testified that this was the first time that Sunlight saw Jungle.<sup>5889</sup> Sunlight understood that Jungle was one of “Sankoh’s boys”.<sup>5890</sup> When Sampson brought Jungle to Sunlight at Yeaten’s house, he explained that he had previously taken Jungle to the seventh floor of the Executive Mansion, for Jungle to secretly communicate with the RUF in Sierra Leone, without the President or government, or other radio operators knowing about it.<sup>5891</sup> However, Yeaten had ordered Sunlight to permit Jungle to come to his home from that point on.<sup>5892</sup> Yeaten had also told Sunlight that his relationship with Sam Bockarie was a secret, and that neither the President, nor the government of Liberia knew about it.<sup>5893</sup> Upon arriving to use the radio, Jungle gave Sunlight the RUF’s frequency or call signal.<sup>5894</sup> Jungle then connected to Buedu, and communicated with Sellay, the RUF’s chief radio operator assigned to Bockarie, in Krio.<sup>5895</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

The witness testified that Jungle came to Yeaten's house a few more times after that occasion to use Sunlight's radio to connect to Sellay in Buedu.<sup>5896</sup>

2690. Following the first time Jungle came to use the radio, he returned with Sampson to use the radio again. Sellay, in Buedu, connected him to "the Brother", who was Sam Bockarie.<sup>5897</sup> The men spoke in Krio, and Sunlight did not understand, but Jungle told Sunlight that Bockarie had said that they were running out of food and that he, Jungle, should give the message to Yeaten and Musa Cissé in order for them to assist Bockarie with food.<sup>5898</sup> Jungle came again a week after the second time and told Sunlight that Bockarie wanted to see him at the Young Women's Christian Association and subsequently, Sunlight, Sampson and Jungle went there, where Jungle introduced Sunlight to Bockarie.<sup>5899</sup> The witness testified that Jungle did not transmit any messages on behalf of Yeaten.<sup>5900</sup> On occasion in late 1998, Sellay radioed to Base 1 looking for Jungle when Jungle was not around. On one occasion, Sellay asked Sunlight to tell Jungle that Bockarie wanted Jungle to go to Pa Musa to inform him that they needed food. Sunlight gave Jungle the message and Jungle then left.<sup>5901</sup>

2691. The witness knew that Jungle had been a member of the RUF since the beginning of the RUF, but did not know how he became a member.<sup>5902</sup> Jungle was not a senior security to Charles Taylor,<sup>5903</sup> and the witness never saw or heard of any movement of Jungle into Sierra Leone under Yeaten's instruction or by himself after Bockarie's entry into Liberia.<sup>5904</sup>

2692. During cross-examination, the witness testified that he knew only one Daniel Tamba.<sup>5905</sup> The witness said that Jungle was able to enter the Executive Mansion under the

Defence Witness John Vincent

2693. John Vincent, an RUF member,<sup>5907</sup> identified Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) in exhibit P-045A.<sup>5908</sup> In 1998, on the day of the Waterworks meeting near Buedu, the witness met Jungle for the first time in Buedu at Jungle’s house, and Vincent was “made to understand that Jungle was always in and out” of Liberia and Sierra Leone.<sup>5909</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

Deliberations

2702. The parties generally agree, and the evidence clearly establishes, that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) was a Kissi-Liberian, who was a member of the NPFL until about 1992 when ULIMO pushed the NPFL from Lofa County. Jungle was part of a group of NPFL soldiers who then joined the RUF and remained with them until about 1994.<sup>5923</sup> TF1-168 testified that Jungle was an NPFL member in 1993, and later became a “trusted member of the RUF”. Although the parties dispute Tamba’s whereabouts and activity from about 1994 to 1996,<sup>5924</sup> the Trial Chamber considers a finding on that dispute to be unnecessary for purposes of the Prosecution’s submissions.

2703. In considering Jungle’s relationship to the Accused from 1997, the Trial Chamber notes the multiple characterisations and descriptions reflected in the witnesses’s testimony about Jungle’s role or position. Many Prosecution witnesses, including Fornie, Mallah, Mongor, TF1-371 and TF1-375, testified that Jungle was a liaison between the RUF and the NPFL. TF1-579 even referred to Jungle as the “chief liaison” between the RUF and NPFL, although he characterised him as an RUF member. Witnesses Karmoh Kanneh and TF1-539 characterised Jungle as a “representative” of the Accused or the Liberian Government, and <sup>5924</sup> The Defence alleges that in 1994-1995, Tamba fought with the RUF in Sierra Leone, and in May 1996 Bockarie sent him to Côte d’Ivoire where he remained, apart from a detour to Freetown to request financial support for the Côte d’Ivoire delegation in 1997, until the Intervention in February 1998. In mid-1998 Tamba returned to Sierra Leone as a station commander in Kono. In July 1998 he returned to Bockarie, to whom he reported henceforth. The Trial Chamber notes that the Defence challenges the evidence that Tamba was in Kenema during the Junta period (Defence Final Trial Brief, paras 1060-1061, 1093). Issa Sesay testified that Tamba did not enter Liberia from 1992 to 1996 (Issa Sesay, Transcript 6 July 2010, p. 43803).

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

TF1-579 testified that he was present in meetings with RUF commanders where Jungle was referred to before those congregated as the Accused's representative. Albert Saidu testified that at one meeting, Jungle sat at a "high table" and addressed the meeting, stating that he was there to tell them that the relationship between the RUF and AFRC was recognised by Charles Taylor.

2704. The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Albert Saidu is a generally credible witness<sup>5925</sup> while the evidence of both TF1-539 and TF1-579 must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>5926</sup> With regard to Karmoh Kanneh, the Trial Chamber considers that he provided generally clear, calm and well-organised evidence and openly admitted when he did not know the answer to questions.<sup>5927</sup> When confronted by prior inconsistent statements on cross-examination, the Trial Chamber found Kanneh's testimony to be largely consistent and observed that he was candid about failures on his part to provide corrections to his prior statements.<sup>5928</sup> There were occasions on which the witness appeared to experience difficulty under cross-examination in answering Defence Counsel's questions but the Trial Chamber considers that this was as a result of confusion about the nature of what was being asked rather than an attempt by Kanneh to evade the question.<sup>5929</sup> Similarly, the Trial Chamber does not find Kanneh's occasional confusion regarding specific dates<sup>5930</sup> detrimental to his overall credibility. Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes that the majority of Kanneh's evidence was corroborated by other witnesses. The Trial Chamber therefore finds Karmoh Kanneh to be generally credible and will consider further issues relating to his credibility in context as they may arise.

2705. The Trial Chamber notes that a number of witnesses testified that Jungle was an NPFL turned RUF member, or that he was at times both an NPFL or Special Security Services member and an RUF member. Mohamed Kabbah, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be a credible witness,<sup>5931</sup> testified that Jungle was an RUF member during the

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

Intervention, not a liaison or an SSS member; however, the Trial Chamber notes that his basis for concluding that Jungle was an RUF member was Jungle's constant movement between the RUF and the Accused's mansion with "information and ammunition". TF1-539, who testified that Jungle was an SSS member, and a representative of the Liberian Government, also referred to him as "one of Bockarie's men". TF1-579 testified that Jungle possessed an SSS identification card and that he received pay as an SSS; however he later testified that "Jungle was one of Mosquito's main men" and an RUF member. TF1-579 explained that around 1998 the RUF and NPFL were like "one". The Trial Chamber does not consider that witness testimony characterising Jungle as both RUF and later, or simultaneously, an SSS member to be contradictory, but rather a reflection of the perception that he was tied closely to both the RUF and the Accused. By virtually all accounts, Jungle was constantly back and forth from Sierra Leone to Liberia.

2706. Witnesses TF1-579, Fornie, Keita, TF1-585, Jaward, Mallah, TF1-539, Mongor and TF1-375 all testified explicitly that Jungle worked for the Special Security Services of the Accused, a Liberian Governmental agency under the direction of Benjamin Yeaten. TF1-367 testified that Jungle was "Taylor's bodyguard and a friend of the RUF", who later joined the "Special Security Unit" (SSU), and that Jungle wore the SSU's "special black uniform".<sup>5932</sup> Kanneh testified that prior to being appointed as the Accused's representative, Jungle was an NPFL member,<sup>5933</sup> and TF1-371 testified that Jungle was part of the Accused's "senior security".<sup>5934</sup> TF1-567 saw Jungle sometime after April 1998 wearing blue/black overalls with SOD written on them, and Jungle told him that SOD stood for "Special Operations Division".<sup>5935</sup> TF1-516 referred to Jungle as a "Liberian soldier".<sup>5936</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371, TF1-567, TF1-516 and TF1-367 are all generally credible witnesses.<sup>5937</sup>

2707. The Trial Chamber notes the significant amount of testimony that Jungle worked under Benjamin Yeaten and/or that he took orders from Yeaten. TF1-567 testified that Jungle took orders from the Accused and Yeaten, TF1-371 testified that Jungle worked with the “SSS director”, and Jabaty Jaward and Abu Keita both testified that Jungle was one of Yeaten’s bodyguards. Witness TF1-516 also testified that Jungle worked under “50”’s command, who in turn took commands from the Accused.

2708. The Trial Chamber recalls that Abu Keita is a generally credible witness.<sup>5938</sup> With regard to Jabaty Jaward, the Trial Chamber observed that he provided clear, comprehensive and measured testimony during which he showed a good recollection of events and patently endeavoured to ensure that his evidence was as accurate as possible,<sup>5939</sup> discerning carefully between his own first-hand and hearsay evidence. Jaward did not exaggerate his own role, admitting that he was a low level individual within the RUF with whom Bockarie would not have discussed important matters.<sup>5940</sup> Jaward’s testimony remained consistent throughout his cross-examination although the Defence raised a number of inconsistencies with Jaward’s prior statements. The Trial Chamber finds these to be generally minor<sup>5941</sup> and is largely satisfied by the explanations Jaward provided. The witness openly confirmed that he had received around $USD 1,500 from the OTP as well as 32,685,000 Leones (approximately $USD 10,895)<sup>5942</sup> from the Witness and Victims Service<sup>5943</sup> for himself and his family<sup>5943</sup> and that WVS continued to be his only source of income.<sup>5944</sup> The Trial Chamber accepts Jaward’s testimony that he initially refused payment from the Prosecution and was motivated to testify against the Accused not by money but because he felt he had important information to give to the international community about the Accused’s involvement in the Sierra Leonean war and to abide by the pledge he had made to do so.<sup>5945</sup> In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds Jabaty Jaward to be generally credible and will consider further issues relating to his credibility in context as they arise.

2709. The Trial Chamber notes TF1-516’s cross-examination testimony in which he was confronted with a prior statement to the Prosecution in which he said that Daniel Tamba

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

“was a Liberian soldier in the ATU” but that he did not know Tamba by an alias. The witness testified that he made a correction to that statement to the effect that Daniel Tamba was the same person as Jungle,<sup>5946</sup> although he could not explain why he had not made the correction earlier.<sup>5947</sup> TF1-516 was also confronted with a prior statement that Jungle Jim and Jungle was the same person. The witness testified that the statement was not correct and that he changed the statement before giving his testimony, a change that was reflected in the witness’s interview record.<sup>5948</sup> In spite of these inconsistencies, the Trial Chamber notes that TF1-516’s prior statement was consistent on the point that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) reported to Yeaten (a.k.a. 50).<sup>5949</sup> Furthermore, the witness maintained on cross-examination that he knew Jungle before 1998.<sup>5950</sup> Because the witness was forthright about his prior error and because he corrected it of his own accord, in addition to the Trial Chamber’s finding that he is a credible witness, the Trial Chamber does not consider these inconsistencies to be detrimental to his credibility. Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes that TF1-516’s testimony on this point is corroborated by the testimony of TF1-371, TF1-567, Jabaty Jaward and Abu Keita, all of whom were consistent regarding their testimony of Jungle and were not successfully challenged on cross-examination.

2710. The Trial Chamber has made findings elsewhere in the Judgement with regard to the role of Jungle in transporting arms to the RUF and diamonds to the Accused throughout the Indictment period, as well as messages back and forth. The Trial Chamber has elsewhere considered and rejected<sup>5951</sup> the Defence contention that the movement of arms and ammunitions, and diamonds, between Sierra Leone and Liberia was undertaken in the context of a “private enterprise” under Benjamin Yeaten, unbeknownst to the Accused.<sup>5952</sup>

2711. In addition to testimony of Jungle’s role as a member of or liaison between the RUF, NPFL and/or SSS, as a subordinate of Benjamin Yeaten, the Trial Chamber notes the testimony of several witnesses who connected Jungle directly to the Accused. For example, TF1-579 testified that Jungle took orders directly from Yeaten and the Accused, while TF1-

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

516 testified that Jungle “worked under 50” but took “commands” from the Accused. TF1-371 testified that Jungle, in his capacity as an SSS, delivered information to the Accused. Isaac Mongor testified that Jungle told him that he reported to the Accused, and Kanneh testified that he heard Bockarie tell Koroma that Jungle was the RUF’s “link” to the Accused. Mongor’s testimony that he was told by Jungle that Jungle directly reported to the Accused is corroborated by the evidence of TF1-579, TF1-516, TF1-371 and Kanneh. The Trial Chamber notes that on cross-examination Isaac Mongor testified that he recalled that Jungle’s last name was Tamba, but that he was familiar with calling him Jungle. Mongor was then confronted with a prior statement in which Mongor stated that he only knew Jungle as Jungle and that he did not know “Daniel Tamba or anything else”. Based on this contradiction, the Defence submitted that Mongor did not know Jungle at all. In the Trial Chamber’s view, this inconsistency, in light of the fact that the witness was consistent throughout that he knew “Jungle” in spite of whether he knew or had forgotten “Tamba”, does not undermine Mongor’s credibility on this point.<sup>5953</sup> It is clear from the context of Mongor’s testimony about Jungle in comparison with the testimony of other witnesses about Jungle, that he is testifying about the same individual. Moreover, the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Mongor is generally a credible witness.<sup>5954</sup> Although TF1-579’s testimony should be considered with caution and requires corroboration, and did not contain a basis of knowledge for his assertion that Jungle took orders directly from the Accused, the Trial Chamber considers that the corroboration of the other witnesses lends reliability to his testimony. Similarly, the Trial Chamber considers that the corroboration by other witnesses regarding Jungle’s role corroborates the testimony of TF1-539 to the extent that his testimony regarding Jungle in this context is reliable.

2712. The Trial Chamber notes the Accused’s testimony that he knew a Daniel Tamba who was not the same as the Tamba known as Jungle, whom other witnesses testified about, and was not the same Daniel Tamba listed in D-316, as well as Sesay’s testimony that there were other individuals called Jungle. However, the Trial Chamber also notes that witnesses Jaward, Vincent and DCT-008 consistently identified Jungle in Exhibit P-045A and that witnesses Kanneh, TF1-585 and DCT-008 consistently identified Jungle in Exhibit P-068.

Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes that Sesay's identification of Jungle in P-163 is consistent with the other witnesses' identification of Jungle in P-068. Based on these identifications and the context of the testimony of the identifying witnesses, together with the testimony of witnesses who did not identify Jungle in photographs, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that all of the relevant witnesses testified about the same Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle).

2713. The Defence denies that Jungle carried out his actions as the Accused's subordinate. The Accused himself also denied knowing the Daniel Tamba testified about by other witnesses as "Jungle", saying he first heard of him in these trial proceedings. He further stated that the Daniel Tamba, a Second Lieutenant appearing in the roster, Exhibit D-316, could not have been a "runner" for him because he was not ranked highly enough. The Accused conceded that Jungle could have been an SSS member, but maintained that he never provided the Accused with personal security. The Accused also testified that he did not have, and had no need for, a liaison between himself and Sam Bockarie. The Trial Chamber does not find these arguments convincing, and in particular finds it telling that Tamba's name appears on the official assignment roster for the Executive Mansion security services, Exhibit D-316. In the Trial Chamber's view the testimony of the Accused does not raise a doubt with regard to the overwhelming evidence of Prosecution witnesses, as well as the documentary evidence, that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) worked for the SSS and was a subordinate of the Accused.

2715. Although the Trial Chamber notes that there is evidence to support the accusation that the Accused facilitated the murder of Tamba,<sup>5957</sup> the Trial Chamber recalls its discussion of allegations pertaining to the suppression of evidence, elsewhere in the judgement.<sup>5958</sup> Therefore, the Trial Chamber has not considered that evidence here.

2717. Based upon the evidence of the aforementioned witnesses, as well as the documentary evidence admitted as Exhibit D-316, the Trial Chamber finds that Jungle was an SSS member who worked for Benjamin Yeaten and the Accused as a courier of arms, diamonds, and messages back and forth between the Accused and the AFRC/RUF throughout the Indictment period.

Findings

2718. The Trial Chamber finds the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) worked for the SSS as a subordinate of Benjamin Yeaten and the Accused and served as a courier of arms, diamonds and messages back and forth between the AFRC/RUF and the Accused throughout the Indictment period.

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

3. Ibrahim Bah

Submissions of the Parties

2719. The Prosecution refers to Ibrahim Bah as the Accused's "personal liaison", "representative", "long-time associate", "trusted subordinate", and "emissary".<sup>5960</sup> It submits that Ibrahim Bah met Sam Bockarie and Johnny Paul Koroma in Freetown and arranged the Magburaka shipment on the Accused's directive and under his instructions.<sup>5961</sup> The Prosecution further submits that after the Intervention, Ibrahim Bah spoke on behalf of the Accused at a meeting regarding the preparation of an airstrip, convened by Bockarie with Daniel Tamba.<sup>5962</sup> According to the Prosecution, when the AFRC and RUF were taking steps to preserve their hold on Kono in the post-Intervention period, there was a secret meeting in which Ibrahim Bah said that he was part of the Liberian Government working for the Accused, and he spoke on the Accused's behalf, stating that the AFRC/RUF relationship was recognised and that they should work together to take hold of Kono District in order to obtain diamonds.<sup>5963</sup> The Prosecution submits that during Bockarie's and Sesay's leadership, Sesay gave Eddie Kanneh diamonds, and he in turn gave them to Ibrahim Bah, who would deliver them to the Accused.<sup>5964</sup> Furthermore, the Prosecution submits that Bah reported to the Accused to keep him informed of the activities of the RUF and the AFRC/RUF.<sup>5965</sup>

2720. The Prosecution states that when Liberian security closed the border throughout 1998 and 1999, Ibrahim Bah was the only person who was allowed to cross into Sierra Leone with trucks filled with mining equipment.<sup>5966</sup> According to the Prosecution, in 1999 the Accused used Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), his SSS subordinate, and Ibrahim Bah, his long-time associate, as personal liaisons to Sankoh during the Lomé peace negotiations. The Accused also sent Ibrahim Bah and Memunatu Deen with $USD 20,000 for Sankoh's personal use. Prior to travelling to Lomé, Ibrahim Bah and Omrie Golley met with the Accused in Monrovia and received instructions to pass on to Sankoh in relation to positions to take at Lomé<sup>5967</sup>

2721. The Defence submits that Ibrahim Bah met the Accused in 1990, when he “was part of the Gambian force that entered Liberia during the NPFL invasion, but [they] had limited contact thereafter” and that the Accused was not in a position to issue orders to Ibrahim Bah after RUF/NPFL cooperation disintegrated.<sup>5968</sup> According to the Defence, Ibrahim Bah left the NPFL in 1993, remained in Sierra Leone, and began dealing directly with the RUF.<sup>5969</sup> The Defence argues that he was not the Accused’s emissary or agent, “Taylor did not communicate with the Junta through any subordinates or intermediaries such as Ibrahim Bah” and that Ibrahim Bah had an “independent relationship with the RUF, which even predated the Sierra Leonean war”.<sup>5970</sup> Bah never fought for the RUF, but “became close friends with Foday Sankoh”, whom he met in Libya.<sup>5971</sup> He was a “liaison who coordinated with the RUF’s affairs outside of Sierra Leone” and a key player throughout the 1990s in “arranging weapons and munitions transactions on behalf of the RUF and/or Junta”, particularly from Burkina Faso and Libya.<sup>5972</sup> According to the Defence, he provided the RUF with radio equipment, “vehicles, food, mining equipment, computers, telephones, and other items”.<sup>5973</sup> Ibrahim Bah also introduced various business partners to Bockarie and Sankoh.<sup>5974</sup>

2722. The Defence submits that Sankoh encouraged the Junta to work with Ibrahim Bah to purchase arms in Burkina Faso for the Magburaka shipment and that the “shipment was based on a pre-arranged deal, funded by Sankoh, arranged by Bah, and renewed by JP Koroma”.<sup>5975</sup>

2723. The Defence argues that Ibrahim Bah was a “businessman who operated throughout the sub-region and could have obtained mining equipment from any source in the diamond

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

2724. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>5978</sup> testified that during the Junta, in 1997, Sam Bockarie and Ibrahim Bah said that Mr Taylor sent Ibrahim Bah to Freetown, and he received diamonds and money from Sam Bockarie and Johnny Paul Koroma in order to organise the Magburaka shipment to get arms and ammunition for the Junta; Ibrahim Bah came upon the instruction of and with the “directive from Mr Taylor”.<sup>5979</sup> He testified that Ibrahim Bah fought with the NPFL, was an advisor and good friend to Foday Sankoh, that Ibrahim Bah doubled with Omrie Golley as a member of the External Delegation, and that both Ibrahim Bah and Mr Sankoh were “military advisors to Mr Taylor” at one point in time.<sup>5980</sup> TF1-371 added that “[Bah] stuck with Mr Taylor throughout”.<sup>5981</sup> The witness testified that he learned through an “interaction” with Ibrahim Bah, whom the witness called a middle man and conduit of Mr Taylor, that he came to Buedu in 1998 “upon the instruction of Mr Taylor” to see Sam Bockarie and he was given diamonds to take to Mr Taylor to help Taylor get more arms and ammunition for the RUF.<sup>5982</sup> According to TF1-371, Sam Bockarie trusted Ibrahim Bah.<sup>5983</sup>

2725. The witness testified that before November or December 1998, Sam Bockarie told him that Ibrahim Bah would escort Sam Bockarie and others to Ouagadougou to get a shipment of ammunition for a major attack.<sup>5984</sup> According to TF1-371, General Abraham is

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

Ibrahim Bah.<sup>5985</sup> The witness stated that Ibrahim Bah was a liaison with Charles Taylor, and the witness was present in 1999 when Ibrahim Bah, who said he was sent by Mr Taylor, gave $USD 20,000 to Mr Sankoh in Lomé.<sup>5986</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-567

2726. Witness TF1-567, an RUF member,<sup>5987</sup> testified that Foday Sankoh said that Ibrahim Bah, from Burkina Faso, was his friend, that Ibrahim Bah was with the NPFL, and that he was helping the establishment of the RUF movement as an agent for the RUF.<sup>5988</sup> According to the witness, any time Jungle went to see Charles Taylor, Ibrahim Bah would join him, and Sankoh told “us” that he often sent Ibrahim Bah on missions to see Taylor.<sup>5989</sup> Issa Sesay told the witness that he gave diamonds to Ibrahim Bah, who said that he had business partners, and Ibrahim Bah provided satellite phones, computers, food, and $USD 50,000 for the RUF movement between 1999 and 2001.<sup>5990</sup> The testified that he and others went to Hotel Boulevard with diamonds to meet General Ibrahim to make arrangements, and Benjamin Yeaten would take Issa Sesay and General Ibrahim to bring the diamonds to Charles Taylor.<sup>5991</sup>

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

2727. Witness Isaac Mongor, an RUF senior commander,<sup>5992</sup> testified that in 1991 Ibrahim Bah was a general who was present at a meeting with Mr Taylor, General Dopoe, Francis Mewon, Foday Sankoh, Lamin and others.<sup>5993</sup> Ibrahim Bah was a soldier of the Special Forces and of the foreign forces which were part of the NPFL.<sup>5994</sup> During the time that Mongor was a member of the Supreme Council,<sup>5995</sup> Ibrahim Bah came to meet Mongor and other RUF authorities who had fought alongside him before in Sierra Leone, at Bockarie's house in Freetown.<sup>5996</sup> Ibrahim Bah said that he was sent by Mr Taylor with a message "asking" that the AFRC and RUF work together.<sup>5997</sup> He said that Ibrahim Bah was a liaison officer who had been with the RUF.<sup>5998</sup> After this meeting, the witness took Ibrahim Bah to Johnny Paul Koroma's house and Ibrahim Bah said again that Mr Taylor sent him with the message that they should work together.<sup>5999</sup>

Prosecution Witness Foday Lansana

2728. Witness Foday Lansana, an RUF radio operator,<sup>6000</sup> testified that General Ibrahim was a businessman working with Sam Bockarie when Mr Sankoh was in prison in Nigeria, and after the release of Mr Sankoh, he became finance controller of the RUF; he gave money to people who needed it when they were in Liberia, under the instruction of Sam Bockarie.<sup>6001</sup> Foday Lansana met Ibrahim Bah in December 1999 at Hotel Boulevard.<sup>6002</sup> Later, Ibrahim Bah said that he was instructed by Mr Sankoh to give $USD 500 to the witness for shopping; the money was given to the witness at the Congo Town Guesthouse on 22 December.<sup>6003</sup> Ibrahim Bah told Foday Lansana that he was an international businessman who purchased diamonds and gold and that he and Sam Bockarie were friends and business partners.<sup>6004</sup>

Prosecution Witness Albert Saidu

2729. Witness Albert Saidu, an RUF adjutant from 1991 to 2001,<sup>6005</sup> testified that during a meeting in 1998 or 1999, after Issa Sesay had diamonds that went missing, Sam Bockarie introduced General Ibrahim as a guest.<sup>6006</sup> The witness thought he was a Liberian general.<sup>6007</sup> General Ibrahim was sitting at the high table and introduced himself as part of

Prosecution Witness Abu Keita

2730. Witness Abu Keita, a former deputy chief of staff and commander of ULIMO-K who later became commander of the Scorpion Unit,<sup>6009</sup> testified that others told him that Ibrahim Bah was a former fighter of the NPFL and Ibrahim Bah said that he would find a buyer for RUF diamonds in order to help the RUF get radio communication.<sup>6010</sup> In 2000, the witness was present when Ibrahim Bah showed Sam Bockarie diamonds at the Boulevard Hotel and the witness also saw Ibrahim Bah in Kono with Eddie Kanneh and four Lebanese in order to get RUF diamonds.<sup>6011</sup>

Prosecution Witness Suwandi Camara

2731. Witness Suwandi Camara, an SSS member,<sup>6012</sup> testified that his nephew, Mustapha Jallow, who was close to Ibrahim Bah, told the witness in 2002 that Ibrahim Bah was a liaison officer between the NPFL and RUF, and that he was engaged in the diamond business between the RUF and Charles Taylor.<sup>6013</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

2732. Witness TF1-168, an RUF member,<sup>6014</sup> testified that Ibrahim Bah was one of the Gambian Special Forces attached to Dr Manneh and that he was involved in setting up business deals for Sankoh.<sup>6015</sup> Ibrahim Bah knew members of the Burkina government and he went to Libya with Pa Sankoh.<sup>6016</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

The Accused

2733. The Accused testified that he met Ibrahim Bah, a member of the NPFL, in 1990 when Bah went into Liberia with Kukoi Samba Sanyan (a.k.a. Dr Manneh), but Ibrahim Bah left in 1993 or 1994.<sup>6017</sup> The Accused said that Ibrahim Bah was Senegalese and that he “was one of the regular security personnel and was not assigned directly with [him]” when he met him in 1990.<sup>6018</sup> The Accused testified that Ibrahim Bah was an “ordinary officer”, but not his associate, friend, special bodyguard, agent, or military advisor, and that he never had a business relationship with Ibrahim Bah, nor did Ibrahim Bah ever work for him, the Accused, after he left Liberia.<sup>6019</sup> The Accused testified that General Abdulai Bah was “the most senior Gambian military officer” and is not the same person as Ibrahim Bah.<sup>6020</sup> He maintained that Ibrahim Bah was not a Liberian general.<sup>6021</sup> The Accused heard that after 1994 and after he became president, Bah came to Liberia a few times as a businessman.<sup>6022</sup> He testified that Ibrahim Bah “is now fully with Foday Sankoh, based on even evidence before this court” and that he had no reason to doubt that Ibrahim Bah helped Foday Sankoh coordinate RUF affairs outside of Sierra Leone between 1996 and 1999.<sup>6023</sup>

2734. The Accused testified that he never connived with Ibrahim Bah in diamond trading, never received diamonds from Ibrahim Bah and did not organise a Magburaka shipment through Ibrahim Bah.<sup>6024</sup> He testified that he had no knowledge of Ibrahim Bah purchasing satellite phones and computers for the RUF.<sup>6025</sup> He also testified that he had no knowledge of Ibrahim Bah being in Monrovia in early October 1997 but that it would not be unusual as Ibrahim Bah was a businessman.<sup>6026</sup> He said he did not know that Ibrahim Bah and senior members of the RUF were dealing in diamonds in Monrovia.<sup>6027</sup> He also said that Ibrahim Bah was not a liaison officer between the NPFL and RUF.<sup>6028</sup> The Accused testified that he never sent Ibrahim Bah to Freetown to meet Johnny Paul Koroma or to Buedu to meet Sam Bockarie or anywhere else.<sup>6029</sup>

2735. According to the Accused, Ibrahim Bah was a “senior individual” and “official of the RUF” delegation; he was “working for and with Foday Sankoh”; and he was a “special guest” who was representing the RUF at Lomé; the Accused said that he saw Ibrahim Bah for the last time before he left for Lomé in April 1999.<sup>6030</sup> The Accused testified that he did not give Ibrahim Bah $USD 20,000 to give to Sankoh in Lomé.<sup>6031</sup>

2736. Witness Issa Sesay, senior RUF commander,<sup>6032</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>6033</sup> testified that Ibrahim Bah was not an advisor, but instead was an agent and “a runner to Mr Sankoh” and the RUF.<sup>6034</sup> He explained that Ibrahim Bah brought business partners for Mr Sankoh and diamond dealers to Sam Bockarie and himself.<sup>6035</sup> In July or August 1997, Johnny Paul Koroma gave Ibrahim Bah $USD

90,000 to hire a flight to transport arms and ammunition from Burkina Faso for the AFRC and RUF.<sup>6036</sup> Ibrahim Bah was based in Ouagadougou and would take the RUF delegation to Burkina Faso, as he was working with Mr Sankoh and he was his friend.<sup>6037</sup> Issa Sesay testified that Johnny Paul Koroma only sent people whom he trusted with Ibrahim Bah and Bah arrived on the plane with the ammunition.<sup>6038</sup> The witness went to Burkina Faso with General Ibrahim Bah to get ammunition in April.<sup>6039</sup> According to Issa Sesay, Ibrahim Bah introduced Michel and Louis, “two white men” from Belgium, to Issa Sesay and Bockarie in Buedu in June of July of 1999 and introduced them to Sankoh in Monrovia.<sup>6040</sup> Issa Sesay heard from the commander in Buedu that the Liberian border was closed between mid-December 1999 to May 2000 and the only person who crossed was Ibrahim Bah in December 1999.<sup>6041</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-018

Ouagadougou and he is a “senior logistics expert in the movement of weapons and diamonds between Burkina Faso, Liberia and Sierra Leone”.<sup>6045</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-067

2738. Exhibit P-067 is a situation report to Foday Sankoh from the Black Guard Commander. According to this report, a large quantity of diamonds was taken from Johnny Paul Koroma and given to “Mr Ibrahim (General) [...] to travel with the parcels directly to President Taylor” and “to this development, the High Command was able to receive the first satellite phone”.<sup>6046</sup> This exhibit also states that Ibrahim Bah had important contacts for “materials” such as ammunition and arms.<sup>6047</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-063

2739. Exhibit P-063, dated 2 December 1998, is the minutes of a forum with the external delegates led by the RUF Defence Staff, which was held at the RUF Defence Headquarters. According to this document, Eddie Kanneh asked those present at the forum to “remember outstanding external friends of his movement like General Abraham”, and the CDS (Sam Bockarie)<sup>6048</sup> congratulated General Abraham for his “sincerity and honesty in delivering the parcels that were given to [him] for our father across”.<sup>6049</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit D-003

2740. Exhibit D-003 is a radio log book. According to this log book, on 12 January 2000, General Ibrahim informed “Smile” that he was leaving for Monrovia that day as all their provisions were finished and “the longer we delay for now, the more we accumulate losses”. He wrote that he had identified all the problems and knew the needs in order to “speed up the process”. He wrote that he would give “excellent info” when he had access to

Defence Exhibit D-030

2741. Exhibit D-030 is Volume Two of a report of the Sierra Leone Truth and Reconciliation Commission. According to this report, Ibrahim Bah was classified as one of the prominent leaders within the AFRC Faction under the heading “Miscellaneous AFRC “Special Envoys”.”<sup>6051</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-393

2742. Exhibit D-393 is a summary report of a Belgian criminal investigation. According to this investigation, various notes by Ossaily Samih, a Belgian diamond dealer, indicate that he had extensive contacts with Ibrahim Bah in Hotel Boulevard in Monrovia.<sup>6052</sup>

Deliberations

2743. The Trial Chamber notes that there is a broad range of evidence in the record regarding the role of Ibrahim Bah. There is evidence that Bah was part of the Liberian Government and represented the Accused. There is also evidence that he was working for the RUF. Other evidence indicates that Ibrahim Bah was an independent businessman, working as an intermediary between the RUF and the Accused and/or as an agent involved in certain transactions for the RUF and other transactions for the Accused. With regard to specific events, the Trial Chamber has reviewed the evidence in the context of its consideration of those events. More generally, the Trial Chamber has reviewed the evidence in an effort to come to preliminary general conclusions with regard to Ibrahim Bah’s alleged role and affiliation with the Accused and/or the RUF.

2744. It is not contested that in the early 1990s Ibrahim Bah was a member of the NPFL and there is some evidence that he came to the NPFL with the Gambian Special Forces of Dr

Manneh. Isaac Mongor testified that in 1991, Bah was a soldier of the Special Forces and foreign forces, which were part of the NPFL, and TF1-168 also testified that before he met him, Ibrahim Bah was a fighter for the Gambian Special Forces, attached to Dr Manneh.<sup>6053</sup> TF1-371 testified that Bah fought with the NPFL.<sup>6054</sup> The Accused testified that Bah was a member of the NPFL in 1990 but that he left the NPFL in 1993 or 1994.<sup>6055</sup> Abu Keita testified that he heard Bah was a former NPFL fighter.<sup>6056</sup> TF1-567 testified that Foday Sankoh told him that Ibrahim Bah was from Burkina Faso, and that he was with the NPFL.<sup>6057</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Isaac Mongor, TF1-168, TF1-371, Abu Keita and TF1-567 are generally credible witnesses<sup>6058</sup>.

2745. Ibrahim Bah was referred to as General Ibrahim by a number of witnesses,<sup>6059</sup> and TF1-371 testified that General Abraham was Ibrahim Bah.<sup>6060</sup> The Accused testified that Bah was an “ordinary officer” and distinguished him from General Abdulai Bah, a senior Gambian military officer who was not the same person.<sup>6061</sup> However, the evidence does not suggest any confusion between these two men, as Ibrahim Bah was not referred to as General Bah but rather as General Ibrahim. There is little evidence other than this title that Ibrahim Bah was a general for the NPFL. Mongor testified that he was a general in 1991.<sup>6062</sup> Albert Saidu testified that he thought Bah was a Liberian general because at a meeting he introduced himself as part of the Liberian Government working under Charles Taylor.<sup>6063</sup>

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIES

The Accused denied that Bah was a Liberian general.<sup>6064</sup> While it is clear that Bah was a part of the NPFL at some time in the early 1990s, the Trial Chamber cannot conclude, in the light of such divergent evidence regarding his role, that he was in fact a Liberian Government official or military officer during the Indictment period.

2746. A number of witnesses testified that Ibrahim Bah worked for the Accused or represented the Accused during the Indictment period. TF1-371 testified that Bah “stuck with Mr Taylor throughout” and mentioned a number of specific incidents in which the Accused sent Bah on his behalf – to Buedu in 1998 and to give Sankoh $USD 20,000 in 1999.<sup>6065</sup> Several witnesses, including TF1-371, testified that Bah was sent by Taylor to arrange for the Magburaka arms shipment.<sup>6066</sup>

2747. However, the Trial Chamber notes that a number of witnesses who testified that Bah worked for the Accused testified that he also worked for the RUF. Mongor, for example, testified that the Accused sent a message with Bah that the AFRC and RUF should work together, but he also testified that Bah was a liaison officer who had been with the RUF.<sup>6067</sup> Suwandi Camara testified that he was told in 2002 that Bah was a liaison officer between the NPFL and RUF, and engaged in the diamond business between the RUF and Taylor.<sup>6068</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Suwandi Camara is a generally credible witness.<sup>6069</sup>

2748. The Trial Chamber notes that evidence from TF1-371, TF1-567, Suwandi Camara, as well as Exhibits P-018, P-063, and P-067, all indicate that Ibrahim Bah delivered diamonds to the Accused.<sup>6070</sup> TF1-371 testified that the Ibrahim Bah was the Accused’s middle man and conduit.<sup>6071</sup> However, much of the evidence does not clearly indicate any affiliation for Bah to a particular person or group; it shows that he acted as an intermediary. The report of the Panel of Experts, for example, states that Bah handled financial, diamond and weapons transactions “between the RUF, Liberia and Burkina Faso”.<sup>6072</sup> Similarly, Exhibits P-067 and P-063 both indicate that diamonds were given to Ibrahim Bah to deliver to Taylor, without expressly stating his role other than as an intermediary.<sup>6073</sup>

2749. The Trial Chamber notes that Issa Sesay testified that Bah brought business partners and diamond dealers to himself, Bockarie and Sankoh.<sup>6074</sup> Foday Lansana described Ibrahim Bah as a businessman and business partner of Bockarie, but also as a finance controller for the RUF.<sup>6075</sup> TF1-567 testified that Bah was an agent for the RUF, whom Sankoh often sent on missions to the Accused.<sup>6076</sup> Abu Keita testified that Bah said he would find the RUF a buyer for diamonds to help them get radio communication.<sup>6077</sup> TF1-168 testified that Bah set up business deals for Sankoh.<sup>6078</sup> However, Exhibit P-063, the minutes of an RUF meeting, indicates that Eddie Kanneh referred in the meeting to General Abraham as an “external friend”.<sup>6079</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371, TF1-567, and Issa Sesay all testified that Ibrahim Bah was a good friend of Foday Sankoh.<sup>6080</sup> TF1-371 testified that Sam Bockarie trusted Ibrahim Bah and Foday Lansana testified that Bah was a best friend of Sam Bockarie.<sup>6081</sup>

2750. Although none of the witnesses suggested that Bah was an agent of the AFRC, the report of the Sierra Leone Truth and Reconciliation Commission classified Bah as a miscellaneous AFRC “Special Envoy”.<sup>6082</sup>

2751. The Trial Chamber notes that the Accused testified that he never sent Ibrahim Bah anywhere and that he never received diamonds from him.<sup>6083</sup> In light of the overwhelming evidence to the contrary, the Trial Chamber finds the testimony of the Accused in this regard lacking in credibility.

2752. In light of all the evidence indicating that Ibrahim Bah was perceived by various witnesses as working for the RUF, or the Accused, or both the RUF and the Accused, the Trial Chamber concludes that Ibrahim Bah was a trusted emissary who represented the RUF at times and the Accused at times, and served as a liaison between them at times. He was a businessman who helped arrange arms and diamond transactions, and did not maintain an ongoing affiliation as a subordinate or agent with either the RUF or the Accused. At times, however, he did represent the RUF and the Accused in specific transactions or on specific missions. With regard to particular events, the Trial Chamber considers that his status and relationship to the parties involved is to be determined on the basis of relevant evidence in the context of those particular events.

THE ROLE OF INTERMEDIARIESFindings

2753. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Ibrahim Bah was an independent businessman who worked, at various times and for particular purposes, for both the RUF and the Accused. He also served as a liaison between the RUF and the Accused but had no permanent affiliation with either the RUF or the Accused.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

C. Military Operations

1. Alleged Message from Base 1 to Troops Retreating from Kono

Submissions of the Parties

2754. The Prosecution alleges that during the Intervention, while the forces in Kono were communicating with Buedu, they received a message from Base 1, Yeaten's radio station in Monrovia, to the AFRC/RUF forces asking why they were pulling out of Kono while other AFRC/RUF forces were still in Makeni and other areas toward Freetown.<sup>6084</sup>

2755. The Defence submits that TF1-516's evidence regarding the radio message from Base 1 is "suspicious" and should be approached with caution for six reasons. First, the allegation is unsupported. Second, on TF1-516's evidence, this communication is the first from Base 1 to the RUF, "yet the witness seems to treat such communication as standard" rather than the RUF expressing outrage or surprise that they were being monitored by a radio station in Monrovia. Third, there is evidence that Base 1 had not been established at this time. Fourth, Prosecution evidence suggests that Base 1 was not then in possession of the RUF radio codes. Fifth, there is evidence that the Liberian codes are different from the RUF codes. Finally, "this account seems to be contradicted" by Mohamed Kabbah's evidence that he did not see or hear any message from Taylor ordering the RUF to hold Kono.<sup>6085</sup> The Defence submits that "although Kabbah referred to Taylor in this context, Kabbah's treatment of Sunlight is as an extension of Taylor, so if he knew of Sunlight sending such a message, he is likely to have mentioned this".<sup>6086</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-516

2756. Witness TF1-516, an RUF radio operator,<sup>6087</sup> testified that during the Junta rule, while he was in Buedu, Mohamed Kabbah commanded him to go to Kono to collect battery acid from the station commander CO Nya. When he arrived, Perry Kamara (a.k.a. King Perry) assigned him to the mining site at Koidu where he remained engaged in overseeing mining in a designated RUF pit and a private mining pit, and undertaking some radio work until 1998 after the ECOMOG Intervention when Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit), the overall commander in Kono, ordered everyone back to Buedu.<sup>6088</sup> The witness testified that while he was in Kono, he went to the radio room in the morning to transmit messages before going to the mining site.<sup>6089</sup>

2757. The witness testified that while he was communicating with the station in Buedu to inform them that the AFRC/RUF forces were about to pull out from Kono, he received a call from “across the other side”, meaning it was from Liberia,<sup>6090</sup> it was from Sunlight at Base 1, enquiring why they were pulling out from Kono. The witness indicated that Base 1 had ascertained that the troops were withdrawing by Sunlight monitoring AFRC/RUF radio communications and intercepting their call.<sup>6091</sup> Gullit ordered the witness to communicate the response to Base 1 that “he had something very much important to discuss with Sam Bockarie” and accordingly he was insisting that the fighters pull out from Kono down to Kailahun.<sup>6092</sup> TF1-516 identified Base 1 as a radio set assigned to Benjamin Yeaten, the SSS director of Liberia situated in Congo Town.<sup>6093</sup>

2758. On re-examination the witness explained that during his time in Kono, he did not transmit any messages for the AFRC with the exception of the message he sent to Buedu on Gullit’s behalf when it was time for them to retreat.<sup>6094</sup>

2759. Witness Mohamed Kabbah (a.k.a. Tourist), an RUF radio operator,<sup>6095</sup> testified that he did not see or hear any message from Charles Taylor ordering the RUF to hold Kono after the AFRC/RUF retreat from Freetown in early 1998, nor did he recall hearing or seeing any radio message that would have come from Charles Taylor whereby orders were given about operations in Kono or any other aspect of the retreat from Freetown.<sup>6096</sup>

2760. When TF1-516's evidence about the February 1998 communication was put to Defence Witness DCT-008, a Liberian radio operator,<sup>6097</sup> who was in a position to know the activities of the radio operator Sunlight, he denied that Sunlight intercepted Gullit's communication about the retreat from Kono to Kailahun in February 1998. In February 1998, Sunlight was not under the direct supervision of Benjamin Yeaten; he was a radio operator at the Executive Mansion where he did not intercept any radio communications from Sierra Leone and to the best of his knowledge, the Executive Mansion or Government of Liberia was not communicating with the RUF. Further, there was no radio in Liberia in February 1998 with the call sign Base 1.<sup>6098</sup> He stated that Base 1 was not established until after the Camp Johnson Road incident in mid-September 1998 when Sunlight also became the radio operator there.<sup>6099</sup>

Deliberations

2761. The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-516's evidence on the alleged radio message from Base 1 is uncorroborated, and contradicted by DCT-008. DCT-008 denied that a radio message was sent and denied further that Base 1 was operational at the time the radio message allegedly was sent, having only been established at Yeaten's house in September 1998.<sup>6100</sup>

2762. With regard to the Defence's submission that Base 1 was not in operation at the time TF1-516 allegedly received the radio message from Sunlight, the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Base 1 was operational at the time of the Intervention.<sup>6101</sup>

2763. The Defence has given a number of other reasons why, in its submission, it has not been proven beyond reasonable doubt that TF1-516's evidence is true. The Trial Chamber will address these in turn.

2764. The Defence submits that TF1-516's evidence should not be believed because he seemed "to treat such communication as standard" when, in its submission, the RUF is more likely to have expressed surprise or outrage at the first call received from Base 1 which would have alerted them to its monitoring of RUF communications. The Trial Chamber is unable to draw conclusions based on speculation as to how a radio operator should or would respond to such a communication and therefore places no weight on such considerations. Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes its finding that RUF radio codes were shared with the NPFL<sup>6102</sup> and that NPFL radio operators were therefore able to monitor transmissions.<sup>6103</sup> It is therefore not surprising that the transmissions were monitored.

2765. The Defence maintains that the Liberian and RUF codes differed and that the radio operators in Liberia were not in possession of the RUF radio codes in February 1998, citing the evidence of Dauda Aruna Fornie.<sup>6104</sup> The Defence submits that Fornie testified that "the Liberians were only given the RUF radio code when he took the code to them on Bockarie's second visit, later in 1998". The Trial Chamber has reviewed the evidence cited and notes that the witness testified that he brought new radio codes to Base 1 during this visit to Monrovia in mid-1998 because they, together with the frequencies, were changed every two or three months.<sup>6105</sup> This evidence does not in itself preclude the possibility that the Liberians had the radio codes in February 1998. It is therefore irrelevant that the Liberian codes were different. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the codes were necessary for purposes of security and confidentiality, but that the codes were not necessary for communication to take place.<sup>6106</sup>

2767. The Trial Chamber does not find dispositive Mohamed Kabbah's evidence that he did not see or hear any message from Charles Taylor ordering the RUF to hold Kono or any radio message that could have come from Charles Taylor whereby orders were given about operations in Kono or the retreat from Freetown. First, the communication in question, asking why the troops were retreating from Kono, does not fall into any of the categories of message he was cross-examined on, even if it had clearly emanated from the Accused. Second, the message was said to have come from Sunlight, and the Trial Chamber does not agree with the Defence's assertion that Kabbah treated Sunlight as an extension of Taylor. There are instances in Kabbah's testimony where he makes a clear distinction between messages emanating from Sunlight and from Taylor.<sup>6109</sup> Finally, notwithstanding the foregoing, the evidence of one radio operator that he never saw a particular message is not conclusive of the fact that it was not transmitted, particularly in view of the fact that it was allegedly sent to a radio station in Kono, not Buedu or Kailahun where Kabbah was based during this period.

2768. While the testimony of TF1-516 with regard to the message received from Base 1 is uncorroborated, the Trial Chamber notes its finding that TF1-516 is a generally credible witness.<sup>6110</sup> In light of the foregoing considerations, the Trial Chamber does not find that the arguments of the Defence raise doubts as to the credibility of his testimony with regard to this message.

Findings

2769. In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that when the AFRC/RUF forces were pulling out of Kono during the Intervention, the radio station of Benjamin Yeaten in Monrovia, intercepted a radio transmission between AFRC/RUF radio stations about the withdrawal and intervened to ask why the forces were withdrawing.

2. Operations in Kono (Early 1998)

Submissions of the Parties

2770. The Prosecution alleges that when Johnny Paul Koroma was retreating from Freetown after the Intervention, the Accused told him to secure Kono, following which Koroma gave orders to all the fighters and commanders to go and capture Kono. After the initial attempt was unsuccessful, the Accused again instructed Koroma to try to capture Kono, which the forces then did.<sup>6111</sup> The Prosecution submits that the instruction was given in order to enable the Accused to send a helicopter from Monrovia to pick up Koroma and his family.<sup>6112</sup> The Prosecution alleges that, consistent with the earlier instruction from the Accused, Koroma held a meeting after he arrived in Koidu Town and talked about the necessity to hold the ground in Kono.<sup>6113</sup>

2771. The Prosecution also submits that the Accused instructed Bockarie to hold Kono because it was one of the prominent diamond mining areas of the country. Bockarie passed this message on repeatedly, making it clear that securing Kono would enable the RUF to obtain materiel and other supplies from Taylor. Finally, the Prosecution alleges that the instruction to hold Kono was reiterated by the Accused at a secret meeting of AFRC/RUF fighters through his representatives Ibrahim Bah and Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle).<sup>6114</sup>

2772. The Defence challenges the allegation that the Accused instructed Johnny Paul Koroma to attack Koidu Town based on the fact that the key witness to the alleged conversation, Samuel Kargbo, admitted that he did not actually hear the conversation between Taylor and Koroma and on Mohamed Kabbah's evidence that he did not hear or see any message from Taylor telling the RUF to hold Kono.<sup>6115</sup> The Defence denies that the Accused communicated with Johnny Paul Koroma via satellite phone at any time until 1999.<sup>6116</sup>

2773. The Defence also denies that Taylor instructed Bockarie to hold Kono.<sup>6117</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Samuel Kargbo

2774. Witness Samuel Kargbo, an AFRC Supreme Council member,<sup>6118</sup> testified that during the Intervention, he travelled from Kono and drove Johnny Paul Koroma, his family members, radio man, Banjah Marrah, and his bodyguards from Fogbo to Masiaka, where they stayed part of the night, and then to Magbonkineh via Makeni.<sup>6119</sup> Upon their arrival in Magbonkineh, Koroma used a satellite phone to make two calls. The first call was to the BBC, telling them that he was "up the hills" in Freetown and would soon return to the city. Kargbo stated that Koroma did not mention Operation Pay Yourself in this call.<sup>6120</sup> The second call was to Taylor requesting him to send a helicopter to pick them up.<sup>6121</sup> Taylor told Koroma that a helicopter could not land in Magbonkineh on account of ECOMOG jet raids, and so Koroma decided that the group should move to Kabala. The witness explained that he could hear Koroma speaking but not Taylor.<sup>6122</sup>

<sup>6122</sup> Samuel Kargbo, Transcript 21 May 2008, pp. 10486-10487, 10491. In the witness's first account of this call he testified that afterwards, Koroma told them they were going to wait for the helicopter (Samuel Kargbo, Transcript 21 May 2008, p. 10487). In the second account, Kargbo testified that Taylor told Koroma that it was not possible for the helicopter to come to Magbonkineh because of the Alpha Jet raids by ECOMOG and that Johnny Paul Koroma therefore decided to move to Kabala (Samuel Kargbo, Transcript 21 May 2008, p. 10491). On cross-examination, Kargbo stated that after this phone call with Taylor, Koroma told him that the helicopter would not be possible and they, Koroma and Kargbo, then decided to go to the Liberian border through Kailahun (Samuel Kargbo, Transcript 2 June 2008, p. 10753).

MILITARY OPERATIONS

2775. Kargbo then travelled with Koroma and his group to a village close to the Guinean border near Kabala, but Koroma's wife was recognised and so the group returned to the outskirts of Magbonkineh in order to avoid detection.<sup>6123</sup> At that point, Koroma told the witness that he had spoken to Taylor again who had instructed him to capture Kono<sup>6124</sup> as it would be easier to collect them via a helicopter from there.<sup>6125</sup> Kargbo testified that on Koroma's orders he, Akim, Rambo and Superman then went back to Kabala to call all the RUF and AFRC commanders in the villages there to a meeting in Kabala Town. At the meeting, they made arrangements for the attack on Kono and thereafter "everyone" headed for Makeni, where they joined other AFRC and RUF fighters and assembled as a team to advance on Kono.<sup>6126</sup> Superman, Akim Turay and Hassan Papa Bangura were in the advance team. Koroma was in the middle group with the witness and SAJ Musa and Issa Sesay's group was at the back.<sup>6127</sup>

2776. Kargbo testified that after the initial attack on Kono failed because they had met resistance at the Mamudu checkpoint, he returned with Koroma and others to Makeni, where Koroma contacted Taylor via satellite phone. Taylor reiterated the instruction to capture Kono and said that if Koroma did so, Taylor would send a helicopter for Koroma and his family. Kargbo said that he knew about this conversation because he was close to Koroma although he did not hear what Taylor was saying. At that point, the credit in Koroma's satellite phone ran out.<sup>6128</sup> Kargbo gave evidence that following this phone call, Koroma told inter alia Superman and the witness to go talk to the AFRC/RUF troops to convince them to advance again on Kono. They did so and this time the Junta fighters were successful.<sup>6129</sup> The witness noted that Johnny Paul Koroma did not disclose to the troops that a helicopter would be picking him up.<sup>6130</sup>

<sup>6124</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that Kargbo tends to use Kono and Koidu interchangeably. When asked directly what he means by Kono, he refers to the whole District but when then asked where the fighters recaptured, he says Koidu Town despite having referred to it as Kono (Samuel Kargbo, Transcript 21 May 2008, pp. 10499-10500).

MILITARY OPERATIONS

2777. One or two weeks after Koidu Town was captured, Koroma decided to travel to Kailahun when Superman delivered a radio message from Bockarie in Buedu to the effect that Bockarie had spoken with Taylor, who had instructed that Koroma and his group should travel to Kailahun, since it would not be possible to land a helicopter in Koidu Town on account of the jet raids. Kargbo testified that Koroma could not contact Taylor himself using his satellite phone since he had no credit after the last call with Taylor and he did not possess a radio set.<sup>6131</sup>

2778. Koroma accordingly convened a meeting of the AFRC and RUF high command at which he announced that he was going to meet Taylor in Monrovia but would be back. He ordered the fighters to “hold the ground” in his absence.<sup>6132</sup> The witness testified that he and Rambo were appointed to accompany Koroma to Kailahun together with Issa Sesay and Mike Lamin.<sup>6133</sup>

2779. Kargbo testified that they arrived in Buedu in the last week of February or early March. The next day, Sam Bockarie met Koroma in the witness’s presence and told him that Charles Taylor had told him that he would send vehicles to pick Koroma up. About one or two weeks into March, four or five white Land Rovers arrived without registration plates. The witness saw Colonel Jungle and a few SS men in blue combat uniforms as well as some men in civilian clothes. These men were subsequently introduced to him by Bockarie as Jungle, General Ibrahim, Mohamed Sekou Toure and Abu Keita. As they were preparing to leave, the witness then described an attack by the RUF commanders on Koroma’s party, including himself, during which he testified that he was flogged. They told Koroma to hand over the diamonds he was planning to take to Liberia. Following the attack, Kargbo testified that he was put into a dungeon with Koroma’s entire family, with the exception of Koroma himself, and Moses Kabia and his family, and their diamonds were taken from them.<sup>6134</sup> Issa Sesay later told Kargbo that the attack had been provoked when Moses Kabia (a.k.a. Rambo) had started complaining that Koroma’s party was planning to escape to Liberia with diamonds.<sup>6135</sup> Upon his subsequent release, Kargbo was told that the vehicles and men had returned to Liberia and that Bockarie had accompanied them.<sup>6136</sup>

On cross-examination, the witness explained that although they had two radio handsets with them, one belonging to Johnny Paul Koroma’s radio operator Banjah Marrah and Kargbo’s own, they stopped functioning as they reached Masiaka/Makeni because Nigerian forces had tampered with the receiver (Samuel Kargbo, Transcript 3 June 2008, pp. 10791-10792).

2780. Witness TF1-371, a senior RUF member, testified that he retreated from Freetown with Johnny Paul Koroma and the Junta leaders after the Intervention.<sup>6137</sup> After a meeting in Masiaka to discuss, inter alia, the location of a new AFRC command post the group proceeded to Makeni. Koroma had already moved to his home village on the Makeni-Kabala highway.<sup>6138</sup> In Makeni, a second meeting was convened at Teko barracks at which Kailahun Town in Kailahun District was chosen as the new AFRC headquarters. A convoy was then organised to head for Kailahun via Kono District.<sup>6139</sup> The witness testified that he stayed in both Masiaka and Makeni for a couple of days.<sup>6140</sup>

2781. When the first attack on Koidu Town failed, due to heavy resistance on the outskirts of Koidu, a number of the Junta commanders, including the witness and Issa Sesay, decided to retreat but others, one of whom was Koroma's Chief Security Officer Rambo and "one called Papa", remained in the outskirts of Koidu and reorganized for a second attack.<sup>6141</sup> During the retreat from Koidu, but "halfway to Makeni", someone from the frontline came and informed the retreating commanders that Koidu Town had been captured. Johnny Paul Koroma was with the witness when he entered Koidu.<sup>6142</sup>

2782. After a short time in Koidu, the witness moved with Johnny Paul Koroma, his securities, Moses Kabia (a.k.a CSO Rambo), Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon and most of the AFRC ministers to Kailahun, arriving some time in mid-March.<sup>6143</sup> The witness testified that the order to take Johnny Paul Koroma to Kailahun Town came from Sam Bockarie.<sup>6144</sup>

Throughout the journey from Kono to Kailahun, they had a VHF radio on which they were communicating with Bockarie.<sup>6145</sup>

2783. Shortly after they arrived in Buedu, the witness saw Ibrahim Bah who told him that he was there on Taylor's orders.<sup>6146</sup> The witness described how, while Bah was in Buedu, there was a disagreement between Moses Kabia and Johnny Paul Koroma's wife, as a result of which Kabia told the witness, Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon that Johnny Paul Koroma was intending to escape with diamonds.<sup>6147</sup> Sam Bockarie ordered that the diamonds be taken from Koroma.<sup>6148</sup> Bockarie then travelled with Ibrahim Bah back to Monrovia to take the diamonds to Taylor.<sup>6149</sup> When Bockarie returned from Monrovia, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle)<sup>6150</sup> was accompanying him.<sup>6151</sup>

2784. When Exhibit D-008 was put to the witness on cross-examination, TF1-371 confirmed that "Big Brother"<sup>6152</sup> is Charles Taylor but he did not know who "Benjamin"<sup>6153</sup> was.<sup>6154</sup> "Bra"<sup>6155</sup> is Sam Bockarie.<sup>6156</sup> TF1-371 then testified that the Adjutant General, Rashid Sandi, who was with Bockarie at the time, was trying to explain about the meeting that they had with Benjamin Yeaten at Koindu. The reference to an instruction "to sneak with J.P.Koroma to Monrovia to avoid suspicion",<sup>6157</sup> comes from Rashid Sandi's report about the meeting with Benjamin Yeaten in Koindu and was to be done to avoid the alarm of ECOMOG who were still in the axis on the "Lofa, Gbarnga and Monrovia" highway.<sup>6158</sup>

TF1-371 agreed<sup>6159</sup> that they later decided to send Issa Sesay on the mission to Burkina Faso for “logistical materials”.<sup>6160</sup>

2785. TF1-371 also testified that after one of the trips to Monrovia in 1998, Bockarie came back excited because he had made contact with Taylor and confirmed that the diamonds that had been taken from Johnny Paul Koroma were in Taylor’s possession.<sup>6161</sup> At a meeting attended by the witness after Bockarie’s return, Bockarie mentioned that he had received a “specific instruction” from Taylor that the RUF should “ensure that we maintain Kono”. The witness explained that, after that, Bockarie intensified the mining in Kono and Tongo Fields “so as to enable [him] to pay for those materials”. He stated that Kono had always been the “bread basket” for the Junta – the only source of sustaining the armed rebellion through the diamond products.<sup>6162</sup>

2787. While in Makeni, Mongor received an instruction from Sam Bockarie, telling him to bring Johnny Paul Koroma to Kailahun and to stay with him in the meantime to ensure that nothing happens to him. When the witness met with Koroma in his village, he explained

Bockarie's order and they agreed that it was time to execute the plan to visit Taylor; Koroma told the witness that he would move to Buedu in order to enable him to cross over into Liberia easily because it was so close. The witness then returned to Makeni to organise the attack on Koidu Town with Superman.<sup>6167</sup>

2788. Mongor was one of those at the front of the convoy heading to Koidu Town. He testified that he told Superman that it would be better for him to stay with "the Pa", Koroma, while the witness led the advance. During the advance, the AFRC/RUF fighters were ambushed, which forced some of them to retreat with Johnny Paul Koroma to Makeni. Mongor was one of those who did not retreat, but continued fighting and managed to successfully enter Koidu Town. He stated that he was later told that Johnny Paul Koroma had retreated so he went back to Makeni and brought Koroma to Koidu Town.<sup>6168</sup> A while after they arrived in Koidu Town, the BBC announced that Koroma was there so they decided to send him to Kailahun straightaway. The witness testified that he therefore cleared the road to Gandorhun before sending for Koroma who then advanced with Issa Sesay, Akim Turay, Leatherboot and some other commanders to Kailahun.<sup>6169</sup> Prior to leaving for Buedu, Johnny Paul Koroma restructured the AFRC/RUF troops in Koidu Town and informed the commanders that he had spoken to Taylor and was going to meet him in Monrovia.<sup>6170</sup>

2789. Mongor said that Sam Bockarie gave the order to hold Kono. He thought that the order was given "because it was in Kono we did our mining. It was there we got our diamonds from".<sup>6171</sup>

2790. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>6172</sup> who was in Makeni in February 1998,<sup>6173</sup> testified that after the Intervention, the main RUF commanders, including Johnny

Paul Koroma, escaped Freetown and came to Makeni.<sup>6174</sup> Kamara attended the Junta meeting in the Flamingo area at which the Kono attack was organised. The meeting had been established on the orders of Bockarie who had sent a radio message, to which the witness had been privy, instructing them to call an immediate meeting to discuss how to get Johnny Paul Koroma from Makeni to Buedu, how to feed the fighters in the jungle and how to organise themselves for the move from Makeni to Kono. The witness testified that he left the meeting early but was told later back at Teko Barracks by Gullit and Morris Kallon that they would be attacking Kono.<sup>6175</sup>

2791. After the meeting, the group divided into three, with the first group consisting of RUF, AFRC and STF forces headed by Superman, followed by Issa Sesay and Johnny Paul Koroma in the second group. The witness was in the third group.<sup>6176</sup> The convoy travelled through Magburaka, Matotoka, Makali, Sewafe and arrived at Bumpe from where they entered Koidu Town. Each group had a radio operator and while the troops were advancing, Superman kept them informed of progress.<sup>6177</sup>

2792. Kamara, who was working for Superman,<sup>6178</sup> said that immediately after the Junta fighters captured Koidu Town, he monitored and wrote down a radio message from Sam Bockarie to the RUF commanders Issa Sesay and Superman, telling them that he had consulted with Taylor in Liberia and said “as long as we have Kono, we will not fail in taking over the rest of Sierra Leone again”. The witness explained, “because we already knew that Kono was one of the prominent diamond mining areas in Sierra Leone”.<sup>6179</sup> Bockarie said that Taylor had told him that he should not lose Kono because from there he could get diamonds which he could trade with Taylor for ammunition. To that end, Bockarie instructed Issa Sesay to appoint Superman as commander and Morris Kallon as Deputy in Kono while Sesay was to escort Koroma to Buedu. Bockarie told them to “hold fast to the ground” and “not allow to lose the ground”.<sup>6180</sup> Kamara also testified that Bockarie sent a message telling Superman that “he had finally had an arrangement with Mr Taylor because we were now in Kono and we should be able to take care of Kono”.<sup>6181</sup> The witness testified that Bockarie repeated the message to hold Kono “almost all the time but not every day”, saying that mining in Kono was very important for the RUF and would enable them to get arms and ammunition, food and drugs from Charles Taylor.<sup>6182</sup>

Prosecution Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay

2794. Before leaving Masiaka, Koroma announced Operation Pay Yourself over the international media, telling Robin White (of the BBC) that he was still in the Peninsula and did not have enough money to pay his soldiers.<sup>6187</sup> Koroma then moved towards Makeni because he said he was moving to his village, Magbonkineh, which lies shortly after Binkolo.<sup>6188</sup>

2795. After an expedition to Bo to rescue some troops who were trapped there, the witness testified that he moved on to Makeni where he stayed for two days before moving on to Kabala where he met SAJ Musa and Superman. The witness stated that he did not see Johnny Paul Koroma in Kabala.<sup>6189</sup> In Kabala, the witness attended a meeting of RUF and

SLA senior commanders, including Superman, convened by SAJ Musa in which he announced:

Gentlemen, now the ECOMOG have pushed us out of Freetown and now we've got information that Gullit ha[s] withdrawn from Kono. So it would be good for us, the troops, together with the RUF combined forces, to go back and recapture Kono so Kono will serve as a strong base, since it [is] a diamondiferous area, and we will serve as a force to reckon with by the Government of Sierra Leone and the international community.

2796. Musa then instructed Superman and Hassan Papa Bangura to mobilise forces.<sup>6190</sup>

2797. The witness then saw Hassan Papa Bangura, Superman and their respective soldiers mount radio sets and contact Mosquito. Bockarie ordered the witness and Hassan Papa Bangura to collect Johnny Paul Koroma from his village near Binkolo and head towards Kono. They also informed Bockarie that SAJ Musa had mobilised troops to march on to Kono.<sup>6191</sup> A convoy with SAJ Musa, Superman, Hassan Papa Bangura and other commanders moved to Johnny Paul Koroma's village where they met him, together with his wife, CSO Rambo (a.k.a. Moses Kabia), Akim Turay, and Samuel Kargbo (a.k.a. Jungler). Koroma reinforced what SAJ Musa had said and re-confirmed that the troops should prepare to move towards Kono because it is a diamondiferous area and he wanted the troops to build a strong junta base in Kono. Johnny Paul Koroma then moved with the group back to Makeni. The witness testified that, at this point, Koroma was in command of the SLA and RUF troops.<sup>6192</sup>

2798. In Makeni, Bobson Sesay witnessed Koroma brief the troops, telling them that they should recapture Kono and establish a strong Junta base there against ECOMOG attacks. After that, the troops reorganised and arranged a fighting force to move ahead with Koroma to Kono; Hassan Papa Bangura was in charge of the SLA and Superman was in charge of the RUF. Johnny Paul Koroma was in overall charge of the advance on Kono.<sup>6193</sup>

2799. According to the witness, the advance on Kono began in early March 1998. The troops moved as far as Sewafe, around 22 miles outside Koidu Town, without meeting resistance from ECOMOG. The entire convoy, including Johnny Paul Koroma, then moved to Bumpe from where they advanced on Koidu Town. Close to Koidu Town, near Five-Five Spot, the troops encountered a heavy attack from the Kamajors and hastily withdrew to Bumpe. At that point, Johnny Paul Koroma withdrew because he had been detected by the Kamajors.<sup>6194</sup> After Koroma left, Issa Sesay, who was then in command, took out his pistol and shot one of the soldiers and told the troops to recapture Koidu Town, which the witness, along with Hassan Papa Bangura, RUF Rambo and Superman successfully did.<sup>6195</sup>

2800. When Koidu Town had been captured, Superman went to look for Johnny Paul Koroma. He was unable to find him in Masingbi so a group including the witness went to look in Makeni, onto Kabala then onto Magbonkineh where they picked up inter alia Koroma and brought him to Koidu Town and then on to a village close to Gandorhun between Woama and Tankoro.<sup>6196</sup>

2801. In around February or March 1998, shortly after the AFRC/RUF re-took Koidu Town, Johnny Paul Koroma held a meeting in the village near Gandorhun at which he declared that Kono should serve as a strong base for the Junta forces. He stated that he was going to see Taylor in Liberia, for the purpose of securing “logistics”, including arms, ammunition and food so that they could continue to “hold the ground” in Kono because Kono was a diamondiferous area whose control would bring the AFRC/RUF international recognition.<sup>6197</sup> At that same meeting, Koroma announced that he would travel to Burkina Faso and Libya.<sup>6198</sup> Ultimately Issa Sesay, Samuel Kargbo and other RUF/SLA troops escorted Koroma to Kailahun while the witness returned to Koidu Town.<sup>6199</sup>

2802. The witness testified that from 25 May 1997 until he was arrested in June 2000, he never heard any conversation or reference to any conversation between any high-ranking AFRC commanders and Charles Taylor.<sup>6200</sup>

2803. Witness Foday Lansana (a.k.a. Co Nya), an RUF radio operator,<sup>6201</sup> was in Makeni when the fighting started in Freetown.<sup>6202</sup> A week later, a number of commanders including Johnny Paul Koroma, SAJ Musa and Issa Sesay convened in Makeni where they mobilised themselves in order to go to Kono. Lansana explained that according to Koroma, occupation of Kono and Tongo was very important to the junta so he urged Sesay and Superman to ensure that both places were under the supervision or control of the AFRC and RUF forces. He testified that they stayed in Makeni for over a week while the fighting was taking place between Makeni and Kono after which time he travelled to Koidu with Denis Mingo.<sup>6203</sup>

2804. The witness then stayed in Kono with his commander, Denis Mingo, for over a month after it had fallen to the AFRC/RUF junta. He testified that after Kono had been recaptured, Bockarie sent a radio message to Issa Sesay requesting him to escort Johnny Paul Koroma and his staff to Buedu. Later, Bockarie sent another message promoting Denis Mingo to battle group commander. He said that Superman should be in charge of any fighting between the AFRC and ECOMOG in Kono. He should ensure that he “consolidates” the area and fortify it if possible.<sup>6204</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-375

2805. Witness TF1-375, an RUF fighter,<sup>6205</sup> testified that around one month after the Intervention, there were two attempts to re-take Koidu Town from the Kamajors. The witness described the advance of troops in terms of three ‘teams’. Isaac Mongor and RUF Rambo were in the advance team; they were “moving along with Johnny Paul’s [team]”. There was then a middle team and a back team. The first attack was led by RUF Rambo and Isaac Mongor’s advance team but it was unsuccessful because the troops met resistance from the Kamajors. Their troops then retreated to Bumpé where they met the witness’s troops which were under the control of Superman. Johnny Paul Koroma was also in Bumpé at this point. In Bumpe, a fresh attack was planned under Superman's command which commenced about two to three hours later and was ultimately successful.<sup>6206</sup>

2806. Witness TF1-539, a member of various fighting groups,<sup>6207</sup> testified that he retreated from Freetown after the Intervention, arriving in Fogbo, from where he proceeded to Masiaka and Makeni. From Makeni, he travelled with a number of commanders, including Johnny Paul Koroma, Issa Sesay, Isaac Mongor and others to Kono. At Kokuima, they came up against resistance from Kamajors and retreated to Bumpe where they re-organised. Superman and Rambo mounted an ambush against the Kamajors which enabled the RUF to push into Koidu Town.<sup>6208</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-585

2807. Witness TF1-585, an RUF radio operator,<sup>6209</sup> testified that when she had reached Buedu after their retreat from Kenema, but before Johnny Paul Koroma arrived there, she saw Sam Bockarie talking on the satellite phone. After the conversation, Bockarie came to eat with Eddie Kanneh and the witness overheard Bockarie explaining to Kanneh that Benjamin Yeaten (a.k.a. 50) had just given him instructions that they needed Johnny Paul Koroma in Buedu. Bockarie said that Yeaten had told him that his dad, Charles Taylor, had said that he, Taylor, and Sankoh had spoken regarding Johnny Paul Koroma and that Bockarie, should try "by all possible means" to help bring Johnny Paul to Buedu since "they have something for them" although at the time, she did not know what that meant.<sup>6210</sup> Bockarie then said that he was going to instruct Superman to bring Johnny Paul Koroma to Buedu and that, immediately after the meal he went to the radio room to do so. The witness confirmed that Bockarie called Superman and that "Superman brought him. Johnny Paul came to Buedu”.<sup>6211</sup> Later in her testimony, the witness testified that she was in the radio room when Bockarie sent the instruction to Superman in Kono District.<sup>6212</sup>

2808. TF1-585 testified that she understood that later, when Issa Sesay “raided” Johnny Paul Koroma and took his diamonds, the “something for them” had been diamonds. She witnessed Issa Sesay telling Bockarie in Bockarie’s bedroom, “you see, the Pa had arrived and had not wanted to hand over the diamonds, so if we had not raided him he wouldn't have handed over the diamonds to us”. Sesay said that Koroma had wanted to escape with the diamonds to Monrovia.<sup>6213</sup>

2809. TF1-585 recalled that about two or three weeks after Johnny Paul Koroma and his wife arrived in Buedu, she heard gunshots into the air for over 30 minutes so they ran into the bush. After a few hours, they returned and saw bullet holes in Bockarie’s house but Johnny Paul Koroma and his wife were not there. The witness was told that Koroma was in Kangama and the following day they took his wife, Makuta, to him.<sup>6214</sup> The witness stated that during the raid, they took Johnny Paul Koroma’s diamonds, his foreign currencies and “all the things they had brought from Freetown”. TF1-585 described it as “an arrangement between Issa Sesay and Sam Bockarie” explaining that it had been Issa Sesay who had carried out the operation and that Bockarie had had little to do with it; he had been at the old school building while the raid was being carried out.<sup>6215</sup>

2810. On cross-examination, TF1-585 testified that the reason why Sesay attacked Johnny Paul Koroma was that “Rambo”<sup>6216</sup> told Sam Bockarie that Johnny Paul Koroma had come with a lot of diamonds and he “wanted to hide to go to Monrovia”.<sup>6217</sup>

2811. Witness Augustine Mallah, a security officer to Mike Lamin from 1996 to disarmament,<sup>6218</sup> testified that in February 1998 he travelled from Kenema to Buedu with Bockarie after the Intervention and then went to Gandorhun to meet Johnny Paul Koroma, Issa Sesay and Mike Lamin to bring them back to Buedu.<sup>6219</sup> Mallah stated that on his arrival in Buedu, Koroma held a meeting on the veranda of Bockarie's house which inter alia the witness, CSO Rambo and Samuel Kargbo attended, in which Koroma told Sam Bockarie that he had been receiving diamonds from the mines in Kono and Tongo. Koroma said that he had not been in touch with Charles Taylor whereas Bockarie was, so he wanted Bockarie to take him and a few other commanders to Monrovia to meet with Charles Taylor with the diamonds so that Taylor would find ways and means by which they could get arms, ammunitions and medicine to continue attacking ECOMOG.<sup>6220</sup>

2812. Mallah testified that Bockarie and the others did not want Koroma to go on the mission to see Taylor so, at this point, Bockarie told Johnny Paul Koroma that he (Bockarie) was now the leader of the RUF and AFRC, that he would not take Koroma and his commanders to Monrovia, and he demanded that Koroma hand over his diamonds. When Koroma tried to resist, he was forced to hand over the diamonds at gunpoint.<sup>6221</sup> Mallah explained that they were afraid that if they gave Koroma more time, he would escape with the diamonds so Bockarie and Issa Sesay were anxious to have them.<sup>6222</sup>

2813. On cross-examination, Mallah testified that he did not know anyone by the name of Ibrahim Bah and that he, therefore, did not know anyone with that name in Buedu at the time the diamonds were taken from Koroma.<sup>6223</sup> Mallah conceded that it was possible that CSO Rambo had told Sesay and others before the meeting about Koroma having diamonds on him but maintained that Koroma also told them in the meeting.<sup>6224</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONSProsecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

2814. Witness Mohamed Kabbah (a.k.a. Tourist), an RUF radio operator,<sup>6225</sup> testified that he did not see or hear any message from Charles Taylor ordering the RUF to hold Kono after the AFRC/RUF retreat from Freetown in early 1998, nor did he recall hearing or seeing any radio message that would have come from Charles Taylor whereby orders were given about operations in Kono or any other aspect of the retreat from Freetown.<sup>6226</sup>

The Accused

2815. The Accused testified that the first time he ever met, spoke to or had any kind of dealing with Johnny Paul Koroma was in August 1999. He did not speak to him during the Junta period, by radio or phone.<sup>6227</sup>

2816. When Samuel Kargbo's evidence was put to the Accused, he denied speaking to Johnny Paul Koroma on a telephone or having either a helicopter or any means to rescue Koroma in early 1998. He said that if he had wanted Koroma to go to Liberia he would have just driven him across the border and that in any case, there were two Sierra Leonean helicopters.<sup>6228</sup> Furthermore, Taylor denied giving Johnny Paul Koroma any instructions to capture Kono or repeating those instructions when the initial attempt failed.<sup>6229</sup> He denied sending vehicles to Koroma when he had arrived in Buedu, noting that Koroma was arrested shortly after he arrived at Buedu and never left Sierra Leone.<sup>6230</sup>

2817. When presented with Perry Kamara's evidence, the Accused denied any knowledge of messages from Bockarie to his troops re-affirming the importance of the diamond mines in Kono so that diamonds could be traded with Taylor for arms and ammunition, and denied that any such messages came from him.<sup>6231</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONSDefence Witness Issa Sesay

2818. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>6232</sup> testified that he was not in Freetown at the time of the Intervention but travelled immediately to Fogbo to meet his wife and child who had been trapped in Freetown. He then drove to Masiaka where all of the main AFRC/RUF commanders were assembling.<sup>6233</sup> He explained that he saw Johnny Paul Koroma there being collected by Samuel Kargbo, who had driven from Kono when he heard news of the Intervention. Koroma was driven by Kargbo to Masiaka, Makeni and onto his village, Magbonkineh, which is located 10 miles from Makeni.<sup>6234</sup> Sesay testified that after moving south to attack Bo, he returned to Makeni.<sup>6235</sup> At that point, Koroma was not there because he had already left for his village.<sup>6236</sup>

2819. After three days in Makeni, the witness testified that Koroma called a meeting in his village for Honourables and AFRC/RUF commanders, including the witness, Mike Lamin, Isaac Mongor, Superman and 'the Honourables'. At the meeting, Koroma ordered the AFRC/RUF to withdraw to Kono because he was going to withdraw to Bockarie's location in Kailahun. Koroma said that he had spoken to Bockarie who had agreed with the plan, something which Bockarie confirmed during a conversation with the witness when he had contacted Bockarie to report the failed Bo operation. Koroma wanted them to attack Kono because they should not keep running away from ECOMOG. The witness explained that taking Kono was part of the strategy for Johnny Paul Koroma to get to Kailahun. Sesay understood that Koroma wanted to withdraw to Kailahun because he was growing indifferent to his commanders whom he considered uncooperative and who were leaking out information to ECOMOG and the SLPP and therefore considered Kailahun a safer alternative.<sup>6237</sup> Sesay testified that at no point in that meeting did Koroma say that the idea came from Taylor or that he was making plans to visit Taylor, nor had Sesay ever heard that he had such discussions with Bockarie.<sup>6238</sup> Acting on those orders, the troops went and mobilised in Makeni to advance to Kono which they successfully captured from the Kamajors.<sup>6239</sup> The witness confirmed that, at this time, Johnny Paul Koroma, not Bockarie, was in command of the troops in Makeni.<sup>6240</sup>

2820. After Koidu Town had been captured, Superman came saying that he was going to collect Johnny Paul Koroma from his village. At that point, Sesay and others set off to move towards Kono.<sup>6241</sup> Koroma was accompanied by AFRC commanders including Samuel Kargbo and Hassan Papa Bangura on his journey to Kono. Koroma arrived in Kono the same evening.<sup>6242</sup>

2821. According to Sesay, on his third day in Kono, Johnny Paul Koroma chaired a meeting at his house in Kimberlite which the witness attended. Koroma encouraged unity between the AFRC and the RUF, saying that he did not want any further conflict between the parties as they were fighting for the same goal, and that it was time for them to stop running away from ECOMOG. He promised the troops that when he got to Kailahun, he would speak to Bockarie and ask him to send ammunition and rations to help the troops to defend Kono.<sup>6243</sup> Sesay and Mike Lamin then moved with Koroma to Kailahun where they arrived in late February or early March.<sup>6244</sup>

2822. Sesay remembered Koroma having a satellite phone during the retreat and was making calls on it in Kailahun but while he was in Kailahun, he ran out of credit. He took the phone to Kangama but it was never topped up.<sup>6245</sup> Sesay confirmed that up to the point Koroma was sent to Kangama, he was in possession of a radio set called Control Station.<sup>6246</sup> Sesay testified that when Koroma was in Masiaka, he spoke to the BBC saying that he was just outside Freetown and would be returning.<sup>6247</sup>

2823. When Samuel Kargbo's evidence was put to Sesay, he explained that he had left Johnny Paul Koroma in Masiaka for his journey to Bo before Koroma travelled to

Magbonkineh but in the time that he was travelling with Koroma, Sesay never heard any discussion about him seeking to arrange to be picked up by a helicopter sent by Taylor. Koroma only said that he had phoned Bockarie on the field radio, telling him that he was going to Kailahun.<sup>6248</sup>

2824. Sesay testified that Koroma told the RUF in Buedu that he had diamonds with him which he was planning to take to Ghana to buy fighting materials, a proposal which Bockarie accepted. Moses Kabia (a.k.a. Rambo) then ‘leaked’ that Koroma was planning to flee permanently to Ghana with his family and securities. Sesay explained that diamonds were considered as belonging to the organisation – the AFRC and the RUF. As head of the organisation, Koroma had the right to have diamonds in his possession, but he was expected to use them in the interests of the organisation. If Koroma went to Ghana with the diamonds and did not return, as Rambo claimed, then the RUF would have been left in the “hot fire”. The RUF and AFRC forces in Kailahun and Kono did not have materials at this time. For this reason, Bockarie stopped Koroma from travelling, had him hand over the diamonds, and then sent him to Kangama.<sup>6249</sup>

2825. Sesay refuted Kargbo’s story that, after Koroma’s arrival in Buedu in late February/early March 1998, Taylor sent Land Rovers with Jungle and other SS men to pick Koroma up to take him to Monrovia. Jungle was not in Buedu in 1998; Sesay only saw Jungle when he was in Monrovia in April 1998.<sup>6250</sup>

It records that it was announced on BBC radio on either 14 February or 15 February 1998 that Koroma had called the BBC from what he said was a location in the hills above Freetown threatening that the AFRC “are going to fight back”.<sup>6252</sup> Further, it states that on Sunday, 15 February 1998, the BBC had announced that Koroma “was reported to be heading for Liberia by way of Kailahun, in the northeast of the country”.<sup>6253</sup> logistical materials to carry out the operations they agreed with us and therefore confronted Johnny Paul Koroma in a non-violent manner. Johnny Paul Koroma had to reason with us and handed over nine plastics containing diamonds. We in turn handed over these diamond [sic] to mosquito for safe keeping and utility... Not too long, Mosquito informed me that he wanted us to contact the other brothers in Monrovia. Although he had already made some contact with them, but [sic] he needs some of the gem stones to give to the leader in Monrovia to facilitate these contacts. Before this, of course, we were aware that some transactions was [sic] going on as on several occasions he made visit to Monrovia through the help of one Benjamin Legon, a Liberia Security personnel; in collaboration with the Adjutant General.<sup>6254</sup>

Adjutant General:

These diamonds were with Mosquito when we decided that we should made good use of it by creating an avenue for outside contacts since the pressure was high against us. Then luckily, General Ibrahim arrived the same day. There and then, we all agreed to move to Monrovia to meet the big brother this move coincided with Benjamin leaving for Monrovia also... Bra told Benjamin that they had something that they want to presence [sic] to Big Brother in Monrovia so that he will help us.

...Benjamin further said that he was instructed to sneak with J.P. Koroma to Monrovia to avoid suspicion. Then 'Bra' replied that J.P. was not around, he then asked which area is J.P. presently. ### Defence Exhibit D-084 2830. Exhibit D-084, a Salute Report from Issa Sesay to Foday Sankoh, dated 27 September 1999, states that after Sesay had sustained an injury fighting in Bo following the Intervention, he moved back to Makeni in search of medical treatment.

Whilst in Makeni, I went to visit J P Koroma who was hiding in his village. J P Koroma asked me to arrange and supervise the movement of his entire family to Kailahun as ECOMOG were advancing and the Clandestine Radio 98.1 FM, had accounted that he was hiding in his village.

I contacted General Mosquito and the order was given to escort the Former Head of State to our Kailahun base. First we had to open a road to Kono. This was done in conjunction with Superman and Brig. Mike Lamin.

One morning [in Buedu], the Chief Security Officer to the former AFRC Chairman J P Koroma informed me that his boss was planning to escape to Ghana along with his entire family. The CSO further told me that J P Koroma had a parcel of diamonds that he was planning on selling once out of the country.

This information came as a surprise to me and found it hard to believe that at a time when we were trying to put the fighting-men under command and control and provide necessary logistics to halt our retreat and move forward, J P Koroma would keep diamonds for his own use and flee leaving us with a problem that he had created.

Accompanied by Brig Mike Lamin and the CSO to J P Koroma I asked the latter to present the diamonds for the use of the Revolution. He complied and the matter was settled.

While in Buedu, Captain Michael Comber of the Mining Unit reported with a parcel of diamonds from Kono. The parcel was placed in my care by General Mosquito with the instructions to move with it to a transit point where I could be met by General Ibrahim and

Deliberations(a) Alleged Order to Attack Kono<sup>6259</sup>

2831. The evidence unequivocally demonstrates that after ECOMOG attacked Freetown, the AFRC and RUF fighters and their families fled the Freetown Peninsula on or about 13 or 14 February 1998 using boats which took them to Fogbo, from where they advanced to Masiaka<sup>6260</sup> and onto Makeni,<sup>6261</sup> where combined AFRC/RUF forces re-organised to attack Koidu Town, the primary town in Kono District.<sup>6262</sup> The first attack was unsuccessful, but in a second attack, the AFRC/RUF forces managed to recapture Koidu Town.<sup>6263</sup>

2832. The Trial Chamber notes that Samuel Kargbo is the only witness who testified regarding several satellite phone calls between Koroma and the Accused. Kargbo testified that in Magbonkineh, Koroma used a satellite phone to talk with the Accused regarding arrangements for Koroma and his family to get to Liberia by helicopter. The Accused told him that the helicopter could not land in Magbonkineh because of jet raids.<sup>6264</sup> Koroma then went with Kargbo to a village near Kabala but returned from there when his wife was recognised and told Kargbo he had spoken again with the Accused who had told him to capture Kono as it would be easier to pick him up there by helicopter.<sup>6265</sup> Koroma then waited in the bush while Kargbo and others rallied commanders in Kabala who then all moved to Makeni to reorganise for the attack on Kono.<sup>6266</sup> When the attack failed, Koroma spoke again with the Accused by satellite phone from Makeni, where they had retreated, and the Accused reiterated his instruction to Koroma to capture Kono and said that if he did so, the Accused would send a helicopter.<sup>6267</sup>

2833. Kargbo said he witnessed the calls made in Koroma's village and after the retreat to Makeni, although he only heard Koroma speaking.<sup>6268</sup> Kargbo was not a witness to the first call instructing Koroma to capture Kono. He said that Koroma told him that he had spoken again with the Accused.<sup>6269</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that Kargbo did not hear the content of what the Accused is alleged to have said to Koroma and relied on Koroma for a report of the call as well as the fact that Koroma was speaking with the Accused. The Trial Chamber takes into account, however, when assessing the weight of his testimony, the fact that Kargbo was in close proximity to Koroma during two of the calls and able to hear his side of the alleged conversation with the Accused.

2834. The Trial Chamber recalls that Samuel Kargbo is a generally credible witness.<sup>6270</sup> However, as the evidence of the phone calls with the Accused relies entirely on the testimony of Kargbo, the Trial Chamber has carefully reviewed the extent to which his account of these particular events is corroborated in other respects by witnesses who testified with regard to the attack on and recapture of Kono. In doing so, the Trial Chamber is cognisant of Kargbo's testimony that Koroma's plans to flee Sierra Leone by helicopter were intended to be secret and were not therefore disclosed to other members of the AFRC/RUF.<sup>6271</sup>

(i) Events surrounding the first call with the Accused at Johnny Paul Koroma's village

2835. Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Issa Sesay corroborate Kargbo's account that, immediately after the retreat from Freetown in mid-February 1998, he drove Koroma to his village in Magbonkinah where Kargbo says the first call to the Accused was made.<sup>6272</sup>

2836. Kargbo's testimony with regard to Koroma's call to the BBC immediately prior to the call to the Accused is corroborated by the testimony of Issa Sesay,<sup>6273</sup> as well as Prosecution Exhibit P-132,<sup>6274</sup> which indicates that a call almost identical in content was made to the BBC. Bobson Sesay also testified that Koroma spoke to Robin White explaining that he was still in the Peninsula although according to Bobson Sesay's account, Koroma also announced Operation Pay Yourself, something which Kargbo denied happened during the call.<sup>6275</sup> However, Kargbo testified that Koroma made this call at the same time as he called the Accused, upon their arrival in Magbonkinah,<sup>6276</sup> while Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Issa Sesay both testified that Koroma made the call in Masiaka.<sup>6277</sup>

(ii) Events prior to the first attack on Kono

2837. No witnesses other than Kargbo testified with regard to Koroma's trip to the Kabala area. The Trial Chamber is, however, cogniscent of Kargbo's evidence that he was travelling alone with Koroma's party at this time. Bobson Sesay's testimony corroborates Kargbo's account that there was a meeting in Kabala Town, attended by AFRC and RUF commanders at which plans were made for the attack on Kono.<sup>6278</sup> Both Kargbo and Bobson Sesay testified that this meeting took place in Koroma's absence and both testified that Denis Mingo (a.k.a Superman) attended. The Trial Chamber notes that each of these two witnesses excluded, either expressly or impliedly, the presence of the other at this meeting: Kargbo testified that although he knew Bobson Sesay to be one of those who retreated from Freetown, he was never with him and did not see him again until they met in Liberia;<sup>6279</sup> Bobson Sesay testified that after the meeting in Kabala the group moved to Koroma's village where they then met, inter alia, Samuel Kargbo.<sup>6280</sup> Bobson Sesay testified that SAJ Musa convened this meeting and ordered the attack on Kono there. Kargbo did not mention SAJ Musa as having convened or attended this meeting but he said arrangements were made at the meeting for the attack, which in the Trial Chamber's view is not inconsistent with Bobson Sesay's testimony, though less specific.

2838. The Trial Chamber notes that witnesses Isaac Mongor, Issa Sesay and Bobson Sesay testified that prior to the attack on Kono, they attended a meeting with Koroma in his village, Magbonkineh, at which the attack on Kono was ordered by Koroma.<sup>6281</sup> Both Issa Sesay and Bobson Sesay testified that Denis Mingo also attended this meeting.<sup>6282</sup> Bobson Sesay testified that Kargbo was present at this meeting. Sesay testified that "the Honourables" were present,<sup>6283</sup> and Isaac Mongor also testified to the presence of Koroma's "securities".<sup>6284</sup> These accounts are inconsistent with Kargbo's testimony in a number of ways. First, Kargbo did not testify to a meeting in Magbonkineh. Second, Kargbo testified that Mingo had moved with him from Kabala Town directly to Makeni<sup>6285</sup> before the troops assembled for the Kono attack. In this case, Koroma and Kargbo would not have been in Koroma's village for the meeting described by the other witnesses. By Kargbo's account, Koroma did not return to his village after he had left following the first call to the Accused. This contradicts Mongor's and Bobson Sesay's testimony that they travelled with Koroma from the meeting in Magbonkineh to Makeni before the attack on Kono.<sup>6286</sup> However, the Trial Chamber notes that in cross-examination when Kargbo repeated his account, he omitted reference to the journey to Kabala and stated that having received the first call from the Accused, Koroma decided at that point to travel to Kailahun,<sup>6287</sup> presumably from his village where he received the call.

2839. Issa Sesay, Isaac Mongor and Foday Lansana corroborate Kargbo's testimony that Koroma ordered the attack on Kono.<sup>6288</sup> Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that SAJ Musa gave the original order which Koroma 're-inforced' when the commanders reconvened in Koroma's village.<sup>6289</sup> Perry Kamara testified that the decision to attack Kono was taken at a meeting in Makeni convened on the orders of Bockarie partly for the purpose of discussing how to get Koroma from Makeni to Buedu.<sup>6290</sup> The Trial Chamber notes, however, the testimonies of Issa Sesay and Alimamy Bobson Sesay that Johnny Paul Koroma was in command of the forces in Makeni at that time and would therefore have had the ultimate responsibility for the decision to attack Kono.<sup>6291</sup>

(iii) Events surrounding the second attack on Kono

2840. With regard to the second attack, there are varying accounts of what happened. When the forces met resistance on their first attempt to take Koidu Town, according to Kargbo, they retreated to Makeni where Koroma received another order from the Accused to re-attack, pursuant to which Koroma sent Kargbo and others to the front line with an order for the troops to re-organise themselves for a second, successful, attack on Koidu Town.<sup>6292</sup> None of the other witnesses testified that Koroma expressly ordered the second attack on Koidu Town or that the Accused ultimately issued such an order. In the main, however, their testimonies do not substantially contradict Kargbo's account.

2841. The testimony of Isaac Mongor corroborates Kargbo's testimony that Koroma retreated to Makeni.<sup>6293</sup> Several other witnesses testified that Koroma withdrew when the forces met resistance. TF1-371 testified that he withdrew half-way to Makeni when he heard that Koidu Town had been captured. His testimony that Koroma was with him when he entered Koidu Town indicates that Koroma had also withdrawn.<sup>6294</sup> Bobson Sesay testified that upon learning of the initial retreat to Bumpe, Koroma retreated further and after Koidu Town was captured, Bobson Sesay and others, including Denis Mingo, picked Koroma up from Magbonkineh and brought him to Koidu Town.<sup>6295</sup> That Koroma was picked up from his village by Mingo is also corroborated by Issa Sesay.<sup>6296</sup> Only TF1-375 testified that Koroma stayed with the advancing troops as they re-organised for the second attack.<sup>6297</sup>

2842. While Bobson Sesay testified that the order for the second attack on Kono came from Issa Sesay,<sup>6298</sup> Isaac Mongor, TF1-371, Bobson Sesay, TF1-539 and TF1-375 all testified that this attack was organised amongst those who remained at the front line.<sup>6299</sup> The Trial Chamber is of the view that this does not preclude an order having been given by Koroma.

(iv) Koroma's Decision to move to Monrovia via Kailahun

2844. There is substantial evidence that Bockarie wanted Koroma to travel to Buedu. Perry Kamara testified that the convoy which attacked Koidu Town was organised in Makeni for the purpose of escorting Koroma to Kailahun.<sup>6302</sup> TF1-371's evidence that the convoy was organised for the purpose of moving the AFRC headquarters to Kailahun is also consistent with Kamara's testimony.<sup>6303</sup> According to Isaac Mongor, Bockarie instructed him to bring Koroma to Kailahun,<sup>6304</sup> and Issa Sesay testified that Koroma ordered the AFRC/RUF to withdraw to Kono because he said Koroma had agreed with Bockarie that he would withdraw to Kailahun.<sup>6305</sup> Sesay's evidence is corroborated by Defence Exhibit D-084, Sesay's own Salute Report written in September 1999 in which Sesay reported "I contacted General Mosquito and the order was given to escort the Former Head of State to our Kailahun base".<sup>6306</sup> Although all this evidence relates to the period before Koidu Town was recaptured, the Trial Chamber considers that, in demonstrating Bockarie's intention to move Koroma to Kailahun, it is consistent with Kargbo's testimony that Bockarie sent the message to Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) that Koroma should come to Buedu.

2845. TF1-585's testimony that after Bockarie returned to Buedu, she heard him say that Benjamin Yeaten told him to call Koroma down to Buedu, after which he said that he was going to call Superman to bring Koroma to Buedu also corroborates the testimony of Kargbo that Bockarie was conveying a message from the Accused. According to TF1-585, Bockarie said that Yeaten had told him that the instruction came from Charles Taylor.<sup>6307</sup> TF1-585 also testified to seeing Bockarie make the call to Superman.<sup>6308</sup> While the timing of the message to bring Koroma to Buedu is unclear, the message itself was attested to by many witnesses and their testimony is supported by contemporaneous documentary evidence.

2846. The Trial Chamber notes that Issa Sesay corroborated Kargbo's testimony that the satellite phone Koroma was using ran out of credit around this time. However, Sesay testified that this happened when Koroma had already arrived in Kailahun,<sup>6309</sup> which would not have prevented him from calling the Accused after the recapture of Kono. The Trial Chamber also notes that TF1-371 testified that throughout the journey from Kono to Kailahun, there was a VHF radio on which they were communicating with Bockarie. Perry Kamara testified that after the meeting in Makeni, where the attack on Kono was planned, the convoy travelled in three groups, each of which had a radio operator. The evidence therefore suggests that, even if his own radio set could not be used, Koroma appears to have had access to radio communications. However, the Trial Chamber notes Kargbo's testimony that Koroma's discussions with the Accused regarding a helicopter were not disclosed to others. The Trial Chamber also notes that satellite phones were a more secure and confidential means of communication and that the radio stations in Monrovia were "restricted frequencies".<sup>6310</sup>

(v) The Accused's attempt to evacuate Koroma from Buedu

2847. The Trial Chamber notes that other than Kargbo, no witnesses testified about Land Rovers sent by the Accused to Buedu with the intention of transporting Koroma's party to Monrovia. However, Exhibit D-008 reports that the Liberian security Benjamin<sup>6311</sup> "said that he was instructed to sneak with J.P. Koroma to Monrovia to avoid suspicion" but that he left without Koroma when Bockarie told him that Koroma was already "fairly [sic] miles away", presumably in Kangama.<sup>6312</sup> D-008 further corroborates Kargbo's evidence of a continuing plan at this stage to transfer Koroma out of Sierra Leone to Monrovia, although the details of who was to do that are unclear, as Kargbo did not mention a "Benjamin" in his testimony.

2848. Issa Sesay refuted Kargbo's account regarding the Land Rovers, testifying that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) was not in Buedu in 1998.<sup>6313</sup> The Trial Chamber notes, however, that it has heard evidence from numerous credible witnesses that Tamba travelled frequently to Buedu with ammunition during 1998.<sup>6314</sup> Sesay also denied that Ibrahim Bah was in Buedu at this time, testifying that he, Sesay, was the one who took Koroma's diamonds to Ibrahim Bah in Monrovia and that these were the diamonds that he lost there.<sup>6315</sup> Kargbo's testimony that Bah was present in Buedu around the time the diamonds were taken from Koroma is corroborated by the testimony of TF1-371 that Ibrahim Bah arrived in Buedu on the Accused's orders shortly after Koroma's party came<sup>6316</sup> and by Exhibit D-008,<sup>6317</sup> while Sesay's testimony is at odds with his own contemporaneous Salute Report, D-084, in which he stated that the diamonds that he lost at his "transit point"<sup>6318</sup> were brought to Buedu from Kono by a member of the Mining Unit and were not those taken from Koroma.<sup>6319</sup> D-008 and P-067 both report that the diamonds taken from Koroma were given to Bah for forward transport to Liberia and that the diamonds taken by Sesay to Monrovia originated in Kono.<sup>6320</sup> In view of Augustine Mallah's own testimony that he did not know anyone by the name of Ibrahim Bah, the Trial Chamber does not place any weight on his testimony that he did not see Bah in Buedu at the time the diamonds were taken from Koroma.<sup>6321</sup> In light of these considerations, the Trial Chamber does not accept Sesay's challenge to Kargbo's evidence and finds it to be without foundation.

Kabia (a.k.a. Rambo) alerting the RUF to Koroma's plan to escape with diamonds.<sup>6322</sup> Issa Sesay also testified that the diamonds incident was triggered by a disclosure by Moses Kabia that Koroma was planning to escape, although Sesay's testimony was that Koroma was planning to travel to Ghana, not Liberia, for the purpose of buying weapons.<sup>6323</sup> The fact that Koroma's Chief Security Officer, Moses Kabia alerted the RUF to Koroma's intention to escape to Ghana is also reflected in Sesay's Salute Report, D-084.<sup>6324</sup> Exhibit P-067<sup>6325</sup> also corroborates Kargbo's evidence that new information about Koroma planning to use diamonds for his own benefit prompted Bockarie's order to search Koroma for diamonds. Augustine Mallah testified that Koroma himself brought the diamonds to Bockarie's attention at a meeting in Buedu, which led Bockarie to take the diamonds away from him. While Mallah recounts this sequence of events as immediate, without mention of Moses Kabia, it is consistent with Issa Sesay's account that Koroma first told the RUF in Buedu that he had diamonds with him, and it is consistent with the other accounts that the diamonds were confiscated by Bockarie.<sup>6326</sup> Even though she did not know what was meant when Bockarie said that he had been told to bring Koroma and his party to Buedu because "they have something for them", TF1-585's evidence also suggests that Bockarie may already have known that Koroma was in possession of diamonds when he arrived in Buedu.

2850. While noting the discrepancies in detail regarding the accounts of the various witnesses of what happened in Buedu, the Trial Chamber finds the larger picture to be relatively consistent with Kargbo's testimony that Koroma was intending to travel with diamonds to Monrovia, and that Bockarie intervened and confiscated the diamonds.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

Mallah and Karmoh Kanneh both testified to the use of helicopters by the Accused or his subordinates in 1998.<sup>6328</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Mallah and Kanneh are generally credible witnesses.<sup>6329</sup> The Accused also gave conflicting testimony as to the date at which the Liberian Government acquired its own helicopters. He stated that the Liberian authorities first obtained helicopters in 2000.<sup>6330</sup> However, later in his testimony, the Accused stated that the Liberian Government was in possession of Mi-2 helicopters from the beginning of 1999.<sup>6331</sup> He then affirmed on cross-examination that the Liberian Government had one Mi-2 helicopter as of 1999, and two Mi-2 helicopters as of the end of 1999.<sup>6332</sup> In light of the inconsistencies in the Accused's testimony and the corroborative evidence of Mallah and Kanneh that the Accused did use helicopters in 1998, the Trial Chamber considers that the Accused has not raised a reasonable doubt as to Kargbo's account on this basis.

2852. The Accused also made reference to two helicopters owned by the Sierra Leonean government.<sup>6333</sup> The Trial Chamber understands the Accused to imply that it would not have been necessary for him to supply a helicopter when there were two already at the Koroma's disposal. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that both these helicopters had already been used on or around 13 February 1998 to fly other Junta commanders, including Victor King, out of Freetown and been forced by ECOMOG to land in Monrovia<sup>6334</sup> where they were impounded. They were not therefore available to the retreating Koroma. Taylor himself testified that ECOMOG detained the helicopters and their occupants in Liberia for "at least a couple of weeks or more".<sup>6335</sup> In any event, any helicopters in Sierra Leone may not have been at Koroma's disposal after he fled Freetown following the collapse of the Junta.

2853. The Defence submits that the Accused did not communicate with Johnny Paul Koroma via satellite phone at any time until 1999.<sup>6336</sup> The Accused testified more broadly that he had neither radio nor phone contact with Koroma before August 1999.<sup>6337</sup> In addition to assessing the credibility of the Accused's assertion more generally, it is relevant to the Trial Chamber to consider in the context of the current allegation whether the Accused and Koroma had communicated before the Intervention, such that Koroma therefore had a prior relationship with the Accused and the means to contact him when he was seeking to escape from Sierra Leone after the flight from Freetown. In that regard, the Trial Chamber has heard credible evidence that Gibril Massaquoi brought telephone numbers for, inter alia, the Accused to Koroma in the early days of the Junta regime<sup>6338</sup> following which Koroma engaged in several telephone conversations with the Accused.<sup>6339</sup> That the evidence indicates that these conversations took place on a landline telephone is irrelevant since it demonstrates that Koroma had the Accused's telephone number and had communicated with him by telephone before the February 1998 Intervention. The Trial Chamber also notes Isaac Mongor's evidence that before the Intervention, the Accused and Koroma had discussed by radio the prospect of Koroma visiting the Accused in Monrovia.<sup>6340</sup> In light of the foregoing evidence, the Trial Chamber does not find the Accused's testimony credible.

2854. The Defence also contests the allegation by reference to Mohamed Kabbah's evidence that he did not see or hear any message from Charles Taylor ordering the RUF to hold Kono or any radio message that could have come from Charles Taylor whereby orders were given about operations in Kono or the retreat from Freetown.<sup>6341</sup> It is Kargbo's testimony that if such an instruction or advice was given to Koroma, this happened during confidential conversations on a satellite phone, not over the radio where Kabbah could have overheard them. As such, the Trial Chamber is not of the view that Kabbah's evidence contradicts Kargbo's testimony.

(vii) Conclusions

2855. The Trial Chamber notes that Kargbo's evidence is substantially corroborated in various aspects. With regard to some details it is inconsistent with the testimony of other witnesses, but the Trial Chamber notes that there are numerous inconsistencies among all the witnesses with regard to precisely when and where meetings took place, who was present at those meetings, and how the military events relating to the recapture of Kono unfolded. The Trial Chamber considers that these discrepancies are not major and can be explained by the disorder that generally surrounds a military retreat and regrouping. In the Trial Chamber's view there is broad correlation among the accounts of the various witnesses. Recalling that Kargbo's testimony is often imprecise,<sup>6342</sup> the Trial Chamber finds that the inconsistencies noted do not challenge his credibility and it accepts his testimony that the Accused was in contact with Koroma and twice instructed him to capture Kono.

(b) Alleged Order to hold Kono

2856. With regard to the order allegedly given by the Accused to hold Kono after it had been recaptured, the most detailed evidence in support of this allegation is in the testimony of Perry Kamara. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Kamara is a generally credible witness.<sup>6343</sup> Perry Kamara testified that he took down a radio message from Bockarie to Issa Sesay and Superman telling them that he had consulted with the Accused who told him not to lose Kono because from there he could get diamonds to trade with Taylor for ammunition.<sup>6344</sup> Kamara said Bockarie repeated this message frequently saying that mining in Kono would enable them to get arms and ammunition, food and drugs from Taylor.<sup>6345</sup>

2857. TF1-371, whom the Trial Chamber also finds to be generally credible,<sup>6346</sup> testified that after one of his trips to Monrovia in 1998, Bockarie mentioned that he had received an instruction from the Accused that the RUF should “ensure that we maintain Kono”.<sup>6347</sup> The Trial Chamber considers it most likely that this trip to Monrovia and the instruction mentioned occurred later in time, because the witness mentions the diamonds that were subsequently taken from Koroma as having been given to the Accused. Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber notes that the instruction is consistent with Kamara’s testimony, and that Kamara testified that Bockarie repeated it frequently.<sup>6348</sup> Mongor’s account corroborates Kamara’s testimony in so far as he testified that Bockarie gave the order to hold Kono although he did not mention the Accused in this context.<sup>6349</sup>

2858. Samuel Kargbo testified that after Koroma received a message from Bockarie to travel to Kailahun, he convened a meeting of the AFRC and RUF high command and announced that he was going to meet Taylor in Monrovia but would be back. He ordered the fighters to “hold the ground” in his absence.<sup>6350</sup> However, there is no indication in Kargbo’s testimony that the order ultimately came from the Accused. Similarly, Issa Sesay testified that Koroma told the troops to “defend Kono” without any reference to the Accused.<sup>6351</sup>

2859. The Trial Chamber does not find dispositive Mohamed Kabbah’s evidence that he did not see or hear any message from Charles Taylor ordering the RUF to hold Kono or any radio message that could have come from Charles Taylor whereby orders were given about operations in Kono or the retreat from Freetown. It is Kamara’s testimony that if such an instruction or advice was given to Bockarie, this happened in person in Monrovia<sup>6352</sup> and not over the radio.

2860. The Defence contests the Prosecution’s allegation regarding the Accused’s order to hold Kono by reference to Karmoh Kanneh’s evidence regarding the meeting in December 1998 at which the offensive on Kono was planned. The Defence also relies on TF1-371’s evidence that Bockarie made plans with Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon after the failed Fitti-Fatta mission in mid-1998.<sup>6353</sup> The Trial Chamber does not find this evidence relevant in deciding whether the Accused told Bockarie to hold Kono in February/March 1998. Trial Chamber will deal with this evidence in relation to the allegations regarding the mission to attack Kono in December 1998.

2861. The Accused denied that any instructions that Bockarie may have made to his troops to hold Kono originated from him.<sup>6354</sup> In light of the credible evidence the Trial Chamber has heard from both Perry Kamara and TF1-371 that Bockarie was told by the Accused that the AFRC/RUF should maintain control over Kono, the Trial Chamber does not accept this denial.

2862. The Trial Chamber has reviewed the Prosecution's submission that the order to hold Kono was reiterated by the Accused at a secret meeting through his representatives Ibrahim Bah and Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle)<sup>6355</sup> and notes that the testimony of Mohamed Kabbah and Albert Saidu cited does not contain any evidence relating to an order to hold Kono. Indeed, the Prosecution's own summary of the evidence refers to an alleged direction from the Accused to "take hold" i.e. capture, rather than to "hold" Kono.<sup>6356</sup> This evidence will be dealt with by the Trial Chamber in relation to the allegations regarding the subsequent Fitti-Fatta mission in mid-1998.

Findings

2864. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused told Bockarie to be sure to maintain control of Kono for the purpose of trading diamonds with him for arms and ammunition.

3. Operation Fitti-Fatta

Submissions of the Parties

2865. The Prosecution alleges that when the AFRC/RUF were again pushed out of Koidu Town, the Accused ordered them through his own Liberian subordinates and through Sam Bockarie, to retake Koidu Town. Thereafter, “Taylor continually issued directives and encouragement to Bockarie concerning the urgency of recapturing Kono District”.<sup>6357</sup>

2866. The Prosecution also alleges that the Accused planned Fitti-Fatta, the attack on Koidu Town in June 1998,<sup>6358</sup> as the first step in a “big mission” to recapture Freetown and thus control Sierra Leone. According to that plan, the initial attacks would aim to first secure the Kono District in the North-East but formed part of a greater multi-axis operation encompassing attacks from the North via Koinadugu and Bombali and from the East via Kenema District, with all groups converging on Masiaka before moving on to Waterloo.<sup>6359</sup>

2867. The Defence does not contest that the RUF, specifically Bockarie and Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman), or Bockarie, Mingo and Mike Lamin planned the Fitti-Fatta operation which was launched in July 1998,<sup>6360</sup> or August 1998,<sup>6361</sup> and which ended in failure.<sup>6362</sup> It submits, however, that the Accused neither planned nor participated in the Fitti-Fatta mission<sup>6363</sup> and that the meeting to plan the mission was nothing more than that – a meeting to plan an attack on Kono and there were no other targets discussed.<sup>6364</sup> The Defence challenges specific aspects of Perry Kamara’s testimony regarding the overarching plan to capture Freetown and thus Sierra Leone.<sup>6365</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Perry Kamara

2868. In early 1998, witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>6366</sup> was based with Superman in Kono after the first attack on Koidu Town in 1998.<sup>6367</sup> He testified that around April or May 1998, he accompanied Superman to Buedu. Superman had been called to Buedu in order for Sam Bockarie to explain to him the plan that he had brought from Charles Taylor in Liberia so that Superman, in return, could come and explain this to the other fighters and other camps on the ground. After they arrived, he and Superman attended a meeting called by Bockarie at his house which was also attended by Mike Lamin, Isaac Mongor and Pa Rogers, as well as “other authorities on the ground”. He testified that most of the battalion and brigade commanders were there.<sup>6368</sup>

2869. The first item on the agenda was Sesay’s loss of the diamonds he had taken to Monrovia. Bockarie confirmed that Sesay had been sent to Pendembu as part of his punishment and that the matter would finally be dealt with when Foday Sankoh was released from Nigeria.<sup>6369</sup> Bockarie then showed the group to two rooms in his house where they saw arms and boxes of ammunition, a commercial radio and a satellite phone.<sup>6370</sup> In the meeting, Bockarie also discussed the building of an airstrip in Buedu.<sup>6371</sup>

2870. Kamara explained that Bockarie had recently returned from visiting Taylor who had given him a “very big plan” to take over Sierra Leone. After the group had inspected the ammunition, they brought out a map of Sierra Leone and Bockarie said “this is how Taylor has planned and he told [me] to come and implement it”. Bockarie showed the attendees on a map the towns that Taylor had told them to attack: Koidu Town (a.k.a. Kono, a.k.a. Sefadu), Kabala, Makeni, Magburaka, Matotoka, Mile 91, Masiaka, Waterloo, Port Loko and Kambia. Kamara said that Bockarie “said that was what they planned before he left Mr Taylor”.<sup>6372</sup>

2871. Kamara testified that Taylor’s plan required Superman and SAJ Musa to be jointly responsible attacking Kabala and Makeni. The group that was going to join Gullit in Rosos were going to be responsible for Port Loko and Kambia, including Lungi Airport. Those who were left behind in Kono after Superman left were going to be responsible for Kono, Sewafe, Makali, Magburaka and Mile 91. The meeting point for all the troops would then be Masiaka because that was a main junction in Sierra Leone. After the troops reached Waterloo, they should then make “a fresh plan, a new one”. Bockarie said that that was what Taylor had told him.<sup>6373</sup> The ultimate destination was to be Freetown after all these district headquarters had been captured.<sup>6374</sup>

2872. Kamara explained that the Fitti-Fatta mission was supposed to happen before, not as part of, the big mission. The focus of Fitti-Fatta to attack and capture Koidu Town in order to create panic among ECOMOG so that they would be confined to Koidu Town and “would not be able to make moves towards us”. Bockarie told them that the arms and ammunition he had showed them were not for “this first mission plan”. He said that Taylor had told him that he would provide more ammunitions for this “big mission” later.<sup>6375</sup>

2873. According to Kamara, as part of the plan, Bockarie told Superman to join SAJ Musa in Koinadugu District “for a fast and smooth operation, because SAJ Musa was not so good at jungle operations”. Bockarie therefore gave Superman ammunition for that location too, saying that he should carry them directly to SAJ Musa’s place after Fitti-Fatta.<sup>6376</sup> Kamara explained that SAJ Musa was already aware of this plan for Superman to go and join him because before Superman left Superman Ground to come to Buedu, SAJ Musa, Superman and Mosquito “always discussed on that”. Kamara stated that there was a message to that effect following a radio discussion: that Bockarie had gone and got instructions about a mission from Taylor in Liberia. Bockarie said that Superman was to go to Buedu and that Superman should go to SAJ Musa to explain to him anything that was discussed in Buedu.

Kamara explained that at times the three men called each other and sometimes they sent messages.<sup>6377</sup> While Superman, Mosquito and SAJ Musa had a relationship at that time and spoke about this issue, SAJ Musa accepted that Superman should go to meet him so that they could carry out their military exercise together.<sup>6378</sup>

2874. Kamara testified that the Fitti-Fatta mission commenced at night at 7.00pm and ended the next morning. It was short-lived because so many fighters were wounded and killed.<sup>6379</sup> After the Fitti-Fatta mission, around end-May 1998, Superman moved to Koinadugu where SAJ Musa was stationed.<sup>6380</sup>

2875. Kamara testified that, around a week after Johnny Paul Koroma and Issa Sesay arrived in Buedu, Koroma met with Sam Bockarie and transmitted a radio message for all AFRC, RUF and STF saying that because he did not understand jungle exercise, he was asking all the AFRC and RUF to be taking command from Mosquito and that, from the date he wrote the message, Sam Bockarie should be leader for the movement from then on.<sup>6381</sup> In response to the order, SAJ Musa said that he was an old military man and that Mosquito was a guerrilla so he would not allow Mosquito to control him and he was not part of that order.<sup>6382</sup> Another group, comprising Gullit, Five-Five, Bazy, Papa and Junior Lion, who were not happy with the order, “went and had their own area that was far from Kono”.<sup>6383</sup> Kamara later testified that they moved to Rosos in Bombali District when this incident occurred.<sup>6384</sup> Once they had established themselves at Rosos, Gullit contacted SAJ Musa who informed Bockarie that they were there. Kamara explained that by that time they were only able to communicate a little with SAJ Musa because the radio was not good at all. Sometimes they could only manage once a week but SAJ Musa was able to give the details to Sam Bockarie.<sup>6385</sup>

2876. Witness TF1-371, an RUF commander<sup>6386</sup> who was in Buedu between March 1998 and April 1999,<sup>6387</sup> testified that he did not recall any meeting between Denis Mingo and Bockarie before Mingo moved to the Kabala axis. TF1-371 also testified that after one of his trips to Monrovia in 1998, Bockarie mentioned that he had received a “specific instruction” from Taylor that the RUF should “ensure that we maintain Kono... and at the same time to ensure that we recapture Freetown, recapture Freetown”.<sup>6388</sup> TF1-371 testified that Bockarie ordered a mission around mid-1998 led by “Kallon and others” which was called Fitti-Fatta. It was aborted when they met strong resistance from ECOMOG. By “aborted”, the witness meant that they were unsuccessful in their mission to capture Kono.<sup>6389</sup>

2877. TF1-371 testified that Bockarie made “a series of trips” to Monrovia throughout “the latter part of 1998”,<sup>6390</sup> “after June, July, August”,<sup>6391</sup> “from 1998 ending to early 1999”.<sup>6392</sup> While he could specifically recall three trips that were essential, there were other trips, the precise number of which he could not recall.<sup>6393</sup>

2878. Witness TF1-375, an RUF fighter,<sup>6394</sup> testified that about three weeks after they retreated from Koidu Town, Bockarie contacted Superman via radio to advise that he was

Once he came we had a meeting where he mentioned about a specific instruction that he had received from Mr Taylor and that was what he said: To ensure that we maintain Kono, and that was the time when he intensified the mining operation in Kono so as to enable to pay for those materials, and at the same time to ensure that we recapture Freetown, recapture Freetown. He mentioned that briefly, one of those trips. So after that the mining at Tongo and Kono District were intensified. ... Well, Kono was – had always been the bread basket for the junta, for the RUF. It had always been the source of supporting, or sustaining, the armed rebellion through the diamond products and that was the only source. I mean, in fact, we had all the diamonds. sending “guests” from Buedu who had come from Liberia. Superman sent people to receive them at the Moa River, and they returned accompanied by up to eight Liberians. The men had Liberian accents and brought arms and ammunition, as well as two medicine men who marked the fighters to protect them. The medicine men told the fighters that they had done the same to fighters “during the NPFL time under Taylor”. TF1-375 testified that one of the Liberians was an SSS officer named “Osebo Demy”, whom he came to know subsequently in Liberia as one of Yeaten’s subordinates in the SSS.<sup>6395</sup>

2879. The witness testified that two forums of senior officers were called. The witness attended the first, an open forum, where the Liberians said that they had brought arms and ammunition from Liberia. He stated that the Liberians “want[ed] us to retake Kono, Koidu Town... because it would be important for us. When we take back Koidu Town, mining would be going on and we would have a lot of support.”<sup>6396</sup> The second, closed-door forum, took place at Superman’s house between Superman, the Liberians, Rambo, and Honourable Adams of the AFRC. Superman also told the witness after his meeting with the Liberians that they had also told him to take over Kono so that mining could take place there and that that would help them move faster with the war.<sup>6397</sup>

2880. TF1-375 stated that the goal of the Fitti-Fatta mission was “to just go on the rampage and retake over Koidu Town” but that it was unsuccessful.<sup>6398</sup> TF1-375 testified that Superman instructed him to go to Wordu to join Komba Gbundema, to hand over the ammunition to him and to go to Kurubonla to meet SAJ Musa to work with him to attack Mongo Bendugu. On the basis of that instruction, the witness went to Wordu two days after the Fitti-Fatta mission.<sup>6399</sup>

Paul Koroma, Jungle, Issa Sesay, Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit), Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman), Isaac Mongor, Eddie Kanneh, “AB”, “FOC”, Akim Turay and SYB Rogers, taking place on the Foya Road between Waterworks and Buedu between April and June 1998,<sup>6401</sup> before the death of Sani Abacha. Kanneh said that Sam Bockarie had just returned from Monrovia at this time and that the meeting took place in thick forest because they were afraid of the air raids. Bockarie spoke at the meeting about, inter alia, his new promotion, the command structure between the AFRC and RUF, the Fitti-Fatta mission, difficulties with SAJ Musa, Bockarie’s planned trip to Burkina Faso with General Ibrahim and the diamonds that Issa Sesay had lost in Monrovia.<sup>6402</sup> SAJ Musa was not at the meeting as he was in the northern area.<sup>6403</sup>

2882. Kanneh stated that Bockarie said that “he would want us to go and clear the mining area, that is Kono, and that the Pa, Charles Taylor, had told him that nothing goes for nothing and that he had no machine to make arms”.<sup>6404</sup> Bockarie was planning to go to Burkina Faso “in that same month. After the month that we held the meeting, after the Fitti-Fatta operation...”<sup>6405</sup>

2883. Kanneh testified that Bockarie had told Taylor about “Operation Free the Leader”, the mission in which the RUF planned to capture Freetown and release Foday Sankoh. As this plan would require heavy weaponry, Taylor had offered to “link us up where we would be able to get direct material”.<sup>6406</sup>

2884. Kanneh testified that after Bockarie had spoken, Jungle spoke and buttressed the introduction Sam Bockarie had given and said that he would try his utmost best to see that

On cross-examination, Kanneh testified twice that the meeting took place after the death of Sani Abacha in June 1998 (Karmoh Kanneh, Transcript 13 May 2008, pp. 9600-9601, 9678). On the second of these occasions, he stated that it could have been around August or September. things worked out well. Johnny Paul Koroma and others also spoke during the meeting that lasted for eight hours.<sup>6407</sup> Jungle did not give any order on Taylor's behalf at the meeting.<sup>6408</sup>

2885. Witness Albert Saidu, an RUF adjutant,<sup>6409</sup> testified that in around April 1998<sup>6410</sup> he was among those called by Bockarie to a forum in a secret location between Buedu and Dawa. It was attended by a number of senior commanders including Issa Sesay, Peter Vandi, Augustine Gbao and Superman. Colonel Jungle and General Ibrahim were also there as guests. The witness was told by a colleague that the Liberian General seated close to Colonel Jungle at the high table was General Ibrahim. Bockarie subsequently introduced him and General Ibrahim subsequently introduced himself because "most of us did not actually know him."<sup>6411</sup> At this forum, Sesay's loss of the diamonds in Monrovia, pressure on the AFRC/RUF from ECOMOG and the CDF, and the building of an airstrip in Buedu were discussed. Bockarie said that the reason he called the meeting was for him to explain the situation with the diamonds to everyone and that in the RUF they did not have any other way or means to get materials: it was only through the diamonds they passed over to Charles Taylor in exchange for arms and ammunition.<sup>6412</sup>

2886. Saidu stated that Colonel Jungle addressed the meeting, thanking Sam Bockarie and all of those who came saying that:

[H]e was praying that the cause of the revolution will be successful. He said he was there to tell us that the RUF and the AFRC and the relationship between them was recognised by Charles Taylor, and that he was saying that although we have been pushed out of the city, we shouldn't worry ourselves, but that he was advising that we try and get hold over Kono, that was where we will get our resources.<sup>6413</sup>

2887. General Ibrahim then addressed the meeting:

[He] buttressed what they came to do. What Colonel Jungle had already addressed us about, that Charles Taylor sent them to come and prove to us that he is still with us, that we shouldn't worry, although we have been pushed out he is trying to – we should be prepared to settle down and he is trying for us to get more materials to strike again and so that we will be able to capture places like Kono and so many other places.<sup>6414</sup>

... He said that although most of us had seen Colonel Jungle before but [sic] he had now come to tell us that indeed he is coming directly from Charles Taylor and that both of them, they have come to address us on the relationship between Charles Taylor and the RUF and that the relationship was still going strong, that we shouldn't mind although we have been pushed out. He said that the only thing that he was advising was that we should try and recapture Kono and that the AFRC and us, we should always try and work hand in glove because if there were infightings amongst us we will not be able to concentrate on the fighting.<sup>6415</sup>

2888. Saidu testified that when General Ibrahim introduced himself, he said that he was part of the Liberian Government working under Charles Taylor and that was why he came.<sup>6416</sup>

2889. The witness explained:

Well, Kono - we know that Kono is where diamonds are. That was where we were able to mine and get diamonds very fast to speed up the revolution that we were fighting. But if we hadn't grips on Kono for us to get money or diamonds to fight the revolution, because the materials were being bought, we will not be able to get the materials except we will fight hard to get Kono for us to be able to sponsor the revolution.<sup>6417</sup>

Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

2890. Witness Mohamed Kabbah (a.k.a. Tourist), an RUF radio operator<sup>6418</sup> in Buedu after the Intervention,<sup>6419</sup> testified that around a month after he arrived in Buedu and after Bockarie had been to Monrovia and returned, he attended a meeting at a place called Waterworks on the Dawa Road leading towards Foya.<sup>6420</sup> Kabbah stated that a "large crowd” attended including Issa Sesay, Denis Mingo, Monkey Brown, Operator Zedman, King Perry, AFRC fighters and advisers such as Pa Rogers.<sup>6421</sup>

So the struggle had reached a point when these bits and pieces of ammunition that we were getting from Liberia was dwindling because the area of the struggle had become large and, you know, it is ammunition that fights war. So when Sam Bockarie returned it was at that time that he spoke about that, that he had discussed that with Charles Taylor, that we should try and get Kono and when we would have taken Kono we would get ammunition because when we get Kono we will get diamonds and he will help us to get ammunition. That was the discussion; the retaking of Kono so that we can mine and get enough ammunition, because the bits and pieces that he's<sup>6423</sup> been giving us used to help us. But what we wanted did not happen. That was a clear example, when he took that diamond the type of ammunition that he brought.<sup>6424</sup>

[W]hat I mean is that you want - you wanted a hundred boxes and when you go there somebody gives you ten, you will take it because you had no option. So the hundred that we wanted, if we had our diamonds, when we take them we will get our hundred.<sup>6425</sup>

2892. Witness TF1-585, an RUF radio operator,<sup>6426</sup> testified that in September 1998,<sup>6427</sup> Sam Bockarie convened a meeting in his compound with Issa Sesay, Junior Rambo (CO Isaac), Five-Five and Jungle. The purpose of the meeting was, in part, to discuss Sesay's

<sup>6427</sup> During her examination-in-chief, TF1-585 testified that three meetings took place in June, September and December 1999. On cross-examination, she corrected her testimony to say that they occurred in 1998 (TF1-585, Transcript 11 September 2008, pp. 15972-15973). In view of TF1-585's testimony in chief that the three meetings took place in the June, September and December before "January 6" (TF1-585, Transcript 8 September 2008, p. 15682), and that they took place within the same year that Johnny Paul Koroma was removed from power in Freetown (TF1-585, Transcript 8 September 1998, p. 15672), together with the witness's correction during her cross-examination, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness is referring to events that she punishment for losing diamonds in Monrovia and how to encourage the disgruntled soldiers to attack Kono in order to compensate for the diamonds lost by Sesay. TF1-585 knew that the meeting was called for these reasons because she heard Bockarie discussing with Eddie Kanneh about how Issa had lost the diamonds, that was a big setback for the movement and that the soldiers were all disgruntled. Bockarie said Issa feared being sent to the front lines so he wanted to convene that meeting “for the boys to be happy and everybody would come up with the decision as to what punishment was to be meted out to Issa and to organise that”. The witness testified that Sam Bockarie was to organise the punishment and give more arms and ammunition to send missions out to Kono and they would name the mission Fitti-Fatta. TF1-585 stated that she did not attend the meeting herself but that those who attended told her the same things about it. The outcome of the meeting was a decision to send Sesay to the front line as punishment where he would lead the mission to recapture Kono Town: “He should be there until Kono was captured. He should clear Kono”.<sup>6428</sup>

2893. TF1-585 testified that after the meeting, she saw Bockarie supply arms and ammunition to Issa Sesay, Rambo and the other fighters from the warehouse in front of his house, as well as used clothing and brand new white sneakers. Everything was in abundance.<sup>6429</sup>

2894. TF1-585 said that the Fitti-Fatta mission was carried out around two to three weeks after the meeting. She later read in the log-book that Superman, who was also around Kono at the time, had sent a radio message to Sam Bockarie reporting that the soldiers had failed to capture Koidu Town but had succeeded in capturing some ammunition and some Guinean soldiers. She explained that Superman sent the message because Issa Sesay was too afraid.<sup>6430</sup>

2895. TF1-585 testified that the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999 was discussed at the next (third) meeting which was held in Buedu.<sup>6431</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

2896. Witness Isaac Mongor, a senior commander of the RUF<sup>6432</sup> based in Kono District after the Intervention,<sup>6433</sup> testified that about a month after he arrived in Koidu, ECOMOG flushed them out of Koidu Town.<sup>6434</sup> Mongor stated that he, along with Superman and other commanders and Vanguarders in Koidu, was called to Buedu for a meeting but that he was unable to go. Mongor clarified that he was unable to go to the meeting because he and Superman, as the two commanders, could not leave at the same time so Mongor sent someone to represent him.<sup>6435</sup>

2897. After the meeting, Superman met Mongor at Gandorhun where he was based and explained what had happened. Mongor stated that Superman came with a lot of ammunition. Superman told Mongor that the meeting they had was for “us” to run a mission to capture Koidu and dislodge ECOMOG there. The name of the mission was to be Fitti-Fatta. After his conversation with Superman, Mongor then received a call from Mosquito who confirmed what Superman had told him, saying that a small amount of ammunition had arrived and that “Brother Jungle” had taken it from Taylor. Bockarie explained that they had sent them the ammunition for them to endeavour to take Koidu Town from ECOMOG. Mongor said “he showed me the ammunition and I agreed for us to go on that mission”.<sup>6436</sup> Mongor testified that in that mission, “we were to ensure that we recaptured Koidu ... and we were to kill anybody whom we could lay hands on”. The attack on Kono was not successful.<sup>6437</sup> The witness could not remember the precise month of Fitti-Fatta but confirmed that it was not long after they had been pushed out of Koidu Town that they undertook the mission and that it took place in the dry season of 1998, before the inception of the rainy season.<sup>6438</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

2898. Witness TF1-567, an RUF member,<sup>6439</sup> testified that while he was stationed at Balahun in Kailahun District, he received information that Superman had organised troops who called themselves Fitti-Fatta and tried to re-attack Koidu Town. Superman had received his ammunition for the attack from Sam Bockarie.<sup>6440</sup>

Prosecution Witness Alice Pyne

2899. Witness Alice Pyne, an RUF radio operator,<sup>6441</sup> testified that at some time after Issa Sesay had lost diamonds in Monrovia<sup>6442</sup> but before Sani Abacha died,<sup>6443</sup> Bockarie called a meeting in Buedu to decide what to do about the diamonds. There had been some disquiet among the commanders following the incident because they felt that Bockarie had shown favouritism to Sesay by punishing him so lightly, so Bockarie had called them to Buedu to tell them what had happened and what they had to do.<sup>6444</sup> The witness, Superman and around 150 of his men attended.<sup>6445</sup> Pyne testified that when she arrived in Buedu, Sam Bockarie's radio operator Sebatu came and told her that Bockarie was going to Foya in Liberia, following which the witness saw Bockarie and his bodyguards leave in their vehicles from her house, which was not far from Bockarie's. Later the same afternoon, Bockarie returned.<sup>6446</sup> The witness testified that she did not see the things they brought but when she was ready to return to Superman Ground, the things that they gave to Superman included arms, ammunition and alcoholic drinks and they said they had brought them from Foya.<sup>6447</sup>

2900. At Bockarie's request, Pyne then went with Superman into the zoebush outside Buedu where there were up to seven herbalists and juju men who said they would mark the RUF fighters to make them bulletproof at the "war front".<sup>6448</sup> Pyne testified that she also saw Colonel Jungle in the zoebush at this time.<sup>6449</sup> Pyne explained that she knew the herbalists were from Liberia, both from the language they spoke and because that was what Bockarie told Superman when he was handing them over to him. Pyne also testified that an elderly Gbandi woman had told her that the herbalists had been sent to Bockarie by Charles Taylor to help protect the RUF fighters, particularly those who would go to recapture Koidu Town from ECOMOG, against bullets.<sup>6450</sup> They then travelled back to Kono together with the herbalists, where Pyne described further markings taking place.<sup>6451</sup>

2901. The witness confirmed that the mission in question was called Fitti-Fatta.<sup>6452</sup> Pyne testified that before they left for the mission, Superman met with commanders and the men whom these commanders had brought, and the men who were at her own base, and they planned how to carry out this operation in Koidu, whereby all these commanders were to attack Koidu from their own positions.<sup>6453</sup> Pyne confirmed that she herself went on the mission which lasted one night and was unsuccessful. However, she testified that when they engaged the Guineans in combat, the Guineans ran away, abandoning their arms, heavy weapons and “a lot” of ammunition, which the rebels took and put in a vehicle.<sup>6454</sup> Pyne explained that they withdrew because ECOMOG launched a bomb at Five-Five bridge, killing over 20 RUF men. The witness was not sure exactly what time the other troops withdrew but she left Koidu Town around 4.30am.<sup>6455</sup>

2902. Witness Foday Lansana (a.k.a. Co Nya), an RUF radio operator,<sup>6456</sup> was based with Bai Bureh in Tefiya after the rebel forces were pushed out of Koidu.<sup>6457</sup> He testified that Superman sent Bai Bureh a message calling him to Superman Ground to discuss some “pertinent issues”. Bockarie had told Superman that Issa Sesay had lost diamonds in Liberia and fighters in the jungle had become annoyed, so Bockarie had invited them to a general forum in Buedu to try to calm things down.<sup>6458</sup>

2903. After consulting with his troops, including the witness, Superman travelled to Buedu, returning a month later with some troops as well as arms and ammunition for an attack on Koidu Town that he had been instructed to undertake, called Fitti-Fatta. Lansana explained that the purpose of the operation was to attack and capture Koidu Town and to get sufficient arms and ammunitions.<sup>6459</sup> Lansana testified that King Perry and Alice Pyne both accompanied Superman on his trip to Buedu and communicated with him while they were there.<sup>6460</sup>

2904. The result of the mission was severe casualties for the RUF and ECOMOG which prevented the RUF from pushing further into Koidu.<sup>6461</sup> Superman evacuated the wounded soldiers from Koidu and he continued to Kurubonla in order to attack Sama Bendugu in the Koinadugu District.<sup>6462</sup>

2905. Alimamy Bobson Sesay, an AFRC member<sup>6463</sup> and officer,<sup>6464</sup> who was part of the group led by Gullit in mid-1998, testified that they were based at Camp Rosos from around July/August to September 1998.<sup>6465</sup> After the operation to Foro Loko, the witness described how Gullit said that somebody should go ahead and search for a suitable place for them to base and a Temne SLA support firer among them called Captain Olangba who knew the area, was chosen. Olangba returned saying that he had seen a nice village, called Rosos, surrounded by water and recommended the group base there. So the troops left and captured Rosos, Bombali District and based themselves there. This became Camp Rosos.<sup>6466</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONSThe Accused

2906. The Accused testified that he did not know about the Fitti-Fatta mission for re-attacking Koidu Town, or what Fitti-Fatta means, and stated that he first heard about it during the Prosecution case in court.<sup>6467</sup> He testified that he had never met Bockarie at the time Fitti-Fatta is alleged to have been planned.<sup>6468</sup>

2907. The Accused was presented with Perry Kamara's evidence about a "big mission" conceived before Fitti-Fatta to capture Sierra Leone, including Freetown, on a number of occasions. The Accused denied that he had ever created a plan to take over Sierra Leone, that Bockarie was ever ordered to go to Liberia to get a plan from him, or that he told Bockarie how to implement it. It is not true that, following such a meeting, Bockarie returned to Buedu and called a meeting to discuss and organise the Fitti-Fatta mission as well as a long term plan to capture Freetown.<sup>6469</sup> He testified that he did not know Sierra Leone or the importance of the towns cited by Kamara,<sup>6470</sup> nor did he tell Bockarie that as long as they had Kono, they would take over the rest of Sierra Leone.<sup>6471</sup> The Accused stated that he did not need anything from Sierra Leone as Liberia already had diamonds.<sup>6472</sup>

2908. The Accused drew attention to the divergence between this and accounts of the Freetown attack given by other witnesses which, he averred, showed that SAJ Musa and the SLAs perpetrated the Freetown attack and that there was no contact between SAJ Musa and the RUF.<sup>6473</sup>

2909. The Accused stated that he would not have undermined the peace process for the sake of dealing with Sam Bockarie<sup>6474</sup> and that he did not meet with Bockarie until September 1998.<sup>6475</sup> He explained that he never had any separate arrangements with Bockarie outside the mandates given by ECOWAS and OAU. Every time the Accused invited Bockarie to Liberia, he did so with the consent of ECOWAS.<sup>6476</sup> The Accused said that if he had had any inclination that Sam Bockarie and “his people” intended to perpetuate the conflict, he would have told his colleagues and they would have tried to deal with it.<sup>6477</sup> The Accused testified that every trip Sam Bockarie made to Liberia, he made with the consent of the ECOWAS Committee of Five, which was always informed of the meetings.<sup>6478</sup> The Accused also testified that at this stage, in June 1998, they had already had a “strong warning” from the United Nations about “accusations that are not true”. He explained that the President of the Security-Council invited the Liberian ambassador, “stated what was in fact not the fact” and asked for an official explanation. The Secretary-General came to Nigeria, where there was “nothing else on [the] agenda but Sierra Leone”. They met and talked with “Tejani”. The Accused called “nonsense” any idea that Bockarie came to Liberia while this was happening to discuss Fitti-Fatta.<sup>6479</sup>

2910. In response to Karmoh Kanneh’s testimony, the Accused denied that he had ordered, or had knowledge about, or was involved in the Fitti-Fatta mission to ensure that the RUF continued to purchase ammunition from him in exchange for diamonds, primarily on the basis that he had no materials to give them at this time, March or April 1998. He also said that it would have to be proven that he was receiving diamonds around this time for Karmoh Kanneh’s evidence to make sense.<sup>6480</sup>

2911. Witness DCT-068, a member of the RUF,<sup>6481</sup> testified, with reference to the period after the Lomé Accord, that Kono was not the most strategic area to hold onto: the RUF were also in Makeni, Kailahun and Tonkolili. The witness disagreed that the RUF defended the diamond-mining areas because of their value due to the diamonds. Rather, they would have defended any land that belonged to them. DCT-068 stated that the resources of a country belong to the country and the people. So if someone has power, for example as President or Head of State, they control the resources because they negotiate who should come to work them. Whilst the diamond resources were important, they did not however necessarily equate to control of the country, which only came from controlling the seat of power, Freetown. The witness agreed that the ultimate objective to really control the country was to control Freetown.<sup>6482</sup>

2912. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>6483</sup> testified that the Fitti-Fatta mission was an unsuccessful attack led by Superman against ECOMOG in Koidu Town in July 1998.<sup>6484</sup> Sesay explained that Superman experienced heavy casualties because the ammunition was not up to standard and there was not enough of it for such an attack, and because they did not organise themselves properly.<sup>6485</sup>

2913. Sesay testified that Bockarie, Superman and Mike Lamin planned Fitti-Fatta in Buedu after which Superman and Mike Lamin visited Sesay in Pendembu and explained the mission to him.<sup>6486</sup> To his knowledge, the plan only ever related to Koidu Town, irrespective of the success of the mission.<sup>6487</sup> Sesay testified that King Perry accompanied Superman when he came to Buedu to receive instructions from Bockarie for the Fitti-Fatta operation.<sup>6488</sup>

2914. According to Sesay, there was no large meeting of fighters prior to Fitti-Fatta. Only Bockarie, Mike Lamin, as Bockarie's advisor, and the relevant commander who was going to undertake the operation would have been present at the planning meetings because they kept plans confidential until the day of the attack, or two or three days prior to it.<sup>6489</sup>

He then confined his estimate to early August 1998 (Issa Sesay, Transcript 18 August 2010, pp. 46625-46626). He denied that the account of an attack on Koidu on 10 June 1998 cited in Exhibit P-571 is Fitti-Fatta but confirmed that the rainy season in Sierra Leone runs from around May to October (Issa Sesay, Transcript 18 August 2010, pp. 46625-46626).

2915. Sesay stated that Charles Taylor did not plan the Fitti-Fatta mission because Bockarie was not in communication with him at that time.<sup>6490</sup>

2916. Sesay testified that Kanneh was lying when he said more than 600 people attended a meeting at Waterworks sometime between April and June 1998. No meetings were held at Waterworks between February and December 1998. Nor was there a meeting there where some 600 people were present. Bockarie held all of the meetings about the frontline during this time in Pendembu, where Sesay was stationed.<sup>6491</sup> No meeting of the type described by Kanneh took place between Waterworks and Buedu in 1998.<sup>6492</sup> Further, according to Sesay, Johnny Paul Koroma did not attend any meetings between March and August in Buedu. He did not attend any meetings at which he addressed people, nor did he and Sam Bockarie attend any meetings where they addressed people.<sup>6493</sup>

2917. Sesay testified, in relation to operations at the time of the January 1999 Freetown invasion that the RUF was also fighting to get to Freetown because it was the “seat of power, the seat of government”.<sup>6494</sup>

2918. Witness Martin George, (a.k.a. Mao Mao), an area commander of the RUF,<sup>6495</sup> who was based in Woama, Kono District at the time of Fitti-Fatta and participated in the mission, testified that Fitti-Fatta was the first attempt to test their strength against ECOMOG, which failed due to heavy shelling causing the rebels to retreat to their assignment areas. They lost

Brigadier Issah Sesay left the base and travel [sic] along with Col Jungle and some Liberia [sic] securities to Monrovia. He did not make his way through as he only stop in Monrovia. and Information was later recieved [sic] by the High-Command that the parcel of diamond has dropped [sic] from Brigadier Issah. The High Command later called Brigadier Denis Mingle (Superman) on a forum for a mission to be carry out to capture the whole of Kono. They came up with an agreement to apply some guerrilla tactics to overrun the strategic positions in Kono District. A plan was drawn, but Superman never went with the plan and the mission fail without capturing Kono and over thirty (30) M.I.A. on our side. and also K.I.A.

After an exchange of fire with ECOMOG troops and their progress further into Koidu Town blocked, the rebels partially withdrew but retained control of their captured territories. At around 0430 hours on 11 June 1998, the rebels abandoned their territories and withdrew altogether. The author describes how the Nigerian soldiers later found 27 rebel corpses.<sup>6504</sup>

Superman used the materials to attack Kono and was able to control parts of Koidu Town. Though they were able to raise the ammo dump, they then concentrated on looting and later withdrew leaving the enemy to re-occupy the town. Even prior to that, all instructions to maintain the ground were not implemented.

With the captured materials from Kono, Superman went to the Kabala axis to join SAJ Musa. I instructed him to send some materials to which he agreed. Later he refused to dispatch the materials and refused to grant permission to the receiving officer to return to me.<sup>6506</sup>

Brig. Issa insisted that the materials be handed over as Superman had not only misused large amounts of ammo in his failed attempt to capture Kono but had also refused to give account of materials captured when the Koidu Town ammo dump of ECOMOG was captured. Superman continued to refuse and Brig. Issa accompanied by Brig. Kallon entered his house and arrested all materials found.<sup>6507</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-084

<sup>6515</sup> Perry Kamara testified that the meeting in Buedu took place in April or May 1998 (Perry Kamara, Transcript 5 February 2008, p. 3160) and that Superman left for Koinadugu after the mission around end-May 1998 (Perry Kamara, Transcript 5 February 1998, p. 3172). TF1-371 placed the mission around mid-1998 (TF1-371, Transcript 28 January 2008, p. 2394 (CS)). Albert Saidu testified that the meeting in Buedu at which the Fitti-Fatta mission was announced took place in April 1998 (Albert Saidu, Transcript 9 June 2008, p. 11353). Mohamed Kabbah testified that the meeting at which Operation Fitti-Fatta was announced happened around a month after he arrived in Buedu (Mohamed Kabbah, Transcript 12 September 1998, p. 16146). Karmoh Kanneh testified that the meeting in Buedu where the Fitti-Fatta mission was organised took place between April and June 1998 before the death of Sani Abacha (Karmoh Kanneh, Transcript 8 May 2008, p. 9393). However, the Trial Chamber has already noted that on cross-examination, Kanneh testified twice that the meeting took place after the death of Sani Abacha in June 1998 (Karmoh Kanneh, Transcript 13 May 2008, pp. 9600-9601; Transcript 13 May 2008, p. 9678). On the second of these occasions, he stated that it could have been around August or September. Kanneh also denied that he had told the Prosecution Investigators in a prior statement that the meeting took place before the death of Sani Abacha (Karmoh Kanneh, Transcript 13 May 2008, p. 9689). Alice Pyne testified that the meeting in Buedu took place after Issa Sesay had lost the diamonds in Monrovia and before the death of Sani Abacha (Alice Pyne, Transcript 19 June 2008, pp. 12233-12234, 12246) and that the mission took place less than two weeks before Sani Abacha's death (Alice Pyne, Transcript 19 June 2008, p. 12246). Prosecutor v Taylor, SCSL-03-1-T-370, Admitted Facts and Law, 26 April 2007, Agreed Fact 11 states that Sani Abacha, the leader of Nigeria, died in June 1998. TF1-585 testified that the meeting at which Fitti-Fatta was planned took place around September 1999 (TF1-585, Transcript 8 September 2008, p. 15667). By reference to TF1-585's testimony that 3 meetings took place in the June, September and December before "January 6" (TF1-585, Transcript 8 September 2008, p. 15682), and that they took place within the same year that Johnny Paul Koroma was removed from power in Freetown (TF1-585, Transcript 8 September 1998, p. 15672), the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the witness is referring to events in 1998. Isaac Mongor testified that the Fitti-Fatta mission was run in the dry season of 1998, before the inception of the rainy season (Isaac Mongor, Transcript 11 March 2008, p. 5751). During Issa Sesay's examination-in-chief, he testified that the attack took place in July 1998 (Issa Sesay, Transcript 8 July 2010, p. 44064). Under cross-examination, he recalled that Fitti-Fatta could not have taken place until late July or early August 1998 since Superman did not visit Buedu until July 1998 to receive instructions for the operation to attack Koidu (Issa Sesay, Transcript 18 August 2010, pp. 46623-46624). He then confined his estimate to early August 1998 (Issa Sesay, Transcript 18 August 2010, pp. 46625-46626). Exhibit P-571, the excerpt from the book 'The Reversed Victory (The Story of Nigerian Military Intervention in Sierra Leone)' by Brigadier General Adeshina, describes an assault by "rebels" on Koidu Town at around 1800 hours on 10 June 1998 and recorded that the rebels withdrew altogether around 0430 hours on 11 June 1998. Exhibit P-078 reported that the attack on Kabala took place on 27 July 1998. Exhibit P-080 reported information received that in Koidu, 663 bodies were buried following the fighting in the area in mid-June.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

2928. The issue for determination by the Trial Chamber is what if any role the Accused played in planning or ordering this attack. The Prosecution adduced evidence of several meetings prior to the attack, in which the involvement of the Accused was cited.

2929. Perry Kamara testified about a meeting held at Bockarie's compound where the diamonds lost by Issa Sesay were discussed, as well as the mission to retake Kono. Kamara testified that Mingo had been called to Buedu so that Bockarie could brief him on the plan he had brought from the Accused. He said the meeting was attended by Mike Lamin, Isaac Mongor and Pa Rogers, among others, including most of the battalion and brigade commanders. The Trial Chamber notes that Isaac Mongor testified that when Mingo was called to Buedu for this meeting, Mongor was unable to go with him as they could not both be gone at the same time.<sup>6516</sup> Corroboration of Kamara's testimony that Mike Lamin was present at this meeting is also lacking.

2930. TF1-585 also testified about a meeting at Bockarie's compound with Issa Sesay, Junior Rambo, Five-Five and Jungle present. Although the list of named participants present at the meeting differs from Kamara's list, the agenda described by the two witnesses suggests it may have been the same meeting. According to Kamara the first item on the agenda was Issa Sesay's loss of the diamonds he had taken to Monrovia, which is also what TF1-585 described as the purpose of the meeting. Both witnesses also described the forthcoming Fitti-Fatta attack as part of the discussion, Kamara in much greater detail. The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-585 was not present at the meeting, and that she dates the meeting as having happened in September 1998. However, TF1-585 testified that the Fitti-Fatta attack took place two to three weeks after the meeting, which suggests that the meeting took place closer to the timeframe described by Kamara, April or May 1998. Kamara described Bockarie showing the group arms and boxes of ammunition in rooms in his house after the meeting, and TF1-585 testified that after the meeting she saw Bockarie supply arms and ammunition to the fighters from the warehouse in front of his house. In the Trial Chamber's view, the vague nature of TF1-585's evidence, the fact that she was not at this meeting and her mistaken testimony that Sesay, rather than Denis Mingo, had led the Fitti-Fatta attack as punishment for losing the diamonds, renders it of little probative value other than to corroborate Kamara's evidence that a meeting took place at Bockarie's compound.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

2931. The Trial Chamber notes that Perry Kamara's description of this meeting suggests that Bockarie and the Accused had come up with a detailed plan, which Kamara called "a very big plan"<sup>6517</sup> to take over Sierra Leone. Kamara recalled Bockarie using a map to indicate the towns that Taylor had told them to attack. SAJ Musa and Mingo would be responsible for Kabala and Makeni. The RUF left in Kono after Superman's departure would be responsible for the branch comprising Koidu Town (a.k.a. Kono, a.k.a. Sefadu), Magburaka, Matotoka and Mile 91 while the group joining Gullit in Rosos would be responsible for Port Loko and Kambia. The meeting point for all the troops would then be Masiaka because that was a main junction in Sierra Leone. After all the troops reached Waterloo, they should then make "a fresh plan, a new one".<sup>6518</sup> The ultimate destination was to be Freetown after all these district headquarters had been captured.<sup>6519</sup>

2932. The testimony of Kamara was exceptionally specific and unlike the testimony of other Prosecution witnesses, which was focused much more narrowly on Kono. Albert Saidu,<sup>6520</sup> TF1-585,<sup>6521</sup> and Mohamed Kabbah,<sup>6522</sup> who were all in Buedu at the time Fitti-Fatta was announced, testified that the Fitti-Fatta mission was an operation intended to capture Koidu Town. In addition, TF1-371 described Fitti-Fatta as a "mission to recapture Kono"<sup>6523</sup> while Isaac Mongor testified that he was told by Mingo that the meeting he had attended in Buedu was about a mission to recapture Koidu.<sup>6524</sup> Mingo also told Foday Lansana that he had been instructed to undertake a mission called Fitti-Fatta, the purpose of which was to capture Koidu Town.<sup>6525</sup> In her testimony, Alice Pyne discussed the ammunition and herbalists who had been given to Mingo for the Fitti-Fatta mission to recapture Koidu Town.<sup>6526</sup> Moreover, Exhibit D-009, Sam Bockarie's Salute Report, recorded that Bockarie instructed Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) to capture Kono.<sup>6527</sup>

2933. Kamara in his testimony was somewhat dismissive of the importance recapturing Kono, which he described as a diversionary tactic to create panic among ECOMOG. In contrast, many other witnesses testified to the importance of capturing Koidu Town to enable the AFRC/RUF to mine in Kono District.<sup>6528</sup> Moreover, while it is logical that a plan to recapture Freetown would have included at least some of the routes on the map to which Kamara testified, the Trial Chamber recognises that elements of the plan which Kamara described reflect events which had not happened and could not have been planned or predicted by Bockarie and the Accused as early as April or May 1998. For example, the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay indicates that Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) did not move to Rosos until July/August 1998<sup>6529</sup> and that Rosos was chosen as a site to base only after Brima's group arrived at the Rosos region and sent out an SLA fighter to survey the area.<sup>6530</sup> Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes the evidence indicating that Brima left Koinadugu before Mingo joined SAJ Musa's forces there<sup>6531</sup> and SAJ Musa would not therefore have been briefed by Mingo, as Kamara testified, and aware of the plan when he dispatched Brima.

2934. The Trial Chamber recalls its previous finding that Perry Kamara is a generally credible witness.<sup>6532</sup> That Kamara was in Buedu at the time the Fitti-Fatta operation was planned is supported by Foday Lansana, who testified that Kamara and Alice Pyne both accompanied Mingo on his trip to Buedu and communicated with him while they were there,<sup>6533</sup> Mohamed Kabbah who testified to seeing Kamara at the large forum which took place in Buedu<sup>6534</sup> and Defence witness Issa Sesay.<sup>6535</sup> However, having considered his evidence in this context the Trial Chamber is of the view that Kamara's testimony was influenced by his subsequent knowledge of the events that unfolded in the latter half of 1998 and that he has added detail to the events he recalled with the benefit of hindsight. For this reason, the Trial Chamber will not rely on Kamara's testimony to support the Prosecution's allegation that the Accused made specific plans in conjunction with the Fitti-Fatta operation to recapture Freetown.

2935. The Trial Chamber considers the evidence of TF1-371 and Karmoh Kanneh cited by the Prosecution in support of its allegation that the AFRC/RUF planned in a multi-axis offensive starting in Kono to be irrelevant here since it pertains to plans allegedly made during the Waterworks/Buedu meetings in December 1998 and to attacks undertaken against LURD in Liberia, not the plan referred to by Perry Kamara.<sup>6536</sup>

2936. Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber notes that other witnesses testified about a general plan in early to mid-1998 to retake Freetown. TF1-371, for example, testified that at a point earlier in time, after one of his trips to Monrovia in 1998, Bockarie mentioned that he had received a “specific instruction” from Taylor that the RUF should “ensure that we recapture Freetown”.<sup>6537</sup> This message dated to well before Fitti-Fatta, including the instruction to “maintain Kono” after it had been recaptured by the AFRC/RUF and before it had been lost again. The Trial Chamber also notes Karmoh Kanneh’s testimony that Bockarie had told Taylor about “Operation Free the Leader”, the RUF mission planned to capture Freetown and release Foday Sankoh. In the Trial Chamber’s view, this evidence indicates that the recapture of Freetown was mentioned by and discussed with the Accused at some point, although, as discussed below, the timing of this discussion is unclear. The Trial Chamber finds it likely that the attack on Kono would have been seen as a first step towards the recapture of Freetown and more generally formed part of a long-term plan. On the basis of the evidence, however, the Trial Chamber concludes that the immediate plan was to recapture Kono.

2937. The Prosecution also relies on the evidence of TF1-375 relating to the eight Liberians who visited Mingo in Kono to support its allegation that the Accused ordered the recapture of Kono. However, the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-375’s testimony must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>6538</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that on TF1-375’s account, these eight Liberians brought two medicine men (herbalists) and recalls its finding that the herbalists who came to mark the fighters before the Fitti-Fatta mission were sent by the Accused.<sup>6539</sup> However, TF1-375's account of these Liberians and herbalists arriving while Superman was at Superman Ground does not accord with the testimonies of Prosecution witnesses Alice Pyne<sup>6540</sup> and Perry Kamara,<sup>6541</sup> as well as Defence witness Issa Sesay,<sup>6542</sup> that Superman brought the herbalists back from Buedu with him after the meeting there at which the Fitti-Fatta mission was planned. In light of the discrepancy between TF1-375's account and the testimony of Pyne, Kamara and Issa Sesay, the Trial Chamber considers that these were not the same herbalists as those sent by the Accused and that TF1-375's evidence is therefore uncorroborated.

2938. The Trial Chamber notes that three other witnesses, Karmoh Kanneh, Albert Saidu and Mohamed Kabbah, testified in support of the Prosecution's allegation that the Accused issued directives and encouragement to Bockarie concerning the urgency of recapturing Kono District. The witnesses testified that they attended a forum convened by Bockarie somewhere in a secret location between Buedu and Dawa, according to Saidu,<sup>6543</sup> on the Foya Road between Waterworks and Buedu, according to Kanneh,<sup>6544</sup> or on the Dawa Road leading towards Foya, at Waterworks, according to Kabbah.<sup>6545</sup> Several other aspects of these three witnesses' testimonies converge. For example, all three witnesses testified that the issue of Sesay losing the diamonds was discussed at the meeting.<sup>6546</sup> Kabbah and Saidu both gave evidence that Bockarie spoke about the building of an airstrip in Buedu.<sup>6547</sup>

2939. According to Kanneh, Bockarie had said that he had met the Accused in Monrovia, who had told him to clear Kono and that "nothing goes for nothing and that he had no machine to make arms".<sup>6548</sup> Likewise, Kabbah reported Bockarie as having said at the meeting that he had discussed with the Accused in Monrovia that they should try to get Kono and when they took Kono they would get ammunition for the diamonds they would mine.<sup>6549</sup> Kabbah explained clearly in his testimony that they were getting too few boxes of ammunition and that if they had the diamonds they could get the ammunition they needed. Without specific reference to Bockarie having met the Accused, Saidu recalled that Bockarie had said that it was only through the diamonds they passed over to the Accused that they could get arms and ammunition.<sup>6550</sup> That Bockarie had visited Monrovia before this meeting is corroborated by Exhibit P-067's reference to Bockarie's monthly briefings in Monrovia.<sup>6551</sup>

2940. According to Kanneh and Saidu, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) addressed the meeting after Bockarie had spoken, on behalf of the Accused according to Saidu. Saidu testified that Tamba conveyed to the meeting that the Accused recognised the relationship between the RUF and AFRC and that he advised them to try and get hold of Kono, which was where they would get their resources. Saidu further testified that Ibrahim Bah, whom he referred to as General Ibrahim, spoke after Tamba and reinforced what he said, also reporting that the Accused advised them to recapture Kono. Kanneh testified that Tamba supported what Bockarie had already said. That Jungle was in Buedu at this time, is also corroborated by Alice Pyne.<sup>6552</sup>

2941. The Trial Chamber finds Karmoh Kanneh to be a generally credible witness.<sup>6553</sup> The Trial Chamber notes, however, that there are several elements of Kanneh's evidence which suggest that his recollection of the meeting may have become confused with other events occurring in 1998. For example, Kanneh's testimony was that he had informed the Accused of Operation Free the Leader, his plan to capture Freetown and liberate Sankoh. Kanneh appears to have been confused about dates as there is a significant body of reliable evidence which shows that Foday Sankoh was not transferred from Nigeria to Sierra Leone until late July 1998.<sup>6554</sup> He also made reference in his testimony to the Burkina Faso trip that Bockarie made the month of or the month after the meeting held to plan the Fitti-Fatta mission,<sup>6555</sup> yet it is well established that the Burkina Faso shipment arrived much later in the year.<sup>6556</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that Albert Saidu dated the meeting to around April 1998<sup>6557</sup> and accepts his testimony that the meeting happened around this time, particularly in view of the support received by the albeit less specific testimony of Kabbah that it occurred around a month after he arrived in Buedu.<sup>6558</sup> The Trial Chamber is of the view that, although Kanneh's evidence includes some aspects which appear displaced in time, this does not detract from the evidence provided regarding the planning of Fitti-Fatta which is largely corroborated by Saidu and Kabbah.

was in Koindu at the time of the meeting and heard about it over the radio.<sup>6563</sup> The witness explained that the meeting he attended with Jungle and Bah was a separate meeting from the one which he had heard about over the radio, which related instead to Sesay's punishment for losing diamonds.<sup>6564</sup> He ascribed as an error of the Prosecution the prior statement in which he described the meeting he attended with Jungle and Bah as the same one at which Sesay's punishment was decided.<sup>6565</sup> The Trial Chamber accepts Saidu's testimony that he was at the meeting, noting that he described it with detail and that the detail he described was substantially consistent with the evidence of the other witnesses who attended the meeting.

2944. The Trial Chamber notes that the evidence adduced from Samuel Kargbo,<sup>6566</sup> Bobson Sesay,<sup>6567</sup> and TF1-371,<sup>6568</sup> cited by the Prosecution in support of its allegation that the Accused issued directives and encouragement to Bockarie concerning the re-capture of Kono, refers to an earlier time period than that alleged. Kargbo's evidence refers to the period shortly after the Intervention before the first attack on Koidu Town in late February/early March 1998. TF1-371 and Alimamy Bobson Sesay's evidence relates to the period thereafter while the AFRC/RUF alliance was still in control of Kono. The Trial Chamber recalls that it has reviewed TF1-371 and Samuel Kargbo's testimony previously when considering the allegations that the Accused issued orders to capture and maintain Kono after the Intervention<sup>6569</sup> and will consider Alimamy Bobson Sesay's evidence in the context of the materiel allegedly supplied by the Accused to hold Kono.<sup>6570</sup>

meeting. Issa Sesay's own testimony, corroborated by Kamara,<sup>6572</sup> that he was not present in Buedu because he was sent to Pendembu as punishment for losing the diamonds suggests that he was not, in any event, in the best position to know. Sesay's testimony that Bockarie, Lamin and Superman planned Fitti-Fatta in Buedu and would have kept it completely secret is also inconsistent with the evidence adduced that the attack was discussed in advance. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Issa Sesay's testimony must be treated with caution<sup>6573</sup> and does not accept his account of events leading up to the Fitti-Fatta attack.

2946. The Trial Chamber also finds the Accused's denial that he knew about Fitti-Fatta untenable in light of the evidence. In this regard, the Trial Chamber recalls its previous findings that the Accused sent both ammunition and herbalists for the Fitti-Fatta attack.<sup>6574</sup> His testimony, supported by Issa Sesay, that he did not meet Bockarie until September of that year is also untenable in light of reliable evidence of trips by Bockarie to meet the Accused after the Intervention<sup>6575</sup> and the record in Exhibit P-067 that Bockarie was called every month to report to Monrovia for a briefing with the Accused before the Fitti-Fatta mission.<sup>6576</sup> Similarly, the Trial Chamber does not find credible the Accused's assertion that his only contact with Sam Bockarie was for the purpose of peace. With regard to his evidence that he met with the Secretary-General in Liberia, which is supported by Exhibit P-080, the Trial Chamber notes that this does not preclude his involvement in Fitti-Fatta.

2947. The Trial Chamber cannot therefore accept Perry Kamara's account of the very detailed plan made by the Accused together with Bockarie, as it is not consistent with the evidence of other witnesses. However, based on the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused discussed the Fitti-Fatta attack with Bockarie, and the references made to this discussion thereafter have been reported by the relevant witnesses in various ways. However, the Trial Chamber notes that the testimony of these other witnesses indicates advice from the Accused for the Fitti-Fatta attack rather than planning.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

2948. At the forum to which Kanneh, Saidu and Kabbah testified, the evidence indicates that Tamba, Bah and/or Bockarie conveyed advice from the Accused, that he advised them to try to get hold of Kono so as to get resources to fund the purchase of materiel. The message as reported by both Kabbah and Kanneh was that the Accused was not going to give them the weapons they needed “for nothing” and that if they wanted more ammunition they needed more diamonds to get it.

2949. In light of the above considerations, the Trial Chamber does not find that the Prosecution has established that the Accused instructed the RUF, via Liberian emissaries and/or Sam Bockarie, to recapture Kono, or that he participated in the formulation of a multi-axis operational attack plan leading to Freetown, prior to the Fitti-Fatta attack. However, in light of the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused was engaged in discussion with Bockarie regarding plans for the Fitti-Fatta attack, and that his message of advice to recapture Kono, so that the diamonds there could be used to purchase arms and ammunition, was transmitted to RUF commanders through Bockarie himself and Liberian emissaries, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and/or Ibrahim Bah.

Findings

2950. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused participated in the planning of or instructed the AFRC/RUF to recapture Kono in mid-June 1998, as the first step in a detailed plan with an overarching mission to recapture Freetown or otherwise.

2951. The Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused advised Bockarie to recapture Kono so that the diamonds there would be used to purchase arms and ammunition. Such advice was transmitted to RUF commanders both through Bockarie and Liberian emissaries, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and/or Ibrahim Bah, and resulted in the Fitti-Fatta attack in mid-June 1998.

MILITARY OPERATIONS4. The Freetown InvasionThe PlanSubmissions of the Parties

2952. The Prosecution submits that after the failed Fitti-Fatta mission, the death of the Nigerian President Abacha in June 1998 which resulted in the weakening of ECOMOG forces, the transfer of Foday Sankoh from Nigerian custody to Sierra Leone, and the announcement of Sankoh's death sentence in October 1998, led to the planning of a major offensive by Bockarie and the Accused. According to the Prosecution, the plan was to retake Kono District, Tongo Field and the territory all the way to Freetown, thereby ensuring control over the richest diamond areas and over Freetown - the city where Sankoh was believed to be held, and the city necessary for control of the territory and the population of Sierra Leone.<sup>6577</sup>

2953. According to the Prosecution, during the second half of 1998 and up to the trip to Monrovia and Burkina Faso in November, Bockarie visited Monrovia frequently to meet with the Accused, and these meetings gave the Accused and Bockarie ample time to discuss refining and implementing the plan, after the failed Fitti-Fatta mission. In its submissions, the Prosecution relies, inter alia, on the Accused's testimony that he met Bockarie during his visits to Monrovia in September, October, and November/December 1998.<sup>6578</sup>

2954. The Prosecution further alleges that upon Bockarie's return from his trip to Burkina Faso via Monrovia in late November/early December 1998, Bockarie held meetings with AFRC/RUF personnel in Buedu, including smaller meetings with senior commanders, and that at these meetings with his subordinates, Bockarie reiterated the Accused's plan for an operation to capture Kono, Makeni "and by all means", Freetown. According to the Prosecution, Jungle was present at these meetings and "buttressed" what had been conveyed by Bockarie, that they had discussed how the mission should be run with the Accused in

Monrovia, that they should not fear this time around and that no force could withstand them.<sup>6579</sup>

2955. The Prosecution also submits that the plan included a ruthless terror campaign so that in case of it being unsuccessful it would ensure their continued existence and a place of power in the country; a tactic the Accused had used to his advantage in Liberia and had in mind for Sierra Leone.<sup>6580</sup> According to the Prosecution, Bockarie briefed the Accused via satellite phone on the outcome of the meetings and assured him that the plan would be followed. The Accused and Bockarie determined how the plan was to be carried out, deciding to save ammunition by making the operation even more fearsome than all other operations before. After this contact with the Accused, Bockarie announced Operation No Living Thing, which meant that anything that stood in their way should be eliminated; the tactics of Operation No Living Thing typified the AFRC/RUF's treatment of civilians, and fighters were to raise concern of the international community by killing civilians and burning.<sup>6581</sup>

2956. The Defence submits that the evidence fails to show that the Accused participated in any way in the Freetown invasion,<sup>6582</sup> contending instead that the invasion of Freetown in January 1999 was purely an AFRC affair in which the Accused took no part. The Defence relies on the testimony of Alimamy Bobson Sesay that the plan was conceived in Koinadugu, not in Liberia or Buedu,<sup>6583</sup> so that by the time of the meeting in Buedu in which Bockarie allegedly planned the invasion, in December 1998, the AFRC plan was already underway.<sup>6584</sup> The Defence further submits that the AFRC and the RUF had different motivations for attacking Freetown: the RUF for the freeing of Foday Sankoh from prison, while SAJ Musa's motivation was to reinstate the army, which was accelerated by the execution of AFRC members by the Government. According to the Defence, the different motivations, coupled with the race between the two factions to capture Freetown, the RUF and SAJ Musa could not have been acting in the furtherance of any common purpose.<sup>6585</sup>

2957. The Defence also disputes the proposition that the Accused ordered the commission of atrocities in Freetown, and accepts Bobson Sesay's testimony that SAJ Musa ordered his forces to proceed to Freetown without killing, looting or burning. It claims that Operation No living Thing was declared around May or June 1998 during an attack on Kenema District, not as part of the operation to invade Freetown.<sup>6586</sup> The Defence further submits that the allegation that the Accused said that the advance to Freetown should be more brutal than any other and that nothing should stand in their way is not borne by any facts on the ground of the RUF's conduct during their advance towards Freetown, as there is no overwhelming evidence of wide scale atrocities in the places the RUF attacked on its way to Freetown, such as Kono, Makeni, Lunsar, Port Loko "etc".<sup>6587</sup> The Defence also challenges the credibility of the accounts of Prosecution witnesses.

EvidenceProsecution Witness TF1-371

2958. Witness TF1-371, an RUF commander, testified that after Foday Sankoh was transferred from the custody of the Nigerian Government to the custody of the Sierra Leonean Government, in July 1998, and sentenced to death in October 1998, the RUF commanders were angry, Sam Bockarie was especially furious with regard to Sankoh's death sentence and the execution of 24 military officers. Bockarie had a series of interviews over the BBC and VOA radio via satellite phone, in which at one point he threatened to attack Freetown and release Sankoh. Bockarie also talked about Operation Spare No Soul, which was the code name of the operation of freeing Sankoh.<sup>6588</sup>

2959. Prior to Sam Bockarie's trip to Monrovia in November or December 1998, Bockarie met the witness, Issa Sesay and Kallon, expressing his concern with expanding the fighting to Kono, in particular after the casualties they suffered from the failed Fitti-Fatta operation.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

Bockarie told the witness that he was leaving for a trip to meet with Charles Taylor and Musa Cissé in Monrovia and to then get a shipment of ammunition from Burkina Faso for a “major attack, major offensive”.<sup>6589</sup>

2960. Bockarie went to Monrovia,<sup>6590</sup> before flying with Ibrahim Bah and Musa Cissé to Ouagadougou.<sup>6591</sup> He returned to Sierra Leone two weeks later via Monrovia, along with Zigzag Marzah, Sampson and Christopher Varmoh (a.k.a. Liberian Mosquito).<sup>6592</sup>

2961. When Bockarie returned to Buedu he off-loaded the materials into his warehouse and gathered the witness and the other RUF members he left behind for a forum at Waterworks to brief them about the trip.<sup>6593</sup> The meeting was attended by RUF members including the witness, Bockarie, Sesay, Morris Kallon, Peter Vandi and Isaac Mongor from the RUF, as well as AFRC members including Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit), Akim Turay, Leather Boot, Adams and others.<sup>6594</sup> At this meeting in Waterworks, Bockarie explained that he had sufficient ammunition for an attack on Kenema Town as well as Koidu and Freetown. Bockarie opened a map of Sierra Leone and discussed with the commanders the plan to launch a two-pronged attack to enter Freetown. Sesay and Morris Kallon were given the mission to attack Koidu and then move to Makeni, then to “Lunsar, Masiaka”. In Masiaka they were to be met by the second flank of troops, led by Akim Turay and Momoh Rogers, which was to attack Kenema and Bo. From Masiaka the troops were to attack Waterloo and then Freetown.<sup>6595</sup>

2962. TF1-371 said that this plan was not decided at the meeting in Buedu. Rather, Bockarie came with that plan and was discussing it with the commanders,<sup>6596</sup> as he made the general plan after his “major trip” to Ouagadougou through Monrovia. The witness added that the discussion among the commanders and Bockarie to go to Freetown, which was prompted by the announcement of Sankoh's death sentence and the execution of 24 officers, coincided with, and was parallel to, Bockarie's trips to Monrovia.<sup>6597</sup>

2963. Halfway through the briefing, Bockarie and a smaller group including the witness, Eddie Kanneh, Sesay, Kallon, Jungle and one or two others went to eat lunch in Bockarie's bedroom.<sup>6598</sup> While they were eating, Bockarie left the room and spoke on his satellite phone outside for 10 to 15 minutes. When Bockarie returned he was excited and said that he had just spoken with "the Pa", Taylor, and that Taylor "gave the instruction directly to his commander this is Operation No Living Thing. We should by all means capture Freetown. That is [sic] instruction he had received to capture Freetown so as to force the government to negotiation". Bockarie went on to say that he had been instructed by Taylor that no commander should contest his authority in this particular operation, otherwise they would be executed, conveying again that Taylor had given him authority. Bockarie also said that he did not want them to misuse the materiel that he brought because it was extremely difficult for him to get and he "had to give account".<sup>6599</sup>

2964. On cross-examination the witness agreed that it was Bockarie who coined the phrase for the operation to invade Freetown, Operation No Living Thing.<sup>6600</sup> The witness explained that the name, Operation No Living Thing, meant that enemies should not be captured or brought to the headquarters, that anything standing in their way should be eliminated, including civilians, fighters, enemy forces "whatever", and that the target was to capture Freetown to force the government into negotiation.<sup>6601</sup>

2965. During the meeting, they received a visit from a Ghanaian friend of Taylor and Sankoh called Dr Sebo, and another journalist who said they were from Belgium. They took the visitors to see about 22 Nigerian ECOMOG detainees who were captured in Kono and held by the RUF.<sup>6602</sup>

2966. Following this meeting, Bockarie went outside and “spread the same message” about Operation No Living Thing to the other junior commanders. Bockarie gave instructions for the distribution of materials and assigned the Scorpion Unit to link with the group in Segbwema and assist in capturing Kenema. Bockarie gave “the bulk” of the materials that he brought from Monrovia to Sesay and Kallon for the attack on Kono but also gave Akim Turay his own materiel to link up with Momoh Rogers to attack Kenema. Denis Mingo left to a nearby village “to see somebody” and Sesay and Kallon left the next day.<sup>6603</sup>

2967. On cross-examination, the witness agreed with his testimony in the RUF trial in relation to Operation No Living Thing that the RUF ideology was not to harm civilians, and that no RUF high commander was specifically ordered to rape and kill, but said that it was implied from the order of Operation No Living Thing that “they don’t bring nobody”. The witness also agreed that when terrible incidents occurred they were usually due to the indiscipline of the combatants and certain rogue commanders, that the leadership of the revolutionary organization recognized that such behaviour would antagonise and alienate the very people they wished to convert to their cause, and that given their political ambitions they would not have ordered people to commit atrocities.<sup>6604</sup>

2968. When asked on cross-examination whether Taylor specifically ordered the RUF or Junta to carry out atrocities, the witness replied, “I can't recall when he talked to any AFRC to go burn and kill civilians or what, no”.<sup>6605</sup>

2969. Also on cross-examination, the witness agreed that the first move to invade Freetown was not taken by the RUF and that at the time the RUF was “Johnny-come-latelies” because the invasion had already been initiated by others and the RUF effectively “tagged on the tail

2970. However, the witness did not agree that the RUF did not plan the invasion, explaining that while the AFRC group might have had its own agenda and went to Freetown on its own, the RUF, already had its own “prior” “in-house” plan. to go to Freetown because of Sankoh’s death sentence and the execution of the 24 soldiers but did not have sufficient ammunition at that time. That was why Bockarie endeavoured to go on his trip to Burkina Faso. Once Bockarie returned from his trip to Buedu with the materiel, he had instructions that he passed on to the commanders to first and foremost capture Kono, Koidu and then proceed to Freetown. Therefore, while the AFRC had their separate operation, Sam Bockarie had his own plan for an operation to go to Freetown after he came back from his trip to Burkina Faso.<sup>6608</sup>

2971. Witness Karmoh Kanneh (a.k.a. Eagle), an RUF commander, testified that at a meeting in Waterworks around April/May/June, before the death of Abacha<sup>6609</sup> in which Bockarie told them that the next operation would be Fitti-Fatta, Bockarie said that Taylor told him that he would link Bockarie to Blaise Compoaré, the President of Burkina Faso, in order to obtain materiel, and that Ibrahim Bah would travel with him. The reason Taylor was going to link Bockarie to Burkina Faso was because Bockarie had told Taylor about their mission to free their leader which would require heavy “materials” in order to clear ECOMOG forces before getting into Freetown. Bockarie went to Burkina Faso not long after this meeting, within the same month.<sup>6610</sup>

2972. Kanneh also testified that in December 1998, just as Bockarie returned from his trip to Burkina Faso, Bockarie convened a meeting for officers at his house in Buedu.<sup>6611</sup> The meeting commenced late at night, at around 11.00pm until approximately 2.00am, since they did not want Johnny Paul to know.<sup>6612</sup> There were about 12 men at the meeting including the witness, Bockarie, Issa Sesay, Kallon, Jungle, Eddie Kanneh, Major Francis (a Gambian who was part of the Special Forces who were the “senior men who started the revolution” and who was trained with Sankoh in Libya), Matthew Barbor (a Liberian RUF fighter), Junior Vandi (a.k.a. JR), Mike Lamin, SYB Rogers, and Gbessay Gbobah (a.k.a Chucky) from the RUF.<sup>6613</sup> Isaac Mongor did not attend the meeting.<sup>6614</sup>

2973. During the meeting, Bockarie explained that he had brought enough ammunition and “logistics” to conduct any kind of operation and said that they should now plan how to move. The commanders then discussed a plan to retake Kono and then go to Freetown to secure the release of the leader, Foday Sankoh, and take over power. Bockarie said that the first target should be Kono, which would be followed by Makeni and then Freetown, while the next target was Segbwema and Daru, towards Kenema, from where they should proceed to the southern province. The witness said that Kono was the first target on account of its diamond wealth.<sup>6615</sup>

2974. The attack on Kono was to be led by Sesay as the overall commander for the operation, Kallon as Sesay’s deputy and Superman as the third in command.<sup>6616</sup> From Kono they were to go to Makeni before going to Freetown. Kono and Makeni were to be captured first since they were “provincial headquarters” that they had to pass and make sure that they were under control before proceeding to Freetown.<sup>6617</sup> The witness was tasked with taking Segbwema and Daru.<sup>6618</sup>

2975. It was agreed at the meeting that the first target for the men on arrival in Freetown was to release Sankoh from Pademba Road Prison, and the second objective was to go to the State House to overthrow President Kabbah and, if possible, to kill him.<sup>6619</sup>

2976. Bockarie told the attendees that this plan had been “designed” in Monrovia with Charles Taylor and that he only brought it to brief them on the strategy which would bring to their success in the war.<sup>6620</sup>

2977. Jungle also spoke at the meeting and spoke about the materiel that Bockarie had brought back, saying that they should not fear this time around and that there was no force that could withstand them. Jungle said that in Monrovia he and Bockarie had discussed with Taylor “how the mission should go on”, and that Taylor told him that their first target should be Kono before they proceed.<sup>6621</sup>

2978. At the end of the meeting, before they were scattered, Bockarie and Jungle contacted Taylor and briefed him “about how the plan was set”. Bockarie spoke first and briefed Taylor about the arrangements they had made for the mission, telling him that he had convened the senior officers and that he had explained to them the same plan that Taylor “had given” to him, Bockarie, in Monrovia. Because Jungle was Taylor’s representative in the RUF he then spoke with President Taylor and “buttressed the same topic”, Jungle told Taylor that the plan discussed in Monrovia had been put to the senior officers who had assured him that they would go ahead with the plan. Taylor in turn thanked them and told them to carry on. Bockarie and Jungle used a satellite phone, and had a short conversation with Taylor on the veranda at the back of Bockarie’s house, where the 12 attendees of the meeting, including the witness, were present. The witness did not hear Taylor’s side of the conversation but Jungle and Bockarie said before they called that they were calling Taylor in order to brief him about the meeting, and the witness heard Taylor’s name being mentioned during the conversation.<sup>6622</sup>

2979. During the meeting, they also discussed SAJ Musa's disloyalty. Bockarie told the attendees that he had complained to Taylor about SAJ Musa's disloyalty "towards the mission", towards Bockarie's command, which meant to the RUF's command, and would not take orders. Taylor in turn provided advice.<sup>6623</sup> Bockarie told the attendees that SAJ Musa "should not live to tell the story", should die because he was a traitor, and that Musa should only be shot and killed during a military operation. Bockarie made the attendees understand that he had been discussing with Gullit killing SAJ Musa during a military operation, even prior to Gullit joining SAJ Musa's forces.<sup>6624</sup>

2980. After the meeting, and before the attack on Kono, Bockarie sent a message to SAJ Musa to attack Freetown but Musa refused and rejected the orders, saying that he could not take orders from Bockarie. This resulted in a heated argument. The witness stated that SAJ Musa was already disgruntled when Bockarie sent the message to all stations, and that arguments had been going on also prior to the meeting.<sup>6625</sup>

2981. The day after the meeting, upon Bockarie's invitation, the witness went to Bockarie's "ammo dump" to see the materiel and logistics that he had brought from Burkina Faso.<sup>6626</sup> After the witness saw the materiel, he was asked to meet the brigade commanders and begin gathering men in order to carry out the mission he was given – to capture Segbwema and Daru and, if possible, beyond.<sup>6627</sup>

2982. On cross-examination, the witness confirmed that during the meeting there was no discussion about civilians.<sup>6628</sup>

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

2983. Witness Isaac Mongor, an RUF commander, testified that he came to Buedu from Kono in early November 1998, during the dry season,<sup>6629</sup> after he was summoned by Sam

Bockarie, his commander.<sup>6630</sup> Upon his arrival, Bockarie welcomed the witness and told him that he had been waiting for him to discuss how to proceed since their ammunition was running out, and that they should have a commanders' meeting in order to discuss what to do next.<sup>6631</sup>

2984. The following morning, all the commanders in Buedu convened at Waterworks including the witness, Bockarie, Jungle, SYB Rogers who was the RUF Secretary General and Chairman of the War Council, and an SLA named Sambebe. They decided to send Jungle with a letter to Charles Taylor and request ammunition because they "did not have enough ammunition to continue their "offensive, or to fight, or to even defend our areas". Rashid Sandy, the adjutant, then wrote the letter and read it out to the attendees.<sup>6632</sup> Three days after Jungle took the letter, Bockarie told the witness and others that he had received a call from Taylor that he should go to Monrovia himself. Bockarie went with Rashid Sandy, SYB Rogers, Lawrence Wohmandia and Eddie Kanneh, leaving Issa Sesay in charge in Buedu. The witness was told to go to Pendembu, since that was where Sesay was stationed.<sup>6633</sup> All in all, the witness stayed in Buedu for three days.<sup>6634</sup>

2985. The witness was in Pendembu for three weeks when he received a message that Bockarie had returned from his trip and was summoning commanders from other areas to report to Buedu.<sup>6635</sup> The next morning, in November 1998, the witness left for Buedu, arriving in Buedu in the evening. Upon his arrival, the witness went to Bockarie's house.<sup>6636</sup> At Bockarie's house, the witness and Bockarie went into Bockarie's room where Bockarie briefed Mongor about the ammunition, food and medicines that he had brought, telling the witness that the ammunition was provided by Taylor and was brought from Liberia. Bockarie was happy that they now had ammunition which would enable them to carry out "some missions". Bockarie also told Mongor that the delegation went to Burkina Faso, that he met with the President of Burkina Faso and that they agreed to have an arrangement for ammunition purchases. Bockarie showed the witness pictures of the hotel they were lodged in, which depicted Bockarie and SYB Rogers.<sup>6637</sup>

2986. From Bockarie's room, Mongor and Bockarie went through a door in Bockarie's room which led to the place a shop where Bockarie stored the ammunition and food he had brought. Mongor was pleased to see plenty of ammunition which was packed "up to the ceiling", approximately three meters high from the floor.<sup>6638</sup>

2987. After Bockarie showed the ammunition to Mongor, he told Mongor that he and Taylor made a plan for an operation in which the ammunition would be used. Bockarie said that Taylor took out a map and showed the locations that the RUF and the SLAs occupied. Taylor came up with a plan for them to launch an operation to capture Kono, Makeni and then advance towards Freetown. They were also to attack Joru and Kenema.<sup>6639</sup>

2988. Bockarie said that he had discussed with Taylor that either the witness or Superman should attack Joru, followed by an advance towards Zimmi. Bockarie told Taylor that, as Superman was in Koinadugu far away from the Buedu area the witness closer to "the place". Therefore he said that the witness should attack Joru and that after he captures Joru he should advance to Zimmi where he would receive NPFL members who were coming from Liberia as reinforcements. Superman and the witness were considered for this mission because both of them were former NPFL fighters and were familiar with the "NPFL brothers".<sup>6640</sup> In 1998, NPFL fighters were Charles Taylor's men in Liberia. They were the ones who were to join them "to run the operation".<sup>6641</sup>

2989. Bockarie told Mongor that the reason for this attack on Kono and Freetown was to free Foday Sankoh and others who were jailed in Freetown. They were also to ensure that they seized power.<sup>6642</sup> Bockarie said that he and Taylor discussed how the attack to free Sankoh was to be carried out. Bockarie said that:

MILITARY OPERATIONS

After he had shown those places to him they discussed that we should run that mission to ensure that we free Foday Sankoh and others and on the operation we should ensure that the ammunition is not wasted. We should make the operation fearful than all the other operations that we had undertaken because we want to make sure that we take Freetown and hold on to power.<sup>6643</sup>

2990. At the time, Koidu Town in Kono was occupied by ECOMOG, Kamajors and SLAs who were loyal to former President Tajan Kabbah. These forces were also in other areas of Kono but the AFRC/RUF forces also had men “around them”.<sup>6644</sup>

2991. The next morning, Bockarie held a meeting in Buedu with the commanders he had summoned. Bockarie showed the attendees the ammunition that he brought and told them everything that he had already explained to the witness about the mission the ammunition was to be used for.<sup>6645</sup> Present at this meeting were RUF commanders which included the witness, Mike Lamin, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Augustine Gbao and Monkey Brown, as well as SLA commanders including Leather Boot, Akim Turay and Eddie Kanneh.<sup>6646</sup> Superman and SAJ Musa did not attend the meeting as they were in Koinadugu District at the time and could not have left it to come to Buedu because ECOMOG was in Koidu Town.<sup>6647</sup> Rambo from the RUF, who eventually attacked Makeni together with Superman, did not attend the meeting as he was stationed around the Koidu area where they had their “defences”.<sup>6648</sup>

2992. During the meeting, SYB Rogers thanked Bockarie and said that the war would have ended quickly had Bockarie been the rebel leader when the war started because Foday Sankoh had never brought that quantity of ammunition which they had brought now.<sup>6649</sup>

2993. During the meeting, it was agreed that Bockarie should send a radio message to SAJ Musa and Superman’s forces for them all to join hands in order to carry out the operation. They all decided Johnny Paul should be the one to talk with SAJ Musa, not Bockarie, for them to forget about the past, put the infighting behind and carry out the operation. Johnny Paul was then able to speak with SAJ Musa and others and ask them to join hands together.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

SAJ Musa agreed and accepted to carry out the operation. The witness knew about the conversation between Johnny Paul and SAJ Musa and others since that was what had been agreed about in the meeting, and his radio operator, who monitored the conversation, told him about it.<sup>6650</sup> At that time, there were RUF members who retreated from Makeni with SAJ Musa, including Alfred Brown who was a senior radio operator, King Perry and “other fighters”.<sup>6651</sup>

2994. After the meeting, at which each person was assigned to various targets, they were supplied with ammunition. The only people who were not able to receive the supplies at that moment were those who were in the northern jungle in Koinadugu District since there was no way to transport the ammunition to them as their enemies, ECOMOG, Kamajors and President Kabbah’s loyalists, were based in Koidu Town. The witness received ammunition to go to the “target” he was assigned to. Ammunition was given to commanders who had “targets”, such as Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon and AFRC members attending the meeting, including Akim Turay.<sup>6652</sup>

2995. On cross-examination, Mongor agreed that AFRC members were the ones who entered Freetown, but stated that the plan that Bockarie brought from Taylor, to attack several places and advance towards Freetown, did not encompass selecting a specific group that would be the one that enters Freetown.<sup>6653</sup> The witness said that the invasion of Freetown by Gullit and SAJ Musa was in accordance with the plan Taylor made with Bockarie, in which they planned to send the RUF to carry out the advancement.<sup>6654</sup> The witness confirmed his prior statement that the Freetown invasion was largely an AFRC project. He explained that the AFRC, Gullit and SAJ Musa, “had the movement” but could not have invaded Freetown without the attacks carried out by the RUF on the “other places”. They would not have been able to reinstate the army if they only depended on their small group, they needed the RUF participation to reduce the burden, The witness’s view was based on his war experience.<sup>6655</sup> Later in cross-examination, Mongor said that the reason he told his investigators that the invasion of Freetown was mainly an AFRC project was because many in the group that entered Freetown were AFRC members, and that they refused to wait for the RUF group to join them. "They were doing it by themselves".<sup>6656</sup>

2996. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie, an RUF radio operator, testified that in early December 1998 he accompanied Bockarie, Rashid, SYB Rogers, Eddie Kanneh, Shabado and others who he was unable to recall on a trip to Monrovia.<sup>6657</sup>

2997. While in Monrovia, Fornie stayed at Benjamin Yeaten's house. Bockarie remained in Monrovia for up to 72 hours before departing for Burkina Faso. During this time, Bockarie and Yeaten would go out for long periods of time, including overnight. Sometimes when they would return to Yeaten's house, Bockarie would tell the witness that they had briefly met with the "Papay".<sup>6658</sup>

2998. Fornie was taken on this trip to act as a radio operator for Bockarie in Monrovia while Bockarie was abroad. When Bockarie, Kanneh and SYB Rogers travelled to Burkina Faso, Fornie remained at Base 1, the radio station at Yeaten's residence in Monrovia. While there, he collected information from the various RUF front lines and passed this information to Bockarie who was in Burkina Faso via telephone.<sup>6659</sup>

discussed that Kono and Tongo were the first targets to be hit with the ammunition they had brought back with them.<sup>6663</sup> The delegation then left Monrovia from Yeaten's house in the evening.<sup>6664</sup>

3000. After arriving in Buedu, Bockarie met with the various commanders he had sent for, including CO Isaac, Saddam, Eagle, Akim Turay and Issa Sesay, in order to discuss the strategy for the attack on Kono and Tongo. During their meeting, they discussed how to successfully attack Kono and Tongo. Fornie was not present during these discussions and said that his knowledge of them was based on a message sent from Bockarie's radio station stating that "the other people should hasten up to come for the meeting".<sup>6665</sup>

3001. Bockarie then distributed the ammunition among the attendees. Some of the ammunition he sent toward a target in Njama which is on the road leading to Joru in Kenema, some of it went "to Eagle and others in their defensive area", but most of it was sent with Issa Sesay towards Kono and Tongo.<sup>6666</sup> Bockarie also distributed other supplies to the commanders including "morale boosters" such as alcohol, rice, fuel and condiments, which they had also brought with them to Sierra Leone.<sup>6667</sup>

3002. Witness Augustine Mallah testified that at the end of 1998/early 1999 he was present at a meeting convened by Bockarie in Buedu for "senior men, officers" in which Bockarie said that he was "tired of staying like that in Buedu" and was "fed up with all of us staying in Kailahun District". Bockarie said that he had something at hand and that he was trying to go to Liberia to seek advice from Charles Taylor, explaining that in Liberia he, Bockarie, will "get our needs". Bockarie also said that after he will return from his trip they will "try to do what really he wanted to do, he Mosquito". They then heard that Bockarie went to Liberia.<sup>6668</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3003. Upon Bockarie's return from Liberia, at around November 1998,<sup>6669</sup> Bockarie convened a meeting for 60 to 80 persons who included civilians, representatives from RUF deployment areas as well as AFRC, RUF and Liberian fighters under the command of Abu Keita, who, according to Bockarie, had come as reinforcements "for a particular mission that he wanted to undertake".<sup>6670</sup>

3004. At the meeting, Bockarie told those gathered that, as he told them before he left, he had brought arms and ammunition from Charles Taylor in Liberia, and that they would "not only sit by and just control Kailahun and still call ourselves RUF". Bockarie said that he now had enough arms, ammunition and medicines in order for them to go and fight against ECOMOG, saying that this operation would be called "Operation Free Sankoh".<sup>6671</sup>

3005. Following this meeting, Bockarie convened a meeting for around 35 to 40 senior officers for a second meeting, at a location known as Waterworks, located outside of Buedu in the direction of Dawa by the Liberian border.<sup>6672</sup> Bockarie told the attendees that everything was now available for RUF commanders to fight, and explained that the operation he was now announcing was to be taken seriously and that every commander should do exactly as he said, otherwise they would be facing "a big problem" with him.<sup>6673</sup>

3006. Bockarie then said that "he himself" had planned Operation Spare No Soul, and that what he meant by that was that this was not the type of mission where commanders "would be womanising", capturing civilians and keeping those civilians when attacking a town. Bockarie stated that he wanted "the land" and therefore when they encounter a civilian running away they should let them run away and not capture them. He said, "Kill anybody who comes your way. If that person doesn't want to run away, don't stay with that person at all". Bockarie also said that they should destroy any town they "feel" is occupied by ECOMOG and destroy the towns they capture – "let that be an open terrain", "we want the ground".<sup>6674</sup> Bockarie explained that fighting against ECOMOG would not raise the concern of the “international committee” as would be the case if civilians are killed and towns are burnt. According to Bockarie, that would permit the RUF to negotiate the release of Foday Sankoh before they agree to peace, since “without Foday Sankoh there will be no peace” and he would not be afraid to say that this was Operation Spare No Soul.<sup>6675</sup> Bockarie told Issa Sesay that those were the “guidelines” for the operation. Sesay in turn accepted and supported Bockarie, saying that he would follow what Bockarie, “Master”, had said.<sup>6676</sup> Mallah confirmed that “Operation Spare No Soul”, “Operation Free Foday Sankoh” and “Operation No Living Thing” were the same operation. He was physically present in Buedu when Bockarie passed the order for Operation Free Sankoh, and confirmed that “the fighters” decided to call the operation “Operation No Living Thing”.<sup>6677</sup>

3007. According to the plan, the witness was to go to Baiima with Eagle, Manawai and the 1st brigade commander from the RUF, CO Denis, a.k.a. Monkey Brown. The command was to attack Bunumbu, Segbwema, Daru, Tondola, Bendu Junction, Jomukafebu, Kumbema and all the way to Kenema.<sup>6678</sup> Following this second meeting, Bockarie returned to Buedu and provided the commanders who were to go on this mission – the witness, Manawai, Eagle and CO Denis – with Abu Keita “and his reinforcement”, as well as arms, ammunition and medicines, for them to attack the various areas. Bockarie then told CO Denis, the brigade commander, to move ahead and pursue the mission.<sup>6679</sup>

3008. The witness also saw Bockarie providing arms, ammunition and medicines to Issa Sesay, telling Sesay to go together with Akim, Soriba and other AFRC soldiers to Kono, to join Superman and CO Rambo and attack Kono. Bockarie said that from there Akim should attack Tongo while Sesay and Morris Kallon should advance to Makeni.<sup>6680</sup>

3009. Witness Albert Saidu testified that in October/early November 1998, he attended a meeting in Buedu in which Bockarie said that he would go and meet Charles Taylor in order to explain the situation- how they have tried to capture Kono but did not succeed since they ran out of ammunition and that they “still needed Kono”. This meeting was attended by CO Eagle, the 2nd Brigade commanders such as Superman, Hi-Rash, Augustine Gbao and front line commanders. Sam Bockarie then went to meet Charles Taylor in Liberia and left Issa Sesay in charge of Buedu. In Bockarie’s absence the witness’s promotion was approved by CO Issa.<sup>6681</sup>

3010. The witness also testified about a meeting he had with Bockarie in 1998, “before that big offensive that was to take place in Kono on the Bunumbu-Segbwema axis”, in which Bockarie showed him a “white paper” which contained diamonds. Bockarie called the diamonds “stones” and said that he was taking the “stones” to the “Father”, Charles Taylor, to secure materiel quickly in order for them to launch “a big offensive” to recapture Kono. This meeting was attended by senior RUF Vanguarders, including Edwin Collins, and some civilians.<sup>6682</sup>

3011. Bockarie left Sierra Leone for Liberia to bring “materials” and put Issa Sesay in charge. Subsequently, the witness was promoted by Sesay in Bockarie’s absence on 19 November 1998. When Bockarie returned, he returned with “a lot of materials”.<sup>6683</sup> Upon his return, Bockarie convened a general meeting at Waterworks, in early 1999, at around the time Sesay made the promotion. Saidu did not attend the meeting as he was in Koidu and “under pressure” from their enemies, keeping up the defensive.<sup>6684</sup>

3012. The day after the meeting, the witness went to Buedu and was told about the meeting by two of Bockarie’s bodyguards, Shabado and Ray. They told the witness that Bockarie held a meeting at Waterworks for all of the front line commanders and senior Vanguarders including Bockarie, Eddie Kanneh from the AFRC, Abu Keita and “some other Liberians”, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay and SYB Rogers, as well as “the Liberian Government representative”, Colonel Jungle and Ibrahim Bah.<sup>6685</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3013. According to Shabado, Ray and others, Bockarie and Eddie Kanneh returned from Liberia to Sierra Leone and briefed the attendees on their travels and about the materiel they had brought. They said that they went to Charles Taylor in Liberia and proceeded to Burkina Faso, returning to Sierra Leone with “a lot of ammunition and arms”.<sup>6686</sup> The witness was told that SYB Rogers, the War Council Chairman, thanked the delegation and addressed the meeting. Other officers such as Morris Kallon and Issa Sesay also spoke at the meeting.<sup>6687</sup>

3014. According to Shabado and others, a war plan was drawn at the meeting for a major offensive which will include the 1st and 2nd brigades to go and attack Kono and the Bunumbu-Segbwema axis simultaneously.<sup>6688</sup> Bockarie, together with other senior officers such as Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon and others, drew the war plan of how the operation was to be executed: Abu Keita and Tamba were assigned to go with the 1st brigade to the Bunumbu-Segbwema axis, while Issa Sesay, Superman and the 2nd brigade were assigned to go to Kono. They divided officers at the meeting and from the meeting each person was to go straight to the location they were assigned to with the materiel and commence an attack.<sup>6689</sup> The arms and ammunition that the delegation had brought was “consistent” with the war plans that had been drawn for Kono and Kenema.<sup>6690</sup>

3015. Witness TF1-567 testified that while he was in Superman Ground, in October 1998 Bockarie summoned Issa Sesay to Buedu and the witness joined Sesay. In Buedu, Bockarie said that they should attempt to recapture Koidu Town and that he was going to see Charles Taylor in Monrovia, assigning Sesay to stay in charge of Buedu in his absence.<sup>6691</sup>

3016. The witness was in Buedu for two months when Bockarie returned in December 1998 with a large consignment of ammunition. Bockarie said that Taylor had told him that the RUF should attempt to recapture Kono and other mining areas, in order to secure diamonds to obtain more arms and ammunition. Bockarie gave the materials to Sesay, as Sesay was in charge of organizing commanders.<sup>6692</sup>

3017. From Buedu, they returned to Superman Ground with the ammunition which was transferred by captured civilians from Buedu and its surroundings before they departed from Buedu. When they returned to Superman Ground Sesay convened a meeting which was attended by Morris Kallon, Akim Turay, Banya, Gassama Mansaray, Rambo (a.k.a. Boston Flomo) and others whom the witness could not recall. At the meeting, Sesay said that Master, Bockarie, met with Taylor who provided Bockarie with “a lot” of arms and ammunition for them to capture Koindu Town and other mining areas. Sesay further testified that Bockarie reported that Taylor said that if they did not capture the mining areas he would stop supplying them with arms and ammunition.<sup>6693</sup>

3018. Sesay organized the commanders at this meeting and directed how the mission was to be carried out: Morris Kallon was to go and mount an ambush in the Goltown area, behind Sewafe bridge, and Akim Turay was to go to the “other” area while Rambo, in whose group the witness was, should proceed to “Five-Five spot” in Koidu Town. All the groups were to come together and attack Koidu Town. Sesay said that after they captured Koidu Town Akim was to take troops towards Tongo Field, while Rambo was to go towards Makeni.<sup>6694</sup>

3019. At that time, Superman was still in the Koinadugu area. Bockarie instructed Superman that after they captured Koidu and advanced to Makeni, Superman should come from Koinadugu and join them in Makeni.<sup>6695</sup>

Prosecution Witness Abu Keita

3020. Witness Abu Keita testified that upon Bockarie’s return to Buedu with 300 boxes of ammunition, Bockarie called a meeting at his residence in Buedu. The meeting was attended by Keita, Issa Sesay, Lawrence Wohmandia, SB Rogers, Akim and Leatherboot from the AFRC, and other fighters (“the whole RUF”). Bockarie told those present that with the ammunition he had secured, the fighters would attack Kono and Makeni and “terrorise the highway”, because Kono was a strategic area and its diamond mines would fund arms purchases for the RUF.<sup>6696</sup> Bockarie then convened a smaller meeting in his bedroom which only the most senior commanders (the Vanguarders), attended. Keita did not attend.<sup>6697</sup>

3021. After the closed meeting in Bockarie’s bedroom, Bockarie called a muster parade of the soldiers during which he ordered Sesay to undertake the attack on Kono and Makeni.<sup>6698</sup> Bockarie told those assembled that Taylor had said that “they should be very vigilant and maintain the ground of the RUF”.<sup>6699</sup> They then dispersed to carry out the operation in Kono, Makeni, Masingbi, and Magburaka and the operation from Bunumbu to Segbwema to Jumo Kafebu, Gbava, and Bendu Junction. Keita was part of the Bunumbu operation. Koindu [sic] Town was taken over on Christmas Day 1998.<sup>6700</sup>

3022. Witness Mohamed Kabbah, a radio commander in Buedu, testified that in 1999, after Sam Bockarie returned from Monrovia with the large shipment, of “heaviest ammunition” Bockarie had ever brought from his travels to Liberia, Bockarie convened a meeting behind Issa Sesay’s house for front line commanders in order to plan how to launch an attack.<sup>6701</sup>

3023. The witness did not attend the meeting as he was on duty at the radio station when this meeting took place, and was therefore briefed about the meeting by Zedman when Zedman returned from the meeting. Zedman told the witness that at the meeting there was a plan to attack Kono: Morris Kallon was to be used to cut off the supply line between Kono and Makeni so that Issa Sesay, Rambo, Banya and other commanders would attack Kono.<sup>6702</sup> The witness knew that the “planning meeting” was attended by Issa Sesay, Morris

Kallon and Amara Peleto, as messages had been sent to these front line commanders to come.<sup>6703</sup>

3024. On cross-examination Kabbah said that he had never received a message from Charles Taylor ordering the RUF to hold Kono, and confirmed that he could not recall hearing or seeing any messages from Taylor ordering the RUF to hold Kono after the AFRC/RUF retreated from Freetown in early 1998.<sup>6704</sup> Kabbah confirmed his prior statements that he did not recall hearing Bockarie or anyone else referring to instructions or orders from Liberia regarding the planned attack on Kono in late 1998 when Bockarie brought ammunition from Monrovia. However because Bockarie went to Monrovia and talked about Kono when he returned “we believed” that he got the plan in Monrovia “or from any other area” shortly before the meeting.<sup>6705</sup>

3025. The witness also confirmed his prior statement that he did not recall hearing or seeing messages containing orders or instructions from Charles Taylor or one of his people concerning the Freetown invasion, or from Taylor ordering Bockarie to attack Freetown, or that Taylor discussing military strategy with Bockarie.<sup>6706</sup>

3026. Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that at around the end of June/beginning of July 1998<sup>6707</sup> he was in a group with commander Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb Blast) who withdrew from Kono to Tombodu where they met “military supervisors” Gullit, Bazy, Woyoh, Abdul Sesay, as well as Ibrahim Bioh Sesay and other commanders, and about 200 civilians who were captured by both the RUF and SLAs from Makeni and Kono.<sup>6708</sup> The group waited for Savage to join them the same day but Savage did not arrive. Gullit, Bangura, the witness and others then left Tombodu the same day in two vehicles and arrived in Mansofinia in Koinadugu District, about 50 miles from Tombodu, while Tito and other commanders who did not have vehicles went with the civilians through the “footpath” to Mansofinia.<sup>6709</sup>

3027. From Mansofinia the witness moved onto Mongo Bendugu in Koinadugu District, along with Hassan Papa Bangura, Gullit, Junior Johnson, Junior Lion, Bazy, Abdul Sesay, Bioh and others. In Mongo Bendugu they met SAJ Musa who was there with “a mixed force” including Five-Five, Musa’s security called Alie Turay, and Alabama.<sup>6710</sup>

3028. After they arrived in Mongo Bendugu, a closed door meeting was convened. The meeting was attended by SAJ Musa, Five-Five, Bazy, Gullit, Hassan Papa Bangura, Abdul Sesay, Bioh, SAJ Musa’s Chief Security Officer and “some other securities”.<sup>6711</sup> At the meeting, Gullit told SAJ Musa that Bockarie took his diamonds from him while in Kailahun, that he was not happy with this treatment, and sought advice from Musa about what should be the next plan.<sup>6712</sup>

3029. SAJ Musa then replied and said that Brigadier Mani had proceeded to the north in search of a base to prepare for an advancement to Freetown, and that Gullit should proceed and search for Brigadier Mani in order to set up an “advance base”, while Musa would ensure that Five-Five joins him. Musa said that this would enable them to have a strong front line troop in the north to prepare for an attack on Freetown and “prepare the way”, since at that time they did not have troops in the north. In the base they would establish they would later get reinforcements to advance towards Freetown.<sup>6713</sup>

group, but Five-Five told Gullit that there were RUF members among his group, and the witness “also got that from other RUF men that were there”.<sup>6714</sup>

3031. Bobson Sesay also testified that around 23 December 1998, SAJ Musa instructed Foday Bah Marrah to lead the troops in an attack on Benguema. The troops, including Bobson Sesay, encountered ECOMOG forces and captured Benguema.<sup>6715</sup> The witness was attempting to fix a mounted 120 millimetre mortar near the ammunition dump in Benguema military training centre with Bazzy, O-Five, and Colonel Eddie, when he heard a heavy explosion. SAJ Musa’s body was placed on a broken door and carried to where the witness was. When O-Five was trying to give milk to Musa, people started saying that he had died. Gullit said that it was an exploding bomb that had killed Musa.<sup>6716</sup> The witness saw that the helmet that Musa was wearing was pierced by a bullet hole, and believed that Musa had been shot. He said, “what I saw was a bullet hole that went through that hit SAJ, because you can see where the bullet went through, where it was pierced, and so I believed that SAJ was shot”. Bobson Sesay testified that he heard a rumour around the brigade that Gullit had killed SAJ Musa.<sup>6717</sup> SAJ Musa died in the “morning hours” of 24 December 1998.<sup>6718</sup> After SAJ Musa’s death, the witness left the scene.<sup>6719</sup> About a day after SAJ Musa’s death, the witness was brought by a patrol team to Gullit’s location where he was surprised to see Gullit fully dressed in Musa’s helmet and uniform. Alabama, who had been SAJ Musa’s CSO was also very close to Gullit. Gullit told the witness that they had buried SAJ Musa in the Koba Water area.<sup>6720</sup>

3032. On cross-examination the witness agreed that the 24 persons executed on 19 October were all SLA members and none of them were from the RUF. The witness confirmed his prior statement in which he said that when SAJ Musa arrived [in Colonel Eddie Town] he summoned a meeting and said that they should head straight to Freetown, and that two days later they heard that the 24 soldiers were executed. This caused Musa to convene another meeting in which he said that since “we” are SLA members and they have started executing soldiers in Freetown, “we should not just sit and see this happening”. Musa said that they were now going to Freetown to reinstate the army. The witness also confirmed his prior statement that he did not know what Musa had in mind, but that is what Musa had said and the attendees were happy about it.<sup>6721</sup>

3033. The witness agreed that in addition to the execution of the 24 soldiers Musa’s intent to reinstate the army was another factor that contributed to the invasion of Freetown. They also heard that more executions would occur, including of members of the AFRC and the RUF, and of other political prisoners at Pademba Road, including Foday Sankoh. On the day the government announced the executions, Bockarie also “went on the air” i.e. broadcast saying that he did not accept the execution of the 24 soldiers, and that the troops would move as far as Freetown. “So it was through that that all of us said when SAJ Musa made a statement that we’re not going to waste any time”.<sup>6722</sup> The witness was then challenged that the releasing of Foday Sankoh as a factor that led to the invasion of Freetown was not mentioned in prior statements. The witness replied that when Bockarie “went over the air” he said that “our men” will march onto Freetown as long as “our members” are being executed, “and it happened at the time that we were fighting. We were together with them”. He confirmed that SAJ Musa stated that as long as those officers “have been executed we should move at once and reinstate the army”.<sup>6723</sup>

3034. The witness disagreed with the proposition that SAJ Musa’s reasons for invading Freetown had nothing to do with the RUF stating “we were together. We were all operating by the same aims and objectives and we wouldn’t have just moved without their support”. He stated that it had something with the RUF if they had left Colonel Eddie Town with the intention to go to Freetown without weakening the other areas such as Kono, ECOMOG would have “finished” them in Freetown. He testified that it was an organized advance, but those executions accelerated their advance towards Freetown.<sup>6724</sup>

3035. Witness TF1-367, who was stationed in Kono, testified that he heard from Rambo that Bockarie went to see Charles Taylor, "Father", in Monrovia for arms and ammunition, and that when Bockarie returned Sesay would come to Kono and they will attack Koidu Town. When Bockarie went to Liberia Sesay was left in charge of Buedu. Two to three days after a radio message announced Bockarie's return, Sesay returned to Kono with ammunition and a strong manpower which included his bodyguards and some officers. This was new ammunition that they used in order to capture Koidu Town.<sup>6725</sup>

3036. After he arrived, Sesay sent a message to the senior officers to report for a meeting at the headquarters. At the meeting they discussed and planned attacks on Koidu Town, and commanders were given areas to attack on the road leading to Koidu Town. Akim and Kailandu were given "a place to attack" while Rambo was assigned to attack with Five-Five. Peleto, Sesay, the witness and others were assigned to the Guinea Highway, and Banya was sent to Tankoro.<sup>6726</sup> At the meeting, they also discussed the objective of the attack on Kono, which was to suppress the government and force the release of Foday Sankoh by starting with Koidu Town and then go straight to Freetown and release Sankoh. That was why the operation was named "Operation Free Foday Sankoh". The only piece of advice that was given to every soldier was that this operation was "do or die", that they should do everything possible to free Sankoh and that nobody should sabotage the mission; "the operation should be made fearful so we should conquer the enemy. We should make the operation fearful".<sup>6727</sup>

3037. Witness TF1-585, an RUF radio operator, testified that the soldiers and commander were happy at the time Sani Abacha died. His death brought to Bockarie to announce Operation Spare No Soul, as he said that ECOMOG soldiers would now be discouraged which will enable the RUF/AFRC forces to prevail. Operation Spare No Soul meant that they were not to capture ECOMOG soldiers and bring them to Buedu, but rather kill any ECOMOG soldier. Operation Spare No Soul took place around the "Kono axis" and was commanded by Komba Gbundema. The witness learned from Alice Pyne and another radio operator named Ebony that Gbundema reported to Superman and Bockarie that they had killed many civilians and ECOMOG soldiers during this operation.<sup>6728</sup>

3038. The witness also testified that Bockarie convened a meeting for all Vanguardians in Buedu, in order to establish unity. This was since there was “no understanding” within the command structure: soldiers were disgruntled after Issa Sesay had lost diamonds and was not punished, and also did not succeed in capturing Kono; there was misunderstanding between Superman and Issa Sesay and between Superman and Bockarie, and; after the “raiding” of Johnny Paul Koroma and SAJ Musa’s refusal to cooperate. Prior to this meeting, Bockarie discussed with Eddie Kanneh on Bockarie’s veranda a plan to conduct a military operation starting with Kono and from Kono they were to advance towards Freetown.<sup>6729</sup> During the meeting with Eddie Kanneh at Bockarie’s house, they discussed how to attack Freetown by first capturing Kono. They said that it should be a uniformed mission, that Superman and Komba Gbundema should act together with SAJ Musa and others. After SAJ Musa would clear Kono they should go to Kabala and proceed to Freetown. By then, there was no communication between Bockarie and SAJ Musa. Also present at this meeting were CO Isaac, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Abu Keita and “some other people”.<sup>6730</sup>

Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara

3039. Witness Perry Kamara testified that around 25 December, SAJ Musa’s forces that he was with attacked and captured Benguema where ECOMOG had established their headquarters in the province. There, they captured a lot of ammunition but it was too much for them to carry into Freetown. SAJ Musa said that if they left the ammunition there then their enemies would use it against them so the best thing would be to set fire to the ammo dump. After Musa and the officers had eaten and drunk in the officers’ mess, they came and stood by the road and SAJ Musa passed an order to set fire to the ammo dump so that neither ECOMOG nor the government troops could use it.<sup>6731</sup> He explained:

The whole place was set on fire, but in the ammo dump bombs were there, 180 millimetre bombs<sup>6732</sup> were there and some other bombs and their tubes, so the fire exploded the roof and the bomb blasted. We just heard that this bomb that had blasted, SAJ Musa had dropped. When we went there he had fallen down, but it was not far away from the house where this fire was. There were so many other soldiers there, so they took SAJ Musa. Everybody was coming to see. But before that other groups had moved. They had moved towards the Peninsula Road. When you reach Waterloo you enter Benguema, you avoid the Freetown highway to go Freetown directly. You use another route to come to Freetown that is called peninsula road. It is the bypass through to Freetown. The other groups went there and stayed there. They had not known that SAJ Musa had died, or so and so thing had happened to SAJ Musa, and we were not expecting that SAJ Musa would die at that time. They took SAJ Musa and they placed him on a plank. They called the medical personnel who were among us, they touched him and he was not moving and they said to leave him for a while. They took him to some place. They thought he had just fainted away. They did that, but SAJ Musa died. Some people said we should carry SAJ Musa along as we went along fighting until we finally bury him. Some people said no. Gullit and others came together and said he was a dead man and so many people had died among these troops, we did not carry them, so let us bury SAJ Musa as a guerrilla, so they took some leaves and put them over SAJ Musa. Everybody was doing that until we finally left. We left that location and went in the middle of the forest.<sup>6733</sup>

3040. Kamara clarified that he did not see anyone else either injured or killed by the explosion.<sup>6734</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-143

3041. Witness TF1-143, a child soldier, testified that he moved with SAJ Musa's group from Colonel Eddie Town towards Freetown.<sup>6735</sup> When he arrived at Benguema barracks it was night. He testified that the advance team, SAJ Musa's group, comprising O-Five, Five-Five, Komba, Med and some other fighters, had gone ahead,<sup>6736</sup> entered Benguema barracks and was looting ammunition from the barracks. When it was time for the witness's group to enter the barracks they were stopped at the gate and told not to enter because it would be risky due to explosion of bombs, as those in the barracks were looting the ammunition they needed and were setting fire to the rest.<sup>6737</sup>

3042. The witness was told that SAJ Musa had gone to look at who had set the store on fire and a bomb had exploded. The witness then saw SAJ Musa being carried past him in a hammock at the gate to Benguema barracks. TF1-143 said that he then followed ten boys carrying the hammock into the forest. They attempted to treat Musa but he died. The witness testified that he stayed there for the whole day as they would move when it was dark. A priest who they had captured was asked to pray over the corpse and Musa was buried in a grave they had dug.<sup>6738</sup> The witness said that he was told by his boss, Kabila, that Gullit and O-Five gave an order for a “fair in complexion lady” to be buried alive with SAJ Musa as a sacrifice to ensure success in the mission to Freetown.<sup>6739</sup>

3044. The Accused also testified that he was upset by the execution of the 24 soldiers as he felt that Kabbah had lied to him, since Kabbah promised Taylor that Victor King, who was extradited from Liberia to Sierra Leone would not be executed but King was.<sup>6743</sup> The Accused said that he met Bockarie in September 1998 for a short “preliminary meeting”, in which they discussed a cessation of hostilities. The two met again in mid-October 1998 which was a follow up to their first meeting in September to discuss how to bring to the implementation of the 1996 agreement. During the meeting in October, the Accused provided the RUF with a Guesthouse in Monrovia.<sup>6744</sup>

3045. The Accused said that he also met with Sam Bockarie briefly at around November 1998, when Bockarie passed on his way to Burkina Faso. Bockarie asked to pass through Liberia with a delegation, which included Eddie Kanneh, en route to Burkina Faso where he was to discuss peace with another member of ECOWAS. Bockarie also returned to Sierra Leone through Liberia at around November 1998. Bockarie sought the Accused's help in releasing Foday Sankoh.<sup>6745</sup> The Accused denied that he planned the invasion of Freetown with Bockarie during these meetings, or that he ordered or planned with Bockarie the capturing of Kono, Makeni, Joru and Freetown. He denied providing Bockarie with advice or that he was the mastermind behind the Freetown Invasion. He also said that he did not know that Kono was a strategic mining area.<sup>6746</sup> He said that he would have had to be Superman to both manage rebuilding Liberia and being part of the invasion of Freetown. In fact, he was outraged when he heard of the invasion because of his efforts and those of his colleagues in ECOWAS since August 1998 to bring the RUF to the peace table. He had tried to pressure the RUF by closing the border between Liberia and Sierra Leone in August 1998. He had no knowledge that the invasion was arranged, and it is impossible that he ordered, planned or executed the invasion on 6 January.<sup>6747</sup> The Accused denied that he ordered the invasion of Freetown in order to force Kabbah into peace negotiations, saying that Kabbah had given "a clear signal" to the international community, including ECOWAS, that Sankoh would not be executed.<sup>6748</sup>

3046. The Accused also denied that he gave instructions to Sam Bockarie to launch Operation No Living Thing.<sup>6749</sup> The Accused said that he had never denied that an orgy of atrocities were committed in Freetown from 6 January 1999, but denied that he ordered, incited, assisted or in any way encouraged the commission of atrocities, nor did he unleash the violence in Freetown in order to terrorise the Sierra Leonean population, he stated that he had no control over and contact with those who committed these atrocities. He questioned what would he have to gain from it, and stated that as a result of the Freetown Invasion, hundred of thousands of refugees came to Liberia.<sup>6750</sup>

3047. The Accused said that he first heard of the invasion on the morning of 6 January from his national security advisor, John T Richardson, who told him about the Freetown invasion by the rebels.<sup>6751</sup> The initial report that the Accused received about the invasion stated that Sam Bockarie said that he did not know anything about the invasion. The Accused received this information from his minister of national security whom Taylor told to contact Bockarie immediately to find out what was “going on”.<sup>6752</sup>

3048. The Accused later said that as of the end of December 1998 he knew that there was heavy fighting in different parts of Sierra Leone, and that he received the news about the invasion on 6 January 1999 at about 10am from the national security adviser Lewis Brown, and that upon Taylor’s instructions, Brown called Sam Bockarie by phone. According to the report given to Taylor, Bockarie stated that he did not know what was going on in Freetown. After Taylor was told by “one security personnel” that Bockarie had said on the radio that his men were in Freetown, Taylor told the security man to contact Bockarie again during that evening. In this later call Bockarie said “oh, that’s morale. The boys enter and it looks like they are doing well and so, you know, I’m a big man too so I’m taking some claim for it”. Taylor’s analysis of what happened was that Bockarie did not sound as if he had control over the situation.<sup>6753</sup>

3049. On cross-examination the Accused said that he did not hear Bockarie on Christmas Day 1998 threatening to launch an attack on Freetown by New Year’s, unless the government agreed to negotiate with the rebels, as he was not really following the news in Sierra Leone in December 1998.<sup>6754</sup> The Accused also did not hear Bockarie saying on 29 December 1998 that the shelling of Freetown would not stop until the Government of Tejan Kabbah was ousted. When asked how he could be so ill-informed as a President of a

3050. Witness Issa Sesay testified that Bockarie made trips to Monrovia in September, October and November 1998, which, as Bockarie told him, were meant to discuss the Abidjan Accord.<sup>6756</sup> Bockarie attempted to contact Taylor in May or June 1998 so that Taylor would contact his fellow ECOWAS leaders about revisiting the Abidjan peace Accord, and when this attempt fell through, Bockarie sent Eddie Kanneh to Conakry in August 1998 to meet the Liberian Ambassador in Guinea, Wantee. After Eddie Kanneh's visit with the Liberian Ambassador, Bockarie came again to Pendembu and told the witness that he had received a message that Bockarie should meet General Dopoe Menkarzon at Foya Tinkia on the border and Menkarzon would take him to see Charles Taylor, on Taylor's invitation. Bockarie went with Menkarzon to Monrovia spending three or four days in Liberia before sending a message that he had returned to Buedu.<sup>6757</sup>

3051. Bockarie went back to Monrovia in October 1998 for around a week by invitation.<sup>6758</sup> Taylor told Bockarie in October 1998 that he (Taylor) would contact President Blaise and the ECOWAS leaders about revisiting the Abidjan Accord.<sup>6759</sup>

3052. Bockarie made a third trip to Monrovia, then Burkina Faso and Libya in late November/early December 1998 and was gone from Sierra Leone for two weeks. SYB Rogers, Eddie Kanneh, Lawrence Womandia, Rashid Sandy, Junior Vandi and the late Shabado went with him to Monrovia and Burkina Faso. During this time, he called the witness from Pendembu to be in Buedu together with Mike Lamin. From Burkina Faso Bockarie went with one of a smaller group to Libya, where Gaddafi gave Bockarie USD

$50,000.<sup>6760</sup> Jungle was not part of the group went with Bockarie to Monrovia and then on to Burkina Faso in November 1998. Jungle did not come with Bockarie when he returned from this trip.<sup>6761</sup>

3053. Sesay knew that the purpose of the visit to Burkina Faso was to discuss the revisiting of the Abidjan Accord because when Bockarie returned from his meeting with Taylor in October 1998 he told Sesay that Taylor had organised a trip to Burkina Faso for Bockarie to discuss with Blaise Compaoré, the O.A.U Chairman, revisiting the Accord so that the RUF and SLPP government would discuss the peace process again. Taylor had told Bockarie that he would speak to the other ECOWAS leaders as they were guarantors of the Accord.<sup>6762</sup> Bockarie did not tell anyone throughout 1998, or before he went to Burkina Faso, that Taylor was linking him with Burkina Faso to get materials for a mission to free Sankoh nor did Bockarie have plans to attack Freetown upon his return.<sup>6763</sup>

3054. The day after Bockarie and the delegation arrived back in Buedu, around 11th or 12th December, a meeting was held at Waterworks, which was attended by the witness, SYB Rogers, Mike Lamin, Eddie Kanneh, Rashid Sandy, and Lawrence Womandia. Bockarie briefed them on his trip and ordered Sesay to attack ECOMOG positions in Koidu Town in Kono.<sup>6764</sup> The only AFRC member at Waterworks was Eddie Kanneh, who was simply there as Bockarie's friend.<sup>6765</sup> Isaac Mongor did not attend the meeting.<sup>6766</sup> The meeting took place in the afternoon.<sup>6767</sup>

3055. Bockarie said he wanted to attack Kono because Omrie Golley, who was in England, had informed him that many ECOMOG and the Kamajors were there and that Sandline was mining the area. The aim was not to acquire the mining fields but rather to prevent Sandline mining because they were mercenaries providing arms and ammunition to the Sierra

Leonean government and Kamajors.<sup>6768</sup> After the meeting, Sesay went with Bockarie and Mike Lamin to explain the plan to Johnny Paul Koroma in Kangama, and he, in return, provided them with advice. Koroma had no control or influence over SAJ Musa's forces from February 1998 when SAJ Musa and his group left Makeni for Kabala, until Musa's death in December 1998.<sup>6769</sup>

3056. Sesay's instruction when he left Buedu was to attack Kono. The plan only mutated as the RUF moved across Sierra Leone because the tables turned and ECOMOG fled to Nimikoro and later to Tongo, Sewafe and Baama Konta. The RUF then moved from Kono to Makeni because ECOMOG was on the run and because they wanted to control more space.<sup>6770</sup>

3057. Sesay explained that the attacks on Freetown and Kono were two separate, dissimilar operations; a few members of the AFRC were involved in the attack on Kono, but the attack was dominated by the RUF, while the Freetown attack was planned independently by the AFRC and had nothing to do with the RUF because the RUF was not part of the army. The RUF did not have control over the AFRC at the time of the attack nor did it plan or form part of a common operation with the AFRC forces in the attack, while the AFRC and SAJ Musa, did not make their plans known to the RUF. Bockarie did not order SAJ Musa to attack Freetown (they were not in contact from February until the death of Musa in December 1998), nor did he complain about Musa's refusal to accept such a plan to Charles Taylor.<sup>6771</sup> Sesay disagreed with the proposition that from the time he captured Kono, it was all part of a single chain of events which led to Gullit attacking Freetown, or if Sesay had not attacked Kono Gullit would not have succeeded in Freetown. He testified that the AFRC had their own plans to attack Freetown and used the arms and ammunition they captured from ECOMOG along the way, such as in Masiaka and Benguema.<sup>6772</sup>

3058. Sesay was not aware of any mission named “Operation Free the Leader” by Bockarie aimed at capturing Freetown and freeing Sankoh,<sup>6773</sup> but confirmed that Freetown, as the seat of power, was the objective of the RUF throughout the war.<sup>6774</sup> Sesay also said that Bockarie would contact people and ambassadors to make threats on behalf of the RUF that he would fight until his leader, Sankoh, was released.<sup>6775</sup> However what happened on the ground was different; Bockarie just said these things to “make himself fearful or wicked to the world”. As an example, Sesay said that he, himself, did not commit atrocities in Makeni where hundreds of Kamajors were captured and civilians killed.<sup>6776</sup>

3059. Sesay denied that there was any discussion at the Waterworks meeting prior to the Kono attack about its strategic importance as a diamond-producing area,<sup>6777</sup> stating that the reason the RUF attacked Kono was in order to sabotage President Kabbah’s plans by removing the Sandline miners and ECOMOG from the district. The intention was not to access the diamonds as such.<sup>6778</sup>

3060. Sesay testified that Bockarie did not mention Charles Taylor’s name during the meeting at Waterworks, and that Bockarie did not speak on the satellite phone to Charles Taylor before, during or after the Waterworks meeting. Sesay denied that Taylor gave Bockarie the order to attack and capture Kono,<sup>6779</sup> saying that Bockarie did not tell him that he had discussed with Taylor the recapture of Koidu or the capture of Kono or other mining areas.<sup>6780</sup> There was no meeting in December 1998 at which Taylor gave the order for Operation No Living Thing.<sup>6781</sup>

3061. Sesay denied that there was a meeting at Bockarie’s house before the December 1998 attack on Kono, stating that there was only the Waterworks meeting at which the instruction was given to Sesay to attack Kono.<sup>6782</sup> He also denied that there was a meeting at which Bockarie explained a complete strategy of attack through to Freetown.<sup>6783</sup> He stated that there was no two-pronged plan showed on a map or created at the Waterworks meeting for the RUF to attack Freetown together with the AFRC or alone, as no other place other than Kono was mentioned as a target to be captured.<sup>6784</sup> The primary target was Koidu Town, the Headquarters of Kono District,<sup>6785</sup> and there was no simultaneous plan for Mongor to attack Joru and then advance to Zimmi. Mongor received the order to attack Joru only after Sesay had captured Kono and was moving towards Makeni.<sup>6786</sup>

3062. Sesay said that at the meeting in Kono before the attack on Koidu Town, he gave standing orders for the attack, appointed commanders who were to take over various targets. He forbade looting and the killing and amputation of civilians or captured soldiers in any circumstances. Sesay had heard on the BBC in 1998 (especially April to May) while he was in Pendembu about the previous amputation of civilians in Kono, for example those in the Tombodu axis carried out by Savage and Staff Alhaji. There were no amputations during the RUF advance from Kono to Makeni.<sup>6787</sup> Sesay admitted that looting took place after the attack but reiterated that he did not give any such orders.<sup>6788</sup>

3063. Making an operation “fearful” means destruction, committing crimes against civilians and the opposing troops.<sup>6789</sup> Whilst “fearful” things happened in Freetown in 1999, the RUF was not involved in them. The fighting that the RUF carried out in Makeni, Makali, Magburaka and Masingbi did not involve the same kind of atrocities.<sup>6790</sup>

3064. Witness Martin George, an RUF officer, testified that Sam Bockarie convened a meeting at Waterworks, near Buedu in Kailahun. This was a general meeting which followed two other meetings in Superman Ground, “Kono Jungle”, in which commanders discussed how to “maintain the ground”. There was then another meeting in Kono to discuss the recapture of Kono.<sup>6791</sup>

3065. The meeting in December in Buedu was chaired by Bockarie, and included SYB Rogers, Lawrence Womandia, Eddie Kanneh. Morris Kallon attended the meeting and represented Issa Sesay who was in Kono at the time, and did not attend the meeting.<sup>6792</sup>

3066. There were many people who went to the Waterworks meeting including the witness, John Vincent, some AFRC leaders such as Leather Boot and Akim, and Issa Sesay, Superman,<sup>6793</sup> and many commanders. Other commanders did not come as they needed to stay in the front lines and “maintain the situation”. Also at the meeting were fighters and bodyguards who were based in Buedu, as well as women. They spent the night and then in the morning went to Waterworks, on the road leading to Dawa crossing point. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss how to re-take Kono, and from there advance towards Makeni and Lunsar. The reason they wanted to be based in Kono was because it was a diamond mining area. Kono was also “a target ahead of us” and they needed to go through Kono in order to reach Makeni. The reason they wanted to reach Makeni was to regain the ground from the enemy.<sup>6794</sup> There was no discussion about attacking Freetown.<sup>6795</sup>

3067. One of the most important issues discussed at the meeting was where the ammunition to capture Kono would come from, as they had enough arms that they had captured from their enemies but needed ammunition.<sup>6796</sup> When asked what was said in relation to ammunition at the meeting, the witness replied that during this meeting Bockarie introduced Abu Keita, a Mandingo Liberian and former ULIMO-K general. Bockarie said that Keita had brought the ammunition to recapture Kono and briefed the attendees on the ammunition brought by Keita: 20 boxes of AK bullets and 5 boxes of RPG rockets. In the situation they were in, 20 boxes of ammunition was plenty. The ammunition Keita brought was from ULIMO who had kept their ammunition after they lost the elections in 1997, as he was the commander at Lofa Bridge. Since ECOMOG were searching for arms and ammunition at various points, Keita was afraid, took the ammunition and “brought it for sale”.<sup>6797</sup> The witness himself saw the ammunition Keita had brought at Bockarie’s house in Buedu, Dawa Road, and when it was brought to them in the “Kono Jungle” as they used it to capture Kono.<sup>6798</sup> The witness recalled two senior officers who came with Keita attending the meeting, Colonel Jungle and Colonel Leo, both Mandingos. That was the first time the witness saw these two in RUF territory.<sup>6799</sup>

3068. Bockarie did not say anything in relation to Charles Taylor at the meeting, or that Taylor gave or send them ammunition to recapture Kono. Taylor had his own problems to solve. He was elected in Liberia in 1997, while there was no fighting in 1997 and he was not fighting. “How could he have given us instruction? How could he have given us ammunition?”<sup>6800</sup>

3069. On cross-examination the witness said that he was never told by Bockarie about a shipment from Burkina Faso, and the witness did not hear Bockarie giving a report at the meeting about his trip.<sup>6801</sup>

Defence Witness John Vincent

They discussed a “two days’ offensive” and capturing “major areas” will cause concern for the international community who would intervene, bring peace and Sankoh would be released. That is why they decided to attack Kono and “as far as Makeni”. The plan did not include attacking Freetown. “As far as Makeni” was the initial stage while the next target would have been to go close to Freetown or to Freetown itself, but at the meeting Freetown was not discussed.<sup>6803</sup>

3073. Exhibit P-063 is the minutes of a forum held on 2 December 1998 at the RUF headquarters. The document lists the attendees of the meeting: Sam Bockarie, SYB Rogers, Edward Kanneh, Lawrence Womandia, Junior Vandj, Mohamed S. Banya, Rashid Sandi – External delegates, I.H. Sesay and “members of various units”.<sup>6805</sup>

3074. According to this document, SYB Rogers gave a salute report of a mission which he described as “very big success” in terms of what they were able to receive, and thanked the CDS for his outstanding effort.<sup>6806</sup> Rogers noted with profound gratitude the effort of their host government “on the other side” for granting them with “in-let and exit facilities even with escort”. According to Pa Rogers, he and the CDS paid a courtesy call on his Excellency C.G.T.<sup>6807</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3075. Colonel Eddie Kanneh (SLA Rep) addressed the meeting and stated that the trip was successful. He stated that his impression of the CDS was that he was a person who can predict results and asked not to view the CDS as power hungry saying that there must be solidarity among them all.<sup>6808</sup>

3076. The Chief of Defence Staff, CDS, Brigadier Sam Bockarie, “buttressed” the speeches of Rogers and Kanneh and said that they were not financially strong to make the trip as successful as it turned out to be. Bockarie stated that in the first attempt, they stopped half way and heard about the shocking news on Focus about the trial and death sentence passed on their “Father and Leader” Cpl. Foday S. Sankoh and that they should now launch an offensive against the Government of Tejan Kabba for the release of their Leader. The Brigadier told the forum that he was able to formally hand over their struggle and petitioned the matter of their Leader to the President of Burkina Faso, who was the current Chairman of O.A.U., so that, as O.A.U. Chairman, he will step in and mediate peace between them and the SLPP Government. Bockarie warned that now is the time to work together to secure the release of their Leader and to avoid gossip which will lead to disunity among them.<sup>6809</sup>

3077. According to the document the Battle Field Commander, Issa Sesay, thanked the delegates and promised that they will put their efforts into consolidating their strength for victory. He said that they will “strike for the release of our Leader and the victory of our movement”. He further stated that “[a] commando will feel good when he attacks and captures rather than been [sic] called to join with others – it will make no prospect”.<sup>6810</sup>

3078. Col. Isaac Morego thanked the CDS and delegates for their grand effort and advised everybody to work hand in hand for the victory of RUFSL. He said that they were not fighting for Sankoh or the Brigadier but rather for themselves and their country, Sierra Leone, for victory and peace.<sup>6811</sup>

3079. Col. Mike Lamin thanked the CDS and the delegates who went with him on the mission and warned that they must not talk on how the material was channelled to their base for security reasons.<sup>6812</sup>

3080. Before ending the meeting “in harmony”, the CDS announced a senior officers meeting from where arrangements were to be done for full scale operations.<sup>6813</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-067

3081. Prosecution Exhibit P-067, an undated “Situation Report” from the Black Revolutionary Guards to “the Leader”, states in relation to the December 1998 operation that after the “High Command” and Eddie Kanneh returned from Burkina Faso, they were given “huge quantity of materials for serious offensive to start a campaign for the release of our leader”. The delegation returned to Monrovia in November and then back to the base where a forum was immediately held “for a serious offensive to commence [sic]”. It reports that the combatants were happy and agreed to start the operation to capture Kono.<sup>6814</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-078

3082. Exhibit P-078 is a report prepared by Amnesty International about the Sierra Leone civil conflict. According to this report, Foday Sankoh was transferred from Nigeria to the custody of the Sierra Leone government. Subsequently, the RUF threatened to continue their campaign of violence against civilians if Sankoh remained in detention. On 4 September 1998, Sankoh was charged for crimes committed during Sierra Leone’s internal armed conflict. His trial commenced on 24 September 1998 and he was convicted and sentenced to death the following month. This prompted further attacks by rebel forces against unarmed civilians in retaliation.<sup>6815</sup>

3083. The Report further states that on 12 October 1998, 34 of the 37 defendants before the court martial were convicted of treason, murder and collaborating with the enemy and sentenced to death. On 19 October 1998, 24 of those sentenced to death were executed, while the other 10 had their sentences commuted to life imprisonment.<sup>6816</sup>

3084. Prosecution Exhibit P-093 is a comprehensive report from Brigadier Issa H. Sesay, Battle Field Commander, to Major General Sam Bockarie, Chief of Defence Staff, dated 26 January 1999. According to this report on 6th December 1998, Sesay left the Defence Headquarters upon Bockarie's instruction for assignment and mission to attack Koidu, the second (2nd) Brigade, RUF/SL axis. The report includes a list of ammunition provided to Sesay in order to carry out the mission to attack Koidu and the "Sengema target".<sup>6817</sup> On December 9th 1998, they arrived safely to Guinea Highway, second (2nd) Brigade Headquarters, and were welcomed by the Commander, Colonel Boston Flomo (a.k.a. Rambo). A forum was convened which centred on the mission given to Sesay by Bockarie to attack and capture Koidu Town, including Yengema and its airfield for quick transportation of their "materials" by air.<sup>6818</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-019

3085. Exhibit D-019 is a news article dated 18 April 1999, which reports that:

3087. The report further states that upon Sesay’s arrival in Kono, he called the Brigade Commander, Rambo, and other senior officers to a forum in which “general security issues” were discussed and a war-plan was made for the attack of Koindu [sic] Town.<sup>6821</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-169

3088. Exhibit D-169 is the second report of the Secretary-General to United Nations Security Council on the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone. According to this report, on 17 August 1998 the RUF announced a terror campaign against civilians, CDF and ECOMOG if the Government failed to release Corporal Sankoh within seven days, suggesting that peace negotiations could resume only thereafter.<sup>6822</sup>

Deliberations

3089. It is undisputed that in around November 1998, Sam Bockarie left Sierra Leone for Burkina Faso with a delegation that included Eddie Kanneh, SYB Rogers and Lawrence Womandia. On their way to Burkina Faso and on their way back to Sierra Leone, the RUF delegation stopped in Monrovia.<sup>6823</sup> Bockarie and his delegation returned to Buedu in around late November/early December 1998<sup>6824</sup> with a large quantity of arms and ammunition.<sup>6825</sup> The Accused acknowledged that he briefly met Bockarie in Monrovia before Bockarie proceeded to Burkina Faso and that he met him again on his way back to Sierra Leone.<sup>6826</sup>

3090. Prior to Bockarie's trip to Monrovia, Bockarie told TF1-371 that the purpose of the trip was to meet the Accused in Monrovia and to get a shipment of ammunition from Burkina Faso for a "major offensive".<sup>6827</sup> Isaac Mongor testified that in early November 1998, the commanders in Buedu met in Waterworks with Bockarie, Jungle, SYB Rogers and others, and decided to send a letter to Taylor requesting ammunition.<sup>6828</sup> Augustine Mallah also testified to a meeting in which Bockarie said that he was "fed up" with staying in Kailahun District and that he was trying to go to Liberia to seek advice from Charles Taylor, and to "get our needs".<sup>6829</sup> The Trial Chamber has considered this aspect of the evidence, relating to the request to the Accused for arms and ammunition, in the context of the Burkina Faso shipment.<sup>6830</sup>

3091. Following Bockarie's return from Monrovia in late November/early December 1998 Bockarie convened a meeting of commanders at Waterworks to brief them about his trip. The Trial Chamber notes that while Defence witness Issa Sesay denied that other than Eddie Kanneh there were no AFRC members represented at the meeting,<sup>6831</sup> both Prosecution and Defence witnesses stated that the AFRC as well as the RUF were represented at this meeting, specifically Akim Turay and Leather Boot.<sup>6832</sup> TF1-371 named Gullit as having been at the meeting, but the Trial Chamber notes that he is the only witness to place Gullit at this meeting and considers that Gullit could not have been at the meeting as he was already in Rosos by July/August 1998.<sup>6833</sup>

3092. The evidence suggests that at Waterworks a plan to attack Freetown via Kono and Kenema was discussed. TF1-371 testified that at the Waterworks meeting Bockarie said he had sufficient ammunition for an attack on Kenema and Koidu, as well as Freetown. He brought a map of Sierra Leone and discussed with the commanders a plan for a two-pronged attack to get to Freetown, one prong via Kono then proceeding to Makeni, and another prong via Kenema.<sup>6834</sup> Augustine Mallah described a plan in which the 1st brigade was to attack Bunumbu, Segbwema and all the way to Kenema,<sup>6835</sup> while Bockarie told Sesay and Akim to join Superman and Rambo and attack Kono, and from Kono Akim should proceed to Tongo and Sesay and Morris Kallon were to advance towards Makeni.<sup>6836</sup> Abu Keita testified that Bockarie told the attendees that the ammunition he had brought would be used to attack Kono and proceed to Makeni, while Keita, as part of that operation, was assigned to fight in the Bunumbu-Segbwema axis, leading to Kenema.<sup>6837</sup> Albert Saidu, though not at the Waterworks meeting himself, testified on the basis of what he was told of the meeting that the plan was for the 1st and 2nd brigades to attack Kenema and Kono, respectively. He said a war plan was made at the meeting and described the division of officers at the meeting and their assignment to materiel for the attack.<sup>6838</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that TF1-371, Augustine Mallah, Abu Keita and Albert Saidu are all generally credible witnesses.<sup>6839</sup>

3093. Isaac Mongor, whom the Trial Chamber has previously found to be generally credible,<sup>6840</sup> testified that a day prior to the Waterworks meeting, he met Bockarie at Bockarie's house, where Bockarie told Mongor that the ammunition he had brought would be used in an operation he had discussed with the Accused, in accordance with which they would capture Kono, then Makeni in an advance towards Freetown, while they would also attack Kenema and Joru.<sup>6841</sup> Karmoh Kanneh, who attended a smaller meeting at Bockarie's house, which he described as a briefing on the military strategy, stated that Bockarie said the first target should be Kono to Makeni up to Freetown, and the next target should be Segbwema and Daru, towards Kenema.<sup>6842</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Kanneh is also a generally credible witness.<sup>6843</sup> TF1-585, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be generally credible,<sup>6844</sup> testified that at a meeting at Bockarie's house a plan to attack Kono and from there advance towards Freetown was discussed.<sup>6845</sup>

3094. The Trial Chamber notes that other witnesses testified that the plan concerned only the capture of Kono, without planning to advance on to Freetown. Defence witness Issa Sesay testified that he attended a small commanders' meeting at Waterworks<sup>6846</sup> and was assigned to attack Kono. He testified that the only plan mentioned at the meeting was to attack Kono, and that there was no discussion on continuing to Makeni and then proceeding to Freetown.<sup>6847</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Issa Sesay's testimony should be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>6848</sup> While Defence witness Martin George also testified that Freetown was not mentioned at the Waterworks meeting, he said that the plan was to go from Kono to Makeni and then Lunsar.<sup>6849</sup> The Trial Chamber is of the view that if Lunsar was mentioned as a potential target, due to its proximity to Freetown, it is implausible that Freetown would not have been discussed at the meeting. Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes that on cross-examination George claimed that Issa Sesay did not attend a meeting at Waterworks, which is not only contradicted by his own examination in chief when he stated that Sesay attended the meeting,<sup>6850</sup> but also by both Prosecution and Defence witnesses,<sup>6851</sup> and by the minutes of the Waterworks meeting, recording that not only did Sesay attend the meeting, but that he also addressed it.<sup>6852</sup> The Trial Chamber therefore does not find Martin George's evidence to be credible and notes that it is also inconsistent with Issa Sesay's evidence that the plan was only to capture Kono. As opposed to Sesay, George did mention that the plan included proceeding from Kono towards Makeni and Lunsar.

3095. Defence witness John Vincent testified that he attended a meeting in 1998 at Waterworks in which an attack on Kono and "as far as Makeni" was planned, and that while the next target would have been a place close to Freetown or Freetown itself, Freetown was not discussed at the meeting.<sup>6853</sup> However, the witness explained that the reason for the operation was to free Foday Sankoh, saying that they wanted to capture major areas thereby causing concern in the international community. This would lead to intervention, bring peace and Sankoh's release. Given this reason for the operation, the Trial Chamber finds it implausible that Freetown would not have been mentioned as a target, as Sankoh was being held in prison in Freetown. The Trial Chamber also recalls its finding that John Vincent's evidence must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>6854</sup>

3096. Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that after Bockarie arrived in Buedu from his trip to Monrovia and Burkina Faso, he convened a meeting in which a strategy of how to attack Kono and Tongo was discussed. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Fornie is generally credible.<sup>6855</sup> However, Fornie's knowledge of the meeting is based on a radio message that Bockarie sent to commanders to come and attend the meeting,<sup>6856</sup> which does not explain how the witness knew the content of the meeting. The Trial Chamber will therefore not rely on his evidence.

3097. TF1-567 testified that he was present in Buedu when Bockarie returned from Monrovia in December 1998 and that Bockarie said Taylor told him that they should attack Kono and other mining areas in order to secure diamonds to obtain more arms and ammunition.<sup>6857</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-567 is generally credible.<sup>6858</sup> The witness did not say that he attended the Waterworks meeting, nor did he say that there was no plan to advance towards Freetown. The Trial Chamber notes that Kono was one of the first targets of the operation and finds that his evidence does not negate the possibility that in Waterworks a plan to advance towards Freetown, beginning with Kono, was laid out.

3098. Mohamed Kabbah was told by a person named Zedman that at the Waterworks meeting an attack on Kono and Makeni was discussed.<sup>6859</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Kabbah is generally credible.<sup>6860</sup> Given that Mohamed Kabbah was stationed in Kono at the time, and was told about the plan to attack Kono by a person also stationed in Kono, the Trial Chamber is of the opinion that Kabbah was told about a plan with regard to his duties, which does not negate the possibility of a larger plan.

3099. On the basis of the aforementioned evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the plan presented at the Waterworks meeting was for a two pronged attack on Kono and Kenema, with Freetown as the ultimate destination.

3100. TF1-371, Isaac Mongor, and Karmoh Kanneh testified that in smaller meetings at Bockarie's house, Bockarie told them that the plan was a plan that Bockarie had discussed with the Accused and brought back with him from Monrovia.<sup>6861</sup> Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that while in Monrovia with Bockarie, he heard Bockarie, Kanneh and Yeaten, Director of the Accused's Special Security Service (SSS),<sup>6862</sup> discussing Kono and Tongo as the first targets to be hit with the ammunition that they had brought back with them.<sup>6863</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that none of the witnesses testified that Bockarie announced at the larger meeting, in Waterworks, that the plan came from Monrovia or that he had discussed it with the Accused.

3101. Isaac Mongor's testimony is based on Bockarie's description of a conversation Bockarie had with the Accused, during a meeting of Bockarie and Mongor at Bockarie's house. The Trial Chamber notes that Mongor was cross-examined on his prior statements, in which initially he did not mention the role of the Accused in the Freetown invasion. Mongor acknowledged not having told the truth, but maintained that he knew all along that the plan to attack Freetown was discussed by Bockarie with the Accused. He explained that he was worried that he was himself at risk of prosecution, and that later when he was reassured, he told the truth.<sup>6864</sup> While noting the evasiveness of Mongor's testimony on cross-examination regarding his prior statements,<sup>6865</sup> the Trial Chamber accepts his explanation, noting that his testimony on the role of the Accused is corroborated by the testimony of TF1-371 and Karmoh Kanneh.

3102. Both TF1-371 and Karmoh Kanneh testified about a smaller meeting at Bockarie's house of the "inner core", as described by TF1-371, which included Eddie Kanneh, Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon, Jungle and a few others. Karmoh Kanneh also testified that the meeting at Bockarie's house was attended by Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon, Jungle, Eddie Kanneh, and SYB Rogers, among others.<sup>6866</sup> According to both witnesses, during this meeting Bockarie left the room and spoke on his satellite phone to the Accused on the veranda. TF1-371 said Bockarie told him afterwards that the Accused had instructed him to capture Freetown, to force the government to negotiate.<sup>6867</sup> Kanneh testified that he was present when Bockarie and Jungle both spoke with the Accused to brief him on the meeting.<sup>6868</sup>

<sup>6865</sup> Later in his cross-examination Mongor agreed that the reason he did not tell his investigators in the beginning that Bockarie told him that the attack on Freetown was Taylor's idea was because he had forgotten, explaining that he is "a human being" (Isaac Mongor, Transcript 7 April 2008, pp. 6766-6768).

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3104. The Trial Chamber notes some inconsistencies in the testimony of TF1-371 and Karmoh Kanneh with regard to this meeting, including whether it took place during the day or in the evening. Both witnesses said Jungle was at the meeting, but only Kanneh testified that he spoke with the Accused as well as Bockarie. However, Kanneh testified that he was present for the call, while TF1-371 only heard about it from Bockarie after he returned from the veranda. The Trial Chamber does not consider these inconsistencies to be significant. The accounts of the witnesses as to who attended the meeting, where it was, and the satellite phone call between Bockarie and the Accused are consistent and further corroborate the role of the Accused in planning the military operation.

3105. Defence witness Issa Sesay, who attended the “inner core” meeting, testified that Bockarie did not mention Taylor’s name during the meeting, and that Bockarie did not speak on the phone with Taylor before, during or after the meeting.<sup>6872</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Sesay’s evidence must be treated with caution. Several witnesses did not mention that Bockarie said that he had discussed the plan with the Accused, and both a Prosecution and a Defence witness, Mohamed Kabbah and Martin George, respectively, testified that Bockarie did not mention Taylor’s name with regard to the instructions on how to execute the operation.<sup>6873</sup> However, these witnesses did not attend one of the smaller meetings Bockarie held outside the larger Waterworks meeting. It was only in smaller meetings that Bockarie mentioned the role of the Accused in planning the operation. The Trial Chamber therefore does not find these accounts of the Waterworks meeting to contradict the testimonies of witnesses who did attend the smaller meetings at Bockarie’s house. In the absence of corroboration and in light of the evidence of several Prosecution witnesses, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be credible, the Trial Chamber does not find Sesay’s testimony to be truthful

3106. The Trial Chamber notes the evidence that Bockarie was already considering an initiative to advance towards Freetown before he went to Burkina Faso. TF1-371 testified that the announcement in October 1998 that Sankoh had been sentenced to death, and the execution of 24 soldiers, provoked a rallying cry from the commanders, who wanted to go to Freetown to free Sankoh. Bockarie was furious and started talking about going to free

Sankoh,<sup>6874</sup> and TF1-371 said that prior to Bockarie's departure to Monrovia in November/December 1998, he convened a meeting with the witness, Issa Sesay and Kallon, in which he said that the purpose of his trip was to meet with the Accused in Monrovia and obtain ammunition for a "major attack, major offensive".<sup>6875</sup> On cross-examination TF1-371 explained, "the idea of going to Freetown was discussed by Sam Bockarie among the senior commanders, to free Mr Sankoh, but the instruction to go to Freetown originated from Mr Taylor, as expressed by Sam Bockarie to the senior commanders". TF1-371 said that the instruction to go to Freetown came when Bockarie returned from his trip, the discussion among the commanders of going to Freetown had already started in October.<sup>6876</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that there is further evidence that in reaction to the news of the execution of the 24 soldiers over the radio, Bockarie said that he would march to Freetown as long as "our men" are being executed.<sup>6877</sup>

Sankoh from prison. Karmoh Kanneh and Isaac Mongor said that the purpose of the mission was also to seize power.<sup>6883</sup>

3108. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-371 is generally credible, and that other Prosecution witnesses support TF1-371's evidence that Bockarie had already envisioned a major attack prior to his trip to Monrovia. Augustine Mallah testified that before going to Liberia, Bockarie expressed his frustration with staying in Kailahun District, stating that he "had something at hand" and that he was trying to go to Liberia to seek advice from Charles Taylor and to "get our needs".<sup>6884</sup> Albert Saidu testified that before Bockarie left to Liberia, he showed the witness diamonds and said that he was taking the diamonds to Charles Taylor in order to secure materiel for "a big offensive" to recapture Kono.<sup>6885</sup> TF1-567 testified that Bockarie told him in October 1998 that they should attempt to recapture Koidu Town and that he was going to see Charles Taylor in Monrovia.<sup>6886</sup> TF1-367 testified that he was told by Boston Flomo (a.k.a. RUF Rambo) that Bockarie had gone to see Charles Taylor in Monrovia to secure arms and ammunition and that when Bockarie would return they would attack Koidu Town.<sup>6887</sup> The Trial Chamber considers that this clearly indicates that Flomo knew that a plan to attack Koidu Town was considered before Bockarie returned from his trip.

3109. The Trial Chamber finds from the evidence that the idea to advance towards Freetown was already in discussion when Bockarie went to Monrovia, which is consistent with the request sent to the Accused for ammunition. Bockarie went to Monrovia to secure the arms and ammunition, as well as advice, needed for a military operation. He returned to Buedu with arms and ammunition, and a plan he had drawn up with the Accused.

3110. The Trial Chamber further notes that TF1-567 testified that after returning from Buedu to Kono District, Issa Sesay convened a meeting for the commanders in the Kono area, in which Sesay said that Bockarie had been told by Taylor that if they did not capture

Koidu Town and other mining areas, Taylor would stop supplying them with arms and ammunition.<sup>6888</sup> Abu Keita, who attended the larger Waterworks meeting, testified that at that meeting Bockarie said that they would attack Kono because Kono was a strategic area as its diamond mines would fund arms purchases for the RUF.<sup>6889</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls Fornie's testimony that Yeaten told Bockarie that the first targets of the operation should be Kono and Tongo,<sup>6890</sup> which are diamond areas. Karmoh Kanneh testified that at the meeting he attended in Buedu, Jungle said that he and Bockarie had discussed with the Accused "how the mission should go on", and that Taylor told him, Jungle, that their first target should be Kono before they proceed.<sup>6891</sup> The Defence claims that in his prior statement Kanneh did not mention that Taylor planned the takeover of Freetown, since his statement that Jungle said Taylor had advised them to target mineral areas first, as there would be no success without money, does not show that Taylor planned the intricate details of the operation.<sup>6892</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that when confronted with this prior statement on cross-examination, Kanneh maintained that his prior statement showed that the Accused was "involved" in the planning of the operation, as he did not consider someone providing advice on what should be a first target in a mission to be different from planning.<sup>6893</sup> TF1-371 also pointed out that Bockarie endeavoured to take his trip to Burkina Faso in order get sufficient ammunition to go to Freetown, and that after Bockarie returned from his trip he had instructions that he passed on to the commanders to first and foremost capture Kono, Koidu and to then go to Freetown.<sup>6894</sup>

3111. The Accused denied that he played any part in the planning or gave Bockarie advice on the operation to attack Kono, Makeni, Joru and Freetown.<sup>6895</sup> However, the Trial

Chamber finds the Accused's testimony that he was not aware of the strategic importance of Kono on account of its diamond wealth not credible, in particular in light of the Trial Chamber's finding that the Accused previously told Bockarie to attack Kono due to its diamondiferous nature.<sup>6896</sup> Moreover, the Trial Chamber has found that the Accused was involved in Bockarie's purchase of a large consignment of arms and ammunition prior to the operation,<sup>6897</sup> and sent former SLA fighters who fled to Liberia after the Intervention back to Sierra Leone in order for them to participate in the operation.<sup>6898</sup> Given the testimonies of several credible witnesses on the involvement of the Accused in planning an operation to advance towards Freetown by first attacking Kono, and given the other ways the Accused assisted Bockarie to support the upcoming operation the Trial Chamber finds the Accused's denial to be incredible.

3112. Based on the evidence the Trial Chamber finds that Bockarie came to the Accused in Monrovia with an idea to advance towards Freetown and that the Accused participated in planning the military strategy, emphasising the need to first capture Kono due to its diamond wealth, and that Bockarie then brought the plan to Buedu where he briefed his commanders on it, armed them with ammunition and assigned them to two brigades for a two pronged attack on Kono and Kenema, to be followed by an advance on to Freetown. The Trial Chamber notes that the Accused was briefed on the meeting from Buedu by satellite phone.

3113. The Prosecution submits that the Accused and Bockarie determined how the plan was to be carried out, deciding to save ammunition by making the operation even more fearful than all other operations before, and that after Bockarie spoke with the Accused via satellite phone Bockarie announced "Operation No Living Thing", which meant that anything that stood in their way should be eliminated.<sup>6899</sup> The Accused denied that he gave instructions to Sam Bockarie to launch Operation No Living Thing,<sup>6900</sup> or that he ordered, incited, assisted or in any way encouraged the commission of atrocities in Freetown, stating that had no control over or contact with those who committed these atrocities. He questioned what he would have had to gain and noted that as a result of the Freetown Invasion, hundreds of thousands of refugees came to Liberia.<sup>6901</sup>

3114. TF1-371 testified that when Bockarie returned from his conversation with the Accused over the satellite phone, Bockarie said that Taylor gave him an instruction for Operation No Living Thing, and that they should capture Freetown “by all means” in order to push the government into negotiations.<sup>6902</sup> On cross-examination, TF1-371 agreed that it was Bockarie who coined the name “Operation No Living Thing”.<sup>6903</sup> He said “I can’t recall when he [Taylor] talked to any AFRC to go burn and kill civilians or what, no”.<sup>6904</sup> However, he did not agree, as the Defence contends, that the Accused never gave such advice or instruction to the RUF.

3115. In this regard, the Trial Chamber notes Augustine Mallah’s testimony that Bockarie said that he himself planned Operation Spare No Soul, in order to permit the RUF to negotiate the release of Foday Sankoh.<sup>6905</sup> Mallah also said that “Operation Spare No Soul”, “Operation Free Foday Sankoh” and “Operation No Living Thing” were the same operation, but that it was “the fighters” who decided to call the operation “Operation No Living Thing”.<sup>6906</sup> This is in contrast to the testimony of TF1-371 that the name Operation No Living Thing was coined by Bockarie following his conversation with the Accused who told him to capture Freetown by “all means”. However, given that Mallah did not attend the smaller meeting in which TF1-371 was told by Bockarie that he had spoken with the Accused and then announced Operation No Living Thing, the Trial Chamber does not find Mallah’s evidence to undermine the testimony of TF1-371.

3116. Karmoh Kanneh testified that at the meeting he attended, Jungle said that they should not fear this time around and that there was no force that could withstand them.<sup>6907</sup> Abu Keita testified that Bockarie said that Taylor had said that “they should be very vigilant and maintain the ground of the RUF”.<sup>6908</sup> Isaac Mongor testified that Bockarie told him that

Taylor said that in order to ensure the freeing of Foday Sankoh and others they should ensure that the ammunition would not be wasted and that the operation should be “fearful” in order to capture Freetown and hold on to power.<sup>6909</sup> TF1-367 testified that at a briefing with commanders in Kono, Issa Sesay said that this operation was “do or die”, that they should do everything they could to free Sankoh, and that “the operation should be made fearful so we should conquer the enemy. We should make the operation fearful”.<sup>6910</sup>

3117. Based on this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused told Bockarie that the operation should be “fearful” and that the RUF should use “all means” in order to pressure the Government into negotiations for the release of Foday Sankoh.

3118. The Trial Chamber notes that Kanneh testified that SAJ Musa’s disloyalty and his refusal to take orders from Bockarie was discussed in the small meeting at Bockarie’s house and that Bockarie had said that he had spoken with Gullit about the idea that SAJ Musa should be shot and killed during a military operation.<sup>6911</sup> Kanneh stated that Bockarie said that he had complained to the Accused about SAJ Musa’s disloyalty “towards the mission” and towards Bockarie’s command and the RUF.<sup>6912</sup> Kanneh also testified that after the meeting, Bockarie sent a message to SAJ Musa before the attack on Kono, asking him to attack Freetown, but Musa refused and said he would not take orders from Bockarie which resulted in a heated argument. The Trial Chamber notes that Kanneh’s testimony on Bockarie asking SAJ Musa to attack Freetown and SAJ Musa refused, and that while trying to coordinate planning with him, the RUF in Buedu was also quietly talking about having Musa killed, is direct, detailed and consistent. The Trial Chamber therefore finds Kanneh’s testimony to be both credible and reliable.

3119. In contrast, Isaac Mongor testified that Bockarie told him that in Monrovia the Accused showed Bockarie on a map the locations that the RUF and the SLAs occupied at the time, and the two discussed a plan to launch an operation in which they would capture Kono, Kenema and Joru.<sup>6913</sup> Mongor also said that during the Waterworks meeting it was agreed that Johnny Paul Koroma should speak with SAJ Musa and tell him to forget the past infighting and join hands in the military operation. Mongor testified that Koroma spoke with SAJ Musa and that SAJ Musa agreed to run the operation.<sup>6914</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that no other witnesses testified to this agreement, which is also inconsistent with Kanneh's evidence and with the Prosecution's own submissions that "it is indisputable that by October 1998 SAJ Musa was not going to cooperate with Bockarie and the RUF".<sup>6915</sup> Mongor's source of information for this communication is second-hand from an unnamed radio operator, and in light of the evidence concerning related events, the Trial Chamber considers that Mongor's testimony is inaccurate and accepts Kanneh's evidence that it was Bockarie who called SAJ Musa and that SAJ Musa refused Bockarie's request to coordinate an attack on Freetown.

3120. Based on the evidence of Karmoh Kanneh that Bockarie said that he had complained to the Accused about SAJ Musa's disloyalty and refusal to take orders from him, and on the evidence of Isaac Mongor that Bockarie and the Accused took into consideration the locations in which both the RUF and the SLAs were stationed at the time of their discussion of the plan, and that following the Waterworks meeting Bockarie contacted SAJ Musa and requested or ordered him to cooperate, the Trial Chamber finds that the possibility that SAJ Musa would participate in the execution of the plan was contemplated by Bockarie and the Accused at the time they designed the plan.

3121. Coupled with Musa's refusal to cooperate with the Waterworks plan, TF1-371's testimony that the AFRC had their own plan to invade Freetown, while the RUF had its own "in house" planning, indicates that there were two plans to attack Freetown, one made by the RUF and one made by the AFRC group led by SAJ Musa. This is consistent with Alimamy Bobson Sesay's testimony that SAJ Musa and Gullit, among others, had planned an advance towards Freetown, and started their advance already at the end of June/beginning of July 1998,<sup>6916</sup> long before the Waterworks meeting in December 1998.

3122. The Trial Chamber also recalls that it is an Adjudicated Fact that at a meeting in Koinadugu District, various AFRC commanders met with SAJ Musa to discuss the future and develop a new military strategy. The commanders agreed that the troops who had arrived from Kono District should act as an advance troop, which would establish a base in the north-western area of Sierra Leone in preparation for an attack on Freetown. Their purpose was to “restore the Sierra Leone Army”.<sup>6917</sup> It is also an Adjudicated Fact that SAJ Musa left Koinadugu District to join the advance team and prepare for an attack on Freetown in October 1998,<sup>6918</sup> meaning Musa started advancing towards Freetown before the Waterworks meeting in December 1998. Also an Adjudicated Fact is that upon Musa’s arrival in ‘Colonel Eddie Town’ in November 1998, he emphasised his disenchantment with the RUF and stressed that it was vital that his troops arrive in Freetown before the RUF.<sup>6919</sup>

3123. Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that a meeting was convened by Musa two days after the news about the execution of the 24 soldiers in Freetown, on 19 October, and that this execution was one of the reasons SAJ Musa decided to head straight to Freetown and “reinstate the army”.<sup>6920</sup> Bobson Sesay did not agree with the proposition that SAJ Musa’s goals were different from the goals of Bockarie and the RUF, which were to release Foday Sankoh, explaining that on the day of the execution of the 24 soldiers, Bockarie went on the air and said that he did not accept the executions and that “our men” will march onto Freetown, which is what SAJ Musa had also told them.<sup>6921</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Bobson Sesay is generally credible.<sup>6922</sup> However, the Trial Chamber notes that, Bobson Sesay himself stated several times that he did not know what SAJ Musa had in mind.<sup>6923</sup> In the Trial Chamber’s view, the evidence indicates that Musa’s goal in attacking Freetown was to reinstate the army while Bockarie’s goal in attacking Freetown was to release Foday Sankoh from prison.

3124. In this context, the Trial Chamber notes the Defence’s acceptance of Bobson Sesay’s testimony that SAJ Musa ordered his forces to proceed to Freetown without killing, looting or burning,<sup>6924</sup> indicating that he did not have a campaign of terror in mind, as Bockarie did. According to Kanneh, Bockarie reported to those at the small meeting held in his house that he had spoken to Gullit about the possibility of Gullit killing SAJ Musa during a military operation. This, in the Trial Chamber's view, indicates Bockarie's desire to bring the separate plan of SAJ Musa together with the plan discussed at Waterworks that SAJ Musa had rejected. Evidence was adduced suggesting that SAJ Musa was killed by Gullit during a military operation as envisioned by Bockarie's conversation.<sup>6925</sup> The Trial Chamber need not make a finding as to how SAJ Musa was killed. What is relevant to the evolution of the plan is the death of SAJ Musa on or around 23 December 1998.<sup>6926</sup>

3125. The Trial Chamber notes that both Bobson Sesay and Isaac Mongor explained the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999 as a plan of both the RUF and AFRC, as the forces who eventually invaded Freetown, led by AFRC's Gullit, could not have done so without the attacks on Kono and Makeni, which reduced the burden and weakened ECOMOG, which was stationed in those other areas.<sup>6927</sup> The Trial Chamber observes that both witnesses testified to this from their own experience of war strategy. While in retrospect these witnesses might be right with regard to the helpful impact of the RUF attacks on the AFRC advance to Freetown led by Gullit, the evidence does not establish that there was a coordinated plan in which the attacks on Kono, Makeni and the other areas were meant to weaken ECOMOG forces in Freetown and thereby aid the AFRC advance. The evidence rather shows that there were two separate plans to reach Freetown, and that while Bockarie tried to consolidate the plan with SAJ Musa, Musa refused to cooperate with Bockarie. Mongor himself agreed that in the end, the invasion of Freetown on 6 January was largely an AFRC project, and that the AFRC group who entered Freetown refused to wait for the RUF group to join them.<sup>6928</sup> Mongor's concession that there were two separate plans is consistent with the Trial Chamber's understanding that the AFRC invasion of Freetown started independently of the RUF plan detailed at the Waterworks meeting. SAJ Musa had already started his advance to Freetown by the time of the meeting, and he rejected the offer made by the AFRC/RUF group at Waterworks to coordinate operations.

3126. Based on the evidence the Trial Chamber finds that the RUF plan made by Bockarie and the Accused and launched at Waterworks, and implemented in the subsequent attacks on Kono and Makeni, was separate from the plan of SAJ Musa, despite the presence and participation of AFRC commanders at the Waterworks meeting and in the attacks that commenced thereafter.

3127. On the basis of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused and Bockarie made a plan in Monrovia, which Bockarie brought back to Buedu and shared with RUF and AFRC commanders who were to implement it. The plan brought by Bockarie after discussion with the Accused involved a two pronged attack where one flank would attack Kono and proceed to Makeni while the other flank attacked Kenema. Both flanks would then advance and capture Freetown, fulfilling their final objective of releasing their leader, Foday Sankoh. The Accused advised Bockarie to make the operation “fearful” in order to bring the Government of Sierra Leone to the negotiating table for the release of Sankoh. The commanders who attended the Waterworks meeting undertook to implement the plan, using the ammunition that Bockarie brought back with him from Monrovia.

3128. SAJ Musa, who was already operating on the basis of an independent plan to reach Freetown, refused a request from Bockarie to coordinate the operations, and SAJ Musa continued independently. Following the meeting in Monrovia, the Accused was updated by Bockarie after the Waterworks meeting in Buedu and after the recapture of Kono.

Findings

3129. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in November/December 1998 the Accused and Sam Bockarie jointly designed a two-pronged attack on Kono, Kenema and Freetown as the ultimate destination, the Accused emphasising the need to first attack Kono District.

3130. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused told Bockarie to make the operation “fearful” in order to force the Government into negotiation and free Foday Sankoh from prison and that after the Waterworks meeting, the Accused told Bockarie to use “all means” to get to Freetown in a satellite phone conversation. Subsequently, Bockarie named the operation “Operation No Living Thing”, implying that anything that stood in their way should be eliminated.

MILITARY OPERATIONSThe Implementation of the PlanSubmissions of the Parties

3131. The Prosecution submits that SAJ Musa's death led to a resumption of full coordination between Bockarie and his personnel and the forces led by Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit).<sup>6929</sup> According to the Prosecution, Gullit was a friend of Bockarie's and willing to submit to his authority.<sup>6930</sup> Moreover, the Prosecution argues, it was clear to Gullit and his comrades that their ability to take over the country to negotiate a favourable cessation of hostilities depended on allying themselves with the RUF.<sup>6931</sup> The Prosecution submits that when SAJ Musa died, Gullit established regular communication with Bockarie, and kept him informed of all developments in Freetown, as well as communicating with RUF Rambo, Superman and Issa Sesay.<sup>6932</sup>

3132. The Prosecution submits that as a result, although Gullit commanded the troops within the city of Freetown itself and the majority of commanders in Freetown were AFRC commanders, the attack on Freetown was a joint operation undertaken by AFRC and RUF forces.<sup>6933</sup> The Prosecution submits that "[a]fter establishing communication with Gullit, before the troops entered the city, Sam Bockarie went on international radio and promised that his men would enter Freetown within 72 hours".<sup>6934</sup>

3133. The Prosecution submits that the RUF provided four critical areas of support to the invasion.<sup>6935</sup> First, the Prosecution contends that Gullit and other commanders were in regular communication with Bockarie and implemented his orders during the attack, including orders that led directly to the commission of many of the atrocities.<sup>6936</sup> Second, the Prosecution contends that the RUF contributed military and operational support in the form of communications support, manpower, including the Red Lion battalion, which came with Gullit's forces from the North, RUF fighters freed from Pademba Road Prison, bodyguards of the RUF radio operators, and a force commanded by Idrissa Kamara (a.k.a. Rambo Red Goat); and 448 warnings of ECOMOG Alpha Jet attacks.<sup>6937</sup> The Prosecution submits that the force attacking Freetown was composed of “important RUF elements, including radio operators King Perry and Alfred Brown, who had their own RUF bodyguards, and RUF and Liberian fighters in the Red Lion battalion”.<sup>6938</sup> Third, it alleges that the RUF capture of major ECOMOG bases and weaponry at Koidu and Makeni meant that Gullit’s troops could enter Freetown knowing that they would not be trapped by larger ECOMOG forces coming from Makeni or other areas brought under AFRC/RUF control. Further, the joint force was now in a position to move to block ECOMOG reinforcements likely to be sent from Guinea, Lungi and Port Loko in response to an attack on Freetown”.<sup>6939</sup> Fourth, the Prosecution submits that even though the majority of RUF forces never successfully entered Freetown, that the “RUF attacks on ECOMOG forces at strategic locations outside the city affected the battle inside”.<sup>6940</sup>

3135. The Defence concedes that communication between Gullit and Bockarie resumed after Musa’s death at Benguema when Gullit took over leadership of the AFRC group that was advancing on Freetown.<sup>6943</sup> However, the Defence denies that the Freetown invasion was a joint RUF and AFRC operation.<sup>6944</sup> It contends that the RUF was not involved in the Freetown attack and that “it was renegade elements of the Sierra Leone Army who, in their anger and frenzy after their expulsion from Freetown by Nigerian-led interventionist forces, turned their bitterness on the civilian population”.<sup>6945</sup>

3136. The Defence submits that Bockarie’s radio operators did not know Gullit’s group entered Freetown until they heard it from the BBC and Gullit only contacted Bockarie because the AFRC troops ran into “trouble and required assistance” and requested reinforcements. The Defence submits that the request from Gullit was unexpected and that Gullit and Bockarie argued.<sup>6946</sup> The Defence contends that their lack of coordination is illustrated by the fact that Bockarie sent Gullit a message while Gullit was in Waterloo telling him to wait for reinforcements, Gullit did not agree and rather than waiting, he went ahead and entered Freetown.<sup>6947</sup> The Defence denies that the RUF had control over the AFRC forces who attacked Freetown<sup>6948</sup> and that Gullit was following orders from Bockarie during the Freetown invasion.<sup>6949</sup>

3137. In relation to the alleged support provided by Bockarie, while the Defence acknowledges that Bockarie told Gullit that the RUF was sending reinforcements and that he had instructed Rambo, who was already in Waterloo, to link up with them,<sup>6950</sup> RUF fighters did not get any closer to Freetown than Waterloo.<sup>6951</sup> The Defence points to the evidence of TF1-516 to submit that the RUF gave only advice in support of the fighters in Freetown,<sup>6952</sup> and points to evidence that one of the reasons that the AFRC and the RUF fell out at Waterloo after the invasion was because the AFRC was bitter that the RUF had not provided assistance while it was under siege in Freetown.<sup>6953</sup> The Defence contends that Prosecution evidence that the military successes of the AFRC resulting in its takeover of Freetown were due to the RUF’s attacks outside the city is opinion evidence, contradicted by that of Issa

3138. Finally, the Defence submits that while there is some evidence of some atrocities in Njaima Nimikoro in addition to some incidents of looting, that there is “no overwhelming evidence of wide scale atrocities in the places the RUF attacked on the way towards Freetown, such as Kono, Makeni, Lunsar, Port Loko etc”.<sup>6956</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay

3139. Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay, an AFRC member and officer,<sup>6957</sup> testified that when they arrived back from the operation in Koidu Geiya, Gullit had arrived. Gullit told them that Sam Bockarie had released him from Kailahun because he had told Bockarie that he could settle the disputes that had arisen in Kono when Morris Kallon shot two SLAs in around June 1998.<sup>6958</sup> From Masingbi Road, the troops moved to Five-Five Spot where Gullit held a meeting in which he briefed the troops about the diamonds that were taken from him by Bockarie and that Bockarie had released him with some logistics to come and advise the two sides. Gullit advised that because ECOMOG were piling pressure on the Kono troops, they should withdraw to Tombodu and from there withdraw immediately to Koinadugu District where SAJ Musa was based in Mongo Bendugu. The meeting was attended by Ibrahim Bazzy, Hassan Papa Bangura and other commanders, who briefed the troops on what had occurred.<sup>6959</sup> The witness travelled to Tombodu<sup>6960</sup> and then with Gullit to Mansofinia in Koinadugu District,<sup>6961</sup> from where they travelled to SAJ Musa’s position in Mongo Bendugu.<sup>6962</sup>

3140. When they arrived in Mongo Bendugu, the witness attended a closed-door meeting with inter alia Gullit and SAJ Musa at which Gullit explained to SAJ Musa about the treatment he had received in Kailahun, and how Bockarie had taken his diamonds. Gullit said that he was not very happy with that so now he wanted SAJ Musa to advise him on the next plan. SAJ Musa responded that Brigadier Mani had gone ahead to the north to look for a base to prepare for the advancement to Freetown and that he wanted Gullit to move with the troop that would be joined by Five-Five to find Brigadier Mani, establish an advance base and prepare for the attack on Freetown. Bobson Sesay explained that there was no “front line troop” in the North at that time and SAJ Musa wanted a strong troop there in preparation for an attack on Freetown. SAJ Musa said that once the base was established, it would later receive reinforcement to move to Freetown.<sup>6963</sup>

3141. Bobson Sesay testified that while they were based in Rosos, the troops undertook operations in, inter alia, Gbomsamba in September/October 1998. Gullit called the operation commanders, military supervisors and company commanders, saying that they had been too quiet recently and therefore needed to “hit a town” to show that they were not idling and that he had information that ECOMOG forces were based in Gbomsamba. Because they had been out of communication, Gullit said he wanted the brothers, the RUF and SLA, in Koinadugu, Kailahun and all the bases around Kono to know that they were still attacking. The witness explained that they had been out of communication for some time because their communications man had run away so Gullit wanted the other groups to hear about them through the international media.<sup>6964</sup>

well. Bockarie said that Gullit would “get the full support at whatever time he needed”. Whatever assistance Gullit needed, he should contact Bockarie and he would follow up.<sup>6965</sup>

3143. Around the time that SAJ Musa called Gullit to say that he was leaving Koinadugu and heading towards Colonel Eddie Town because he had clashed with Superman, Gullit also communicated with Bockarie in Kailahun to brief him about his military operations in Kukuna and Mange Bureh. The witness knew this because, for instance, after the Kukuna operation, he saw Gullit mount the radio set and call Bockarie. The witness stated that this was the only radio communication between Gullit and Bockarie during which he was present. According to Bobson Sesay, Gullit also called SAJ Musa to tell him about the latest developments, being the attack on Kukuna. The witness explained that whenever they had an operation, Bockarie was the first person Gullit called before informing SAJ Musa. After the Kukuna attack, Gullit also contacted Issa Sesay who, based on their monitoring appeared to be in the Kailahun axis to explain to him about the “activities” they had undertaken.<sup>6966</sup>

3144. The witness explained that from the monitoring they were doing then, they knew that RUF Rambo, Isaac Mongor, Peter Vandi and others were in and around the Kono axis. Bobson Sesay said that the radio men always monitored the various communications that went on and “presented this monitoring” to him. He presented the information to the commander, who would pass it on to the operation commander. Hence they knew exactly what was going on in all the areas occupied by the “junta troops”, by which he meant the RUF and SLA. The information would also be entered in a logbook.<sup>6967</sup> The witness said he knew this because he was with the operation commander and whenever communications came, either through monitoring or when the radio man would send a runner, it was shared with the commander who would then pass it on to the operation commander.<sup>6968</sup>

3145. Around “20-something” December 1998, SAJ Musa ordered attacks on Magbuntoso (Mile 38) followed by successful operations on RDF (Rapid Deployment Force, a base settled by the NRPC) and Mamamah in Koya Rural District.<sup>6969</sup> Just after the troops had based at Mamamah, they heard on the international media radio Bockarie announcing that AFRC and RUF joint force had captured the strategic military base of RDF and were heading to Freetown, while other AFRC/RUF troops were advancing from the rear towards Kono and Daru. Bockarie said the AFRC/RUF forces were “moving from all angles”.<sup>6970</sup> The witness recalled that following that announcement, SAJ Musa was angry with Alfred Brown, one of the RUF radio operators, for giving information to Bockarie. Musa said that he would not subject himself to the control of Bockarie, who was an SBU. Musa said that he was a trained military man whereas Bockarie was not. Now that Musa was advancing towards Freetown, he said he did not want Bockarie controlling him. The main aim was to advance and capture Freetown and there was no need to take command from Bockarie until he had done that.<sup>6971</sup>

3146. Bobson Sesay testified that, after SAJ Musa’s death, he and others left for Macdonald Hill where they met Basky, Foday Bah Marah and Junior Lion, leaving behind Gullit, Bazzy, Bomb Blast and others. Later, they met Gullit dressed in SAJ Musa’s helmet and uniform, who informed them that SAJ Musa was buried at Koba Water. Bobson Sesay stated that “[a]utomatically we all recognised him as the commander, so he was in full control of the troops now”.<sup>6972</sup> Gullit ordered the troops to attack York at the peninsular but were unsuccessful and they retreated to their base at in Benguema.<sup>6973</sup>

3147. Bobson Sesay testified that when the troops returned from York, Gullit mounted a radio set and communicated to Bockarie that the troops were prepared to advance to Freetown but needed more reinforcement to capture Freetown.<sup>6974</sup> Bobson Sesay, as well as most of the senior commanders, were present when Gullit made the communication.<sup>6975</sup> Bockarie assured him that Issa Sesay and Denis Mingo from Kono and Makeni would join them in the advance on Freetown.<sup>6976</sup> Bobson Sesay recalled that while Bockarie said the reinforcements were on their way, Bockarie also said that there were “targeted areas that they needed to clear up” first in the sense of weakening ECOMOG.<sup>6977</sup> Bobson Sesay explained:

Well, as I earlier said, it was an operation that was planned. The RUF, SLAs who were in the eastern part around that Kono area moved, those of us who were in the north moved and those of us in that Kailahun-Daru axis also moved. So whilst we were attacking they were simultaneously attacking. So it was a strategy that we used so that the ECOMOG would not reinforce each other in any other position. So those who were in Kono would not reinforce those in Makeni. Those who were in Daru would not reinforce those who were in Kenema. Those who were within Benguema would not be able to reinforce because we had destabilised them in Freetown. So this was the strategy that we used and this was what Bockarie was telling Gullit. He said now that the men were pushing to ensure that they weakened ECOMOG they would come and reinforce us later and we will all bulldoze our way to Freetown.<sup>6978</sup>

3148. Bockarie explained that RUF commanders Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon, Isaac Mongor, Akim Turray and RUF Rambo had already moved from Gandorhun to capture Kono.<sup>6979</sup> He also said other troops had left from Kailahun to move to the Daru axis and Segbwema to weaken the ECOMOG strategic bases so that ECOMOG troops based there would be unable to send reinforcements to Freetown. The plan was that the troops led by Gullit, along with the reinforcements sent by Bockarie, would push ahead and enter Freetown.<sup>6980</sup>

3149. Bobson Sesay testified that after this communication, the troops led by Gullit moved to Hastings Hill around Freetown Highway as they waited for reinforcement. Gullit communicated with Issa Sesay. The witness was present during this communication. Sesay briefed Gullit that his troops had captured Kono and were heading towards Makeni and were on course “to weaken the ECOMOG forces so that they can reinforce [...] Gullit so that all of us can enter Freetown”. Gullit responded that he would still wait for the reinforcement.<sup>6981</sup> The witness heard over international media that day that the AFRC/RUF had captured Kono and were moving towards Makeni. Gullit also contacted Superman, who affirmed that they were in Bumbuna with Brigadier Mani and were advancing in a two-pronged attack towards Binkolo to capture Makeni<sup>6982</sup> while Morris Kallon was going through Mototoka to Makeni.<sup>6983</sup> Gullit's brigade had a radio monitoring set that was monitoring all areas of the AFRC/RUF advance.<sup>6984</sup>

3150. Subsequently, Bobson Sesay testified that Gullit's fighters moved to unsuccessfully attack Hastings, having seen ECOMOG helicopters bringing reinforcements there.<sup>6985</sup> After that Gullit said the troops should prepare to advance towards Jui and Allen Town. On 3 January 1999, the troops captured Hastings, and on 4 January 1999 the troops captured Jui and Allen Town, establishing a temporary base at the latter.<sup>6986</sup> They were in Allen Town until 5 January 1999.<sup>6987</sup> Around 1.00am on 6 January 1999, Gullit called all the battalion commanders at Allen Town and addressed the troops, stating that they were about to enter Freetown and ordering the troops to open the central prisons, ensuring that Foday Sankoh and other political detainees were released and that persons opposing the RUF and SLA forces should be killed.<sup>6988</sup> At this stage, Gullit's troops numbered 1,000 and were well-armed.<sup>6989</sup> From Allen Town, the troops moved to Calaba Town, Brewery, and then went through Wellington Old Road and New Freetown-Waterloo road into Freetown.<sup>6990</sup>

3151. Bobson Sesay stated that two groups of fighters moved to various locations within Freetown as they advanced towards the State House, burning 50 vehicles at Old Road, the Eastern Police and two police officers.<sup>6991</sup> One group advanced from Goderich Street to the Library around the State House towards Tower Hill while another advanced from Cotton Tree and captured the State House. This occurred around 6.00am on 6 January 1999.<sup>6992</sup>

3152. Bobson Sesay stated that the first thing Gullit did when they entered the State House was to set up the radio set and, in the witness's presence, call Bockarie and other commanders to inform them that he had entered Freetown and "was still waiting for them to reinforce him so that he would be able to capture the military barracks". Bockarie responded that "there was now preparation under way and that as [...] Issa and Superman have captured Makeni and that they were now pressing towards where we were, that is Freetown, to reinforce us”.<sup>6993</sup> Gullit also called Issa Sesay and Superman when he captured the State House. These calls also took place in Bobson Sesay’s presence.<sup>6994</sup>

3153. After the capture of the State House, the forces broke into Pademba Road Prison, where they released around 3,500 SLA and RUF members and their supporters, including Steve Bio and Gibril Massaquoi and lawyers and politicians including the former President Joseph Saidu Momoh.<sup>6995</sup> The witness later heard from Gullit that the lawyers and politicians among the released prisoners were taken by RUF Rambo and Issa Sesay to Makeni for security reasons.<sup>6996</sup>

3154. Bobson Sesay stated that when he returned to the State House, he heard on international media Bockarie announcing that his troops led by Gullit had ousted the government of Ahmad Tejan Kabbah, released prisoners from Pademba Road Prison and were based at the State House.<sup>6997</sup> The same day Five-Five made a similar announcement on the national radio and said the troop led by Gullit had overthrown the SLPP government and was in full control of the city, urging civilians to comply with their rules. The brigade administrator<sup>6998</sup> FAT Sesay also made an announcement that day over international media confirming that he was based at State House, “that the commander that led the troop to Freetown was Tamba Alex Brima and that State House was under their full control and that he was asking that all military personnel should surrender”.<sup>6999</sup>

3155. Bobson Sesay explained that at the State House, Gullit was the overall commander of the troops, but reported to Bockarie. Bazy, the Deputy Commander, Five-Five, Bomb Blast, Woyoh and others were all based at the State House.<sup>7000</sup> The troops had captured some Nigerian ECOMOG, who were executed on Gullit’s orders at the back of the State House.<sup>7001</sup> The troops remained in Freetown for around three and a half weeks.<sup>7002</sup> In the second week of January, the troops in Freetown received news that the ECOMOG forces were advancing towards the State House.<sup>7003</sup>

3156. During the second week, while the troops were at the State House, RUF Rambo also communicated to Gullit that he was preparing reinforcements to join Gullit because of the threat Gullit was facing from ECOMOG. RUF Rambo stated that the SLA Rambo, also known as Rambo Red Goat, was advancing together with Superman and others towards Freetown.<sup>7004</sup> RUF Rambo explained that he had received the order to send these reinforcements from Bockarie.<sup>7005</sup> The witness was present at this conversation.<sup>7006</sup> The witness explained that in the conversation RUF Rambo stated that he had moved with Issa Sesay and SLA Rambo as far as Hastings, but added that the reinforcements had some fear as they did not believe that SAJ Musa was dead.<sup>7007</sup> However, Bobson Sesay noted that despite this fear, some men, led by Rambo Red Goat, were sent to join Gullit's troops in Freetown.<sup>7008</sup>

3157. Bobson Sesay testified that Rambo Red Goat was with Superman's group in Koinadugu. Although he had sided with SAJ Musa during his dispute with Superman, Red Goat later decided to stay with Superman and went with Superman to capture Makeni. SAJ Musa made the fact of Red Goat staying behind known to the forces at Colonel Eddie Town.<sup>7009</sup>

3158. While waiting for these reinforcements, due to ECOMOG attacks at the State House, the troops retreated to the Eastern Police where they heard that the government had announced a ceasefire.<sup>7010</sup>

3159. Some time before the third week of January, Gullit appointed the witness and Colonel Eddie to receive Idrissa Kamara (a.k.a. Rambo Red Goat), who came with 30 RUF fighters and 20 SLA as reinforcements from Allen Town.<sup>7011</sup>

3160. The whole troop then moved to Ferry Junction, and later recaptured the State House.<sup>7012</sup> The troops did not hold the State House for a long time. At some point after this, the witness heard Bockarie on the BBC stating that he was not ready for any peace or ceasefire that the government wanted to establish and was giving an order to Gullit to start burning strategic positions in Freetown and to capture civilians.<sup>7013</sup> After that announcement Bockarie called Gullit on the radio to instruct him to burn Freetown and other strategic areas. This communication was made at the State House after its recapture in the presence of the witness. Gullit responded: “Yes, sir, I will do according to your wish. Just as you have given me order, I will also order the men now to start the operation to burn down and capture people in Freetown”.<sup>7014</sup> In the presence of the witness and others, Gullit ordered senior commanders to distribute fuel as they burnt areas in Freetown. Gullit then withdrew to the troop base in PWD, Ferry Junction area.<sup>7015</sup>

3161. At the same time, ECOMOG re-attacked the troops at the State House and the troops, including Rambo Red Goat and the Red Lion battalion, began withdrawing from Freetown.<sup>7016</sup> A group of fighters, including Gullit and Bazy, went to Fourah Bay, where they burnt property and killed civilians.<sup>7017</sup> These troops then attacked Ugun area where Five-Five ordered amputations.<sup>7018</sup> These troops included Rambo Red Goat and a female fighter known as Adama Cut Hand.<sup>7019</sup>

3162. Of the rebel forces that were in Freetown, Bobson Sesay distinguished between the “brigade”, which comprised civilian members of the rebels, and the “fighting force” the fighters who formed the attacking component of the group.<sup>7020</sup> During the withdrawal, Gullit moved with the brigade towards Shell Old Road while the fighting force remained behind in Freetown. The witness was part of the fighting force left behind, as was Rambo Red Goat and the former NPFL fighters who came to reinforce Gullit.<sup>7021</sup> Some time after Gullit left with the Brigade, the fighting force also withdrew to Mental Home, Shell Old Road area.<sup>7022</sup> Gullit ordered the fighting force to attack ECOMOG forces as it advanced to Allen Town. The troops burnt houses, captured civilians while others were killed as they moved from Mental Home to Kissy Mess Mess, Approved School, Brewery and Calaba Town until Allen Town where they were based.<sup>7023</sup>

3163. Bobson Sesay explained that when he got to Allen Town, Hassan Papa Bangura stated that the troops should wait for further instruction from Gullit, so they spent about two days around Allen Town. Gullit notified them that he had reached Benguema with the civilian brigade, and that reinforcements were coming to join them at Jui.<sup>7024</sup> No reinforcements arrived, and due to increasing ECOMOG attacks, the forces at Jui decided to take the bypass to the Grafton Hastings jungle towards Benguema. On their way, Gullit called them and warned that the troops at Hastings and Waterloo, commanded by Issa Sesay and Superman, were confiscating valuables from the troops retreating from Freetown because they felt that “at least those of us who were retreating, we should share with them”.<sup>7025</sup> At Benguema, the witness met Five-Five and Gullit. Five-Five requested that the retreating troops surrender cash, diamonds and other valuables to Gullit, and the troops did so.<sup>7026</sup>

3164. Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon, RUF Rambo and RUF/SLA fighters then joined them at Benguema and they held a meeting at which Issa Sesay informed them of the instructions from Bockarie to arrest Superman and send him to Kailahun. After this meeting, in the presence of Gullit, Five-Five, Superman, RUF Rambo, Rambo Red Goat and O-Five, Issa Sesay then planned an operation to recapture Freetown by using Tombo axis instead of the Freetown-Waterloo highway, where ECOMOG forces were concentrated. Sesay told them that he would bring ammunitions from Makeni so they could advance to Freetown.<sup>7027</sup> The commanders said that some men should go ahead as an advance team to settle a base at Macdonald village, and the witness was chosen to command that mission with “heavy manpower”.<sup>7028</sup>

3165. Bobson Sesay led some troops to Macdonald. The witness testified that later Issa Sesay distributed ammunitions to the fighters who reinforced the troops at Macdonald and they advanced towards Tombo axis.<sup>7029</sup>

3166. Around mid-February 1999, as instructed by Five-Five, Superman, Bomb Blast, RUF Rambo, Five-Five, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Med Bajehjeh and Rambo Red Goat bombarded Tombo village with a support propelled grenade (SPG) and were repelled by ECOMOG troops which led to the retreat to Macdonald.<sup>7030</sup> Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon and others moved to Waterloo while Five-Five, the witness, Bomb Blast and others moved to Benguema barracks where they spent a month.<sup>7031</sup>

3167. On cross-examination, Bobson Sesay was questioned about prior statements in which he stated that SAJ Musa had cited the execution of 24 members of the AFRC on 19 October 1998,<sup>7032</sup> and the need to reinstate the army as reasons to go to Freetown.<sup>7033</sup> Bobson Sesay explained that the execution of 24 SLA soldiers, the desire to reinstate the army, and the desire to release the RUF and AFRC political detainees at Pademba Road Prison were all factors that led to the invasion of Freetown by SAJ Musa’s troops.<sup>7034</sup>

3168. On cooperation between the AFRC and RUF in re-attacking Freetown, Bobson Sesay stated that at Benguema there was cordiality between the RUF and the AFRC because they were able to organise to re-attack. He also noted that Issa Sesay “had command over

3170. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>7037</sup> testified that, around a week after Johnny Paul Koroma and Issa Sesay arrived in Buedu, Koroma met with Bockarie and transmitted a radio message for all AFRC, RUF and STF saying that because he did not “understand jungle exercise”, he was asking all the AFRC and RUF to take command from Bockarie and that, from that date, Bockarie should be leader for the movement.<sup>7038</sup> In response to the order, a group, comprising Gullit, Five-Five, Bazzy, Papa and Junior Lion, who were not happy with the order “went and had their own area that was far from Kono”.<sup>7039</sup> Kamara later testified that they moved to Rosos in Bombali District when this incident occurred.<sup>7040</sup> Once they had established themselves at Rosos, Gullit contacted SAJ Musa who informed Bockarie that they were there.<sup>7041</sup>

3171. Kamara also testified that, in accordance with the plan developed in Buedu,<sup>7042</sup> he and radio operator Alfred Brown moved from Superman Ground to Koinadugu District together with others to facilitate effective radio communication in Rosos. Kamara and Brown were first sent to Koinadugu District to join SAJ Musa and Superman so that they could “prepare [Kamara and Brown] with equipment to join Gullit at “Rosos, Colonel Eddie

Ground". Kamara spent about a week in Koinadugu before moving on to Rosos on 1 September 1998.<sup>7043</sup>

3172. Kamara testified that they took two radio sets and three operators from Koinadugu to Rosos. When they arrived, they condemned the radio in Rosos because it was not good, reset one they had brought with them and from that point on, this radio was used to communicate from Rosos to all the other RUF stations.<sup>7044</sup> Kamara explained that, up to that point, the ground at Rosos did not possess the RUF radio code. By bringing the code, Brown and Kamara rectified the "major problem" with communications that had existed with Rosos previously.<sup>7045</sup> Kamara testified that at that time, they would monitor and write down any communications that were happening in Buedu but they did not have any other "contact outside" at that time.<sup>7046</sup>

3173. The witness testified that he was aware of what was going on with the RUF operations through listening to the communications. They would be informed of any movements Bockarie made from Buedu to Liberia or anything he brought back.<sup>7047</sup>

3174. Kamara testified that SAJ Musa arrived in Rosos around November 1998 after sending a radio message to say he had fallen out with Superman. The witness said that although he did not receive this message personally because he was not operating, he would still go in the morning to sit with the other operators who were working. Whenever they received a message, Kamara said he needed to see it before it went to the commander.<sup>7048</sup>

3175. When SAJ Musa arrived, he immediately went to the meeting ground and said that as of that day, he was no longer either an AFRC or an RUF. Musa said that he had come to Gullit for them to form their own movement that would lead to success and that Gullit should no longer communicate with anybody. He said he knew now to whom he would communicate and then ensured that no RUF operator operated the radio. He did this by

Kamara replied "The patrol lasted for 21 days". keeping them far away from the radio and decreed that all radio materials were to be reported to him and that no radio communication should be sent anywhere except from his house. Musa also gave a warning letter to all RUF personnel. Kamara said that he kept his right through the time they were in Freetown.<sup>7049</sup>

3176. Kamara testified that around 25 December 1998, they attacked and captured Benguema where SAJ Musa died.<sup>7050</sup> Kamara testified that they rested in the forest for the day. Without SAJ Musa, Gullit was in charge. He and other men said that when SAJ Musa had arrived, they had been working together and exchanging information with the RUF but Musa had told them to have nothing to do with the RUF. They said that now that Musa had died, they should call Bockarie and tell him that they had moved beyond Benguema to Waterloo and sought his advice. According to Kamara, they decided that “[w]hatever he said we would tell him to accept, so that we would work together again”, although they would not “tell him directly” about the death of SAJ Musa at that time.<sup>7051</sup> Some people were in favour of contacting Bockarie, while others were not.<sup>7052</sup>

3177. Initially Gullit called Bockarie but he did not respond. Then Gullit called Alfred Brown, the supervisor, and all the RUF who had been told not to communicate and Brown ordered the witness to call Bockarie. This time Bockarie came on the radio, saying “Perry, what happened? I have been calling you and I have not been getting any information from you? You were the radio operator who we had sent at that place”. Kamara said that he responded saying that that was an issue to be addressed by Gullit and handed the mic over to him. Gullit then informed Bockarie that he was seeking advice. Bockarie responded saying, “How can I give you advice when, in the first place, when you were getting ready to take off you did not inform me? Even when you were operating you had the radio men, you had radios, but nobody informed me”. Gullit repeated his request for advice.<sup>7053</sup> Bockarie asked Gullit to wait for Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Superman and Rambo to join him before entering Freetown. These commanders had at that time passed Lunsar and were moving to Masiaka.<sup>7054</sup> Gullit stated that he had enough ammunition, and did not need to wait for reinforcements to bring ammunition. Bockarie replied “No, that is not the reason. It is for the command structure. It will be strong for you”.<sup>7055</sup>

3178. Initially, when Kamara was ordered by Gullit to contact Bockarie he was reluctant to do so as SAJ Musa had threatened to kill him if any contact with Bockarie was made. However, Gullit told Kamara that he was safe as SAJ Musa was dead.<sup>7056</sup> When Kamara contacted Bockarie, Bockarie had no idea what Gullit’s troops were doing except from what he heard from commercial radio.<sup>7057</sup>

3179. Gullit then summoned a short meeting to discuss the proposal with other AFRC officers. At the meeting, it was decided by majority that they should not wait for Bockarie’s reinforcements, and “whenever the other groups came they would join us”.<sup>7058</sup> Subsequently, Gullit’s groups attacked Hastings but were not able to capture York. They were able to capture some ammunition and returned.<sup>7059</sup>

3180. Kamara affirmed that on the way from Rosos to Freetown, when SAJ Musa was still alive, he was not aware of any communication between SAJ Musa’s group and other forces moving towards Freetown. Communication only began after SAJ Musa’s death.<sup>7060</sup>

3181. According to Kamara, on 6 January 1999, the fighters entered Freetown at night and attacked until daybreak. As they entered, there was heaving fighting and the fighters moved from the main highway in Waterloo to Freetown and from Kossoh Town entered the eastern part of Freetown.<sup>7061</sup> Before attacking Freetown, the fighters were divided into groups and instructed to attack Ferry Junction, Upgun, State House, National Stadium and another group was to enter Pademba Road. Kamara was assigned to the group of fighters to go to Pademba Road. This group was to release Foday Sankoh and other political detainees who were supporters of AFRC/RUF, including former president J S Momoh, the former RUF spokesman Gibril Massaquoi, and Steve Bio.<sup>7062</sup> When the fighters who had been imprisoned in Pademba Road were released, they were “even more angry than us” and engaged in more killing, burning, and amputation, because “they had been jailed for life”.<sup>7063</sup> Kamara explained that AFRC, RUF and STF troops were present in Freetown.<sup>7064</sup>

3182. Kamara stated that Massaquoi’s role after he was released was to contribute to the organisation of fighters and that he was involved in organisational meetings held by Gullit, Bazy, Five-Five and others.<sup>7065</sup> Massaquoi reported on the military situation and meetings held in Freetown to Sam Bockarie in Buedu. Kamara did not know whether Sam Bockarie ever gave any orders to Massaquoi.<sup>7066</sup>

3183. Kamara testified that in order to enable communications when the troops first entered Freetown, he entered one of the NGO offices and took one Yeasu radio which he used to update Bockarie concerning all of the events since SAJ Musa moved to Rosos to the time they entered Freetown. He noted that from this radio, Alfred Brown and Gibril Massaquoi used to send information about events in Freetown.<sup>7067</sup>

3184. Kamara explained that as the “authorities” became settled at the State House, they were able to communicate with Sam Bockarie. Kamara testified that when Gullit told Bockarie that they had been able to capture State House, National Stadium and Pademba Road Prison, in response, Bockarie “urged” Gullit to “do as a military man” and provide security for the persons released from Pademba Road. According to Kamara, Gullit used to transmit messages to Bockarie concerning “whatever activities that was going on”.<sup>7068</sup> Kamara monitored conversations between Bockarie and Gullit and recorded the relevant information in a logbook. Further, if Gullit omitted any details it was Kamara’s job to inform Bockarie.<sup>7069</sup>

3185. Kamara further testified that as Bockarie told Gullit that there was no prison for ECOMOG, any captured ECOMOG soldiers should be killed. Kamara stated that captured fighters were executed under the cotton tree near State House.<sup>7070</sup>

3186. Kamara testified that while they were occupying State House as part of the Freetown attack, ECOMOG was bombarding State House from the air, and they would receive “448” warnings over the radio from Buedu every two hours.<sup>7071</sup>

3187. Kamara stated that Gullit’s troops only occupied State House for about a day or two before they had to retreat. During this period, they would send situation reports to Bockarie daily, “every morning, every afternoon, every evening”, concerning the threat posed by ECOMOG. Bockarie would then give the troops in Freetown instructions, such as: “Make that area fearful. Go and destroy Kissy Terminal. [...] Go and set road blocks at this and that place; places that are government owned”.<sup>7072</sup> Kamara explained:

Well, what I knew if before we entered Freetown if we had a message that we should make an area fearful it was to destroy, kill, amputate, destroy bridges, set road blocks. That was the meaning of making an area fearful. And in that message he talked about some areas as well and it was not just one message. I spoke about Kissy, Kissy Road, Kissy Terminal and the ferry and some other important areas.<sup>7073</sup>

3188. Kamara also testified that Bockarie gave specific instructions to attack certain areas, such as the Kissy Terminal refinery, which was burnt.<sup>7074</sup> Kamara stated that these atrocities did not stop ECOMOG from attacking. Bockarie told the troops to make the area fearful because “the international body would intervene and maybe [...] start calling for peace talks”.<sup>7075</sup>

3189. Kamara stated that, confronted with ECOMOG’s greater firepower, Gullit’s troops retreated, first to Ugun turntable and then to Shell Road.<sup>7076</sup> Kamara testified that in reaction to this, Bockarie sent a message that the troops should move to Waterloo and join fighters led by Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) and RUF Rambo

in Waterloo.<sup>7077</sup> The group in Waterloo comprised AFRC, RUF and some STF troops.<sup>7078</sup> Bockarie stated that the troops at Waterloo had come as reinforcements for Gullit's troops; their intention was to enter Freetown.<sup>7079</sup> Kamara believed that if these reinforcements had met Gullit outside Freetown before 6 January 1999, they would have entered Freetown together.<sup>7080</sup> According to Kamara, in order to "clear the route" for the troops led by Kallon and Sesay to enter Freetown, Gullit's men had to attack Kossoh Town with Superman's group.<sup>7081</sup> However, Gullit did not send troops to Kossoh Town.<sup>7082</sup>

3190. The troops waiting at Waterloo did attack Kossoh Town, but were unable to capture it. Among that group they had an AFRC "strong fighter" known as Rambo Red Goat. He was able to gather a group of fifteen fighters and bypass ECOMOG to join Kamara's group and the troops in Freetown at Kissy Road. Rambo Red Goat informed the fighters in Freetown that the Waterloo group was unsuccessful in taking Kossoh Town.<sup>7083</sup> The day that this group arrived, Gullit passed an order to burn everything that the troops could not carry in preparation for retreat.<sup>7084</sup> Rambo Red Goat stated that he had not entered Freetown simply to retreat and said he would stay in Freetown. Red Goat, Striker, the Red Lion Battalion Commander along with other troops under Gullit's command stayed in Freetown while others, including the witness, went to Waterloo to reorganise.<sup>7085</sup> There were more than 4,000 rebels in Freetown at that stage, although most of them were unarmed, especially those who had been released from Pademba Road Prison. The witness did not recall how many men stayed in Freetown, although it was a sizeable number.<sup>7086</sup>

3191. The decision to allow Rambo Red Goat, Striker and the "manpower" with them to stay in Freetown was discussed between Bockarie and Gullit.<sup>7087</sup> Bockarie told Gullit that he believed Gullit should leave Freetown but should "make the area fearful" until they came back and reorganised themselves. He also instructed Gullit to bring the prominent prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison to Waterloo and dispatch them to Bockarie. Bockarie stated “and then we will re-organise and regain Freetown”.<sup>7088</sup> Gullit ordered Red Goat to make the area fearful after leaving him in charge of Freetown.<sup>7089</sup> The group that had remained in Freetown did not have a radio but the witness heard on commercial radio that “these rebels” were amputating and killing civilians, raping, and burning houses. They eventually retreated from Freetown and joined other men in Waterloo.<sup>7090</sup>

3192. Kamara believed that he spent almost two weeks in Freetown before leaving for Waterloo.<sup>7091</sup> O-Five was among the group that returned to Waterloo.<sup>7092</sup>

3193. The purpose of returning to Waterloo was to regroup and re-attack Freetown.<sup>7093</sup> After Gullit’s contingent arrived at Waterloo, commanders Issa Sesay, Denis Mingo, Morris Kallon, and RUF Rambo were also there. Kamara stated that at Waterloo “they held a meeting and we were able to reorganise to re-attack Kossoh Town and we attacked twice but we couldn’t make it”.<sup>7094</sup> During their time at Waterloo, Gullit also sent the prisoners released from Pademba Road directly to Makeni.<sup>7095</sup> Sam Bockarie requested that one of the prisoners, Hilton Fyle, a radio broadcaster be taken by Issa Sesay to Buedu. After the prisoners were released they were considered part of the RUF.<sup>7096</sup>

3194. Gullit’s troops were at Waterloo for some time during which ECOMOG intensified their attack on Rambo Red Goat in Freetown, and also commenced attacking the contingents at Waterloo.<sup>7097</sup> Gullit’s contingent left Waterloo and retreated to Four Mile, Six Mile, up to Songo Junction going towards Masiaka. After some days, Rambo Red Goat withdrew all his troops from Freetown.<sup>7098</sup> The witness himself made his way to Masiaka, Makeni and then later Lunsar where he established himself with Superman.<sup>7099</sup> Rambo Red Goat had also retreated to join “the other men” in Waterloo. The troops at Waterloo then went to Four Mile and Six Mile, and later came “and spread out” at Masiaka.<sup>7100</sup> Rather than using the main road when they retreated from Freetown, Rambo Red Goat and his troops travelled through the bush to Waterloo.<sup>7101</sup> On cross-examination, Kamara testified that he did not believe that the decision of the majority of the Gullit troops not to follow Bockarie’s instructions for the troops to stay in Waterloo to wait for the reinforcement was disobedience to Bockarie per se. Gullit exercised his discretion and judgement as to whether those reinforcements were necessary. Kamara pointed out that Gullit duly reported to Bockarie on capturing the State House.<sup>7102</sup> Kamara disagreed with the suggestion of Defence counsel that Bockarie was dissatisfied with the troops entering Freetown without waiting.<sup>7103</sup>

3195. The witness confirmed a prior statement in which he had stated that he was monitoring the radio when Superman called Bockarie in Buedu to inform him that he was now in Waterloo and that Bockarie should instruct Gullit to send a team from Freetown to receive his reinforcements. In that prior statement, Kamara stated that this did not occur as Gullit was unable to maintain sufficient command and control. Kamara explained that Gullit was unable to assemble men to receive the reinforcements because his forces was scattered across the city.<sup>7104</sup>

3196. Witness Isaac Mongor, an RUF commander,<sup>7105</sup> testified that he knew Gullit from the time the RUF joined the AFRC in Freetown.<sup>7106</sup> During the Junta period Gullit was in charge of mining in Kono. When the troops were pulling out from Freetown, Gullit moved from Kono to Buedu.<sup>7107</sup> Although he was not in Buedu<sup>7108</sup> while Gullit and Bockarie were both there, he heard from Gullit that he and Bockarie had a cordial relationship. Mongor stated that Gullit had plans to go to SAJ Musa and convince him to come to Buedu to talk as he told Bockarie that SAJ Musa was his “own SLA brother”. So Gullit came back to Koidu where the witness was, stayed the night and then moved to Koinadugu to join SAJ Musa.<sup>7109</sup>

3197. Mongor also recalled that after Makeni was captured, Superman moved, attacked and succeeded in capturing Lunsar, while SAJ Musa and Alfred Brown moved towards Freetown and arrived in Masiaka. Brown contacted Mongor, telling him that they were in Masiaka, that their next target was Waterloo and that he would contact Mongor again when they arrived there. Mongor understood that they had captured Masiaka and were resting before moving to the next target.<sup>7110</sup> SAJ Musa’s forces moved towards Waterloo but the witness heard that they did not reach Waterloo and that Musa had died in Benguema. The witness also heard that it was Gullit who took over the command.<sup>7111</sup>

3198. Mongor heard that SAJ Musa died in an attack on the barracks at Benguema. Mongor stated that he “felt relieved” and “happy” when he heard that SAJ Musa had been killed because there was a power struggle between SAJ Musa and Bockarie and Mongor himself did not have a good relationship with SAJ Musa. He was also happy because Gullit did have a very good relationship with Bockarie and “they were doing things together”.<sup>7112</sup> together but, having realised that there would be a delay in these reinforcements arriving, Gullit advanced and entered Freetown without waiting.<sup>7115</sup> Mongor testified that, however, Rambo and other fighters in Makeni advanced with Superman to Waterloo, fighting ECOMOG on the way. They then advanced towards Jui, in the Hastings area.<sup>7116</sup> Gullit's troops used the hillside bypass to enter Freetown.<sup>7117</sup> The witness himself began moving towards Kailahun but stopped at Jojoima because he heard that Gullit's troops had entered Freetown. When Superman and others got to Waterloo, they fought with ECOMOG.<sup>7118</sup> Mongor testified that when he and his troops heard on the BBC on 6 January 1999 that Gullit's troops had entered Freetown, "we were happy and we were jubilating in all the areas".<sup>7119</sup> After this, Mongor did not continue towards Freetown but remained on the defensive.<sup>7120</sup>

3199. Mongor testified that before Gullit and his men moved to Freetown, Bockarie sent a message to Gullit to wait for reinforcements. Mongor stated that Gullit and his fighters were in Waterloo when this message was received. Mongor stated that after SAJ Musa’s death,<sup>7113</sup> he had himself been instructed by Bockarie to move to Kailahun and then to Kono to collect more fighters to reinforce the troops going to Freetown.<sup>7114</sup> Mongor stated that Bockarie wanted Gullit to wait for these reinforcements to arrive so that they could enter Freetown

He confirmed in cross-examination that SAJ Musa was already dead by this point and that he used the wrong name initially (Transcript 7 April 2008, pp. 6752-6753).

3200. When asked whether he was able to accomplish his assignment, to attack Joru and Zimmi, as determined in the meeting in November 1998 in Buedu before the offensive, Mongor stated that he was able to occupy Joru for three days before his group was pushed out. He was not able to advance to the next target, Zimmi.<sup>7121</sup>

3201. Mongor further testified that when he was monitoring the radio while the troops were in Freetown, he heard a number of exchanges between Gullit and Bockarie. He heard Gullit tell Bockarie that his group had released various members of the RUF incarcerated at Pademba Road Prison, including Gibril Massaquoi, and that "they all joined hands together in the fighting".<sup>7122</sup> Mongor testified that he heard Gibril Massaquoi telling Superman and Bockarie over the radio when he was released from prison that he was fighting alongside Gullit's troops in Freetown.<sup>7123</sup>

3202. Mongor also heard over the radio Gullit telling Bockarie that there was much resistance from ECOMOG troops, and asked for reinforcements. However, because Rambo and his group on the Hastings side of Freetown were unable to get into Freetown, Gullit's forces decided to retreat. Bockarie instructed Gullit that if they were unable to hold their ground in Freetown they should start a campaign of destruction.<sup>7124</sup> Specifically, Mongor stated that he heard Bockarie on the radio ordering the Nigerian Embassy to be burnt.<sup>7125</sup> Mongor personally heard these radio conversations, which were not encoded. Gullit called Bockarie "Sir" when they communicated over the radio during the attack because Gullit knew Bockarie's position as "Chief of Defence". Gullit communicated with Bockarie frequently, at half-hourly intervals.<sup>7126</sup>

3203. Additionally, when the fighters entered Freetown, Mongor heard the radio base in Buedu as well as the monitoring team in Liberia send out 448 jet warnings over the radio to alert those in Freetown.<sup>7127</sup>

3204. Once ECOMOG concentrated its forces on defending the city, Gullit's men could not withstand the pressure from ECOMOG and prepared for retreat. They received instruction from Sam Bockarie that they should set buildings on fire, including the Nigerian Embassy.<sup>7128</sup> Gullit's men withdrew from Freetown to the Waterloo area.<sup>7129</sup>

3205. While Gullit's forces were fighting in Freetown, fighting was also taking place in the Hastings area between Rambo's group against ECOMOG and the Kamajors.<sup>7130</sup> Mongor testified that this was of strategic importance to Gullit's forces in Freetown because it was a forested and hilly area. When Rambo engaged the ECOMOG forces in the area, the men who retreated from Freetown were able to use the forest to come towards the Waterloo area.<sup>7131</sup>

3206. Finally, Mongor testified that relations between the AFRC and the RUF were cordial and that they had an understanding at that time that they were together as one.<sup>7132</sup>

3207. On cross-examination, Mongor denied that the invasion of Freetown was exclusively the initiative of the AFRC, affirming his evidence in examination-in-chief that the invasion of Freetown was a plan brought by Bockarie from Charles Taylor and that plan did not envisage a specific group going to Freetown.<sup>7133</sup> Mongor conceded that throughout the relationship between the RUF and AFRC there were problems but he believed that these problems were manageable.<sup>7134</sup>

3208. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>7135</sup> testified that when ECOMOG attacked Freetown in mid-February 1998, Gullit was in Kono,<sup>7136</sup> and subsequently travelled from Kono to Kailahun.<sup>7137</sup> According to TF1-371, when Johnny Paul Koroma arrived in Buedu after the Intervention, he advised Bockarie to take the diamonds that were in Gullit's possession to pay for rice for the army and RUF combatants.<sup>7138</sup> Bockarie then mandated Issa Sesay to proceed to Kailahun, meet with Gullit and take diamonds from him.<sup>7139</sup> When Sesay returned to Buedu, he turned over the diamonds to Bockarie. Bockarie tried to interrogate Gullit but they were "very good friends", so Bockarie did not implement the instructions from Johnny Paul Koroma to sanction Gullit and instead told Gullit not to leave Buedu. Gullit stayed at the house of one of the other AFRC Honourables who was in Buedu.<sup>7140</sup> While Johnny Paul Koroma was still staying at Bockarie's house in Buedu, Gullit asked Bockarie for leave to go back to Kailahun Town, which he did.<sup>7141</sup>

3209. TF1-371 testified that AFRC fighters, led by Gullit and Five-Five, attacked the State House in Freetown on 6 January 1999. According to TF1-371, Gullit contacted Bockarie, informing Bockarie that he was already at the State House, and they had a discussion over the VHF radio. After an intense counter-attack, Bockarie told Gullit that he should not be concerned and that “the RUF is already on the way to give them support”.<sup>7142</sup>

3210. TF1-371 stated that ECOMOG repelled the AFRC as far as Kissy, and that the AFRC troops were trapped. TF1-371 testified that Bockarie ordered Boston Flomo (a.k.a. Rambo), who was in Waterloo, to link up with the AFRC troops, in the eastern part of Freetown. TF1-371 stated that they were successful in doing so. While the AFRC troops were able to resist ECOMOG for some time, they eventually retreated to Waterloo along with some of the prisoners freed from Pademba Road Prison, including Joseph Momoh.<sup>7143</sup> TF1-371 testified that there was a misunderstanding between the AFRC and the RUF that resulted in Gullit, Bazy Kamara and other AFRC fighters going to Okra Hill instead of joining RUF fighters in Masiaka “so there was a split at that point in time”. Rambo’s troops retreated from Waterloo to Lunsar, where Denis Mingo was stationed.<sup>7144</sup> The part of the AFRC that was led by Gullit and Bazy fell out with the RUF at Waterloo and their relationship was not mended throughout 1999.<sup>7145</sup>

3211. There were media reports on the BBC and the VOA at this time concerning the situation in Freetown as the RUF and AFRC were retreating. They reported on carnage in the city, the burning of houses and the killing and amputating of civilians. This was consistent with Sam Bockarie’s description of “Operation No Living Thing”. Bockarie was interviewed by the BBC via satellite phone, during which he mentioned operations “No Living Thing”, “Spare No Soul” and “No Bush Shake”. Operation “No Bush Shake” referred to Bockarie’s policy of zero tolerance of resistance.<sup>7146</sup>

3212. On cross-examination, TF1-371 testified that while he considered that the decision of the AFRC to enter Freetown in January 1999 without waiting for the RUF to be hasty, he did not consider the division to be serious.<sup>7147</sup> Generally, TF1-371 testified that it was not difficult for Bockarie to control commanders on the ground, but he did concede that there were isolated instances when Bockarie could not control Superman, Gullit and Buzzy.<sup>7148</sup>

3213. TF1-371 stated on cross-examination that while the attack on Freetown was planned by Sankoh and the RUF, the initiative in carrying out the invasion was taken by the AFRC troops led by, among others, Gullit and SAJ Musa. The witness agreed with Defence counsel's proposition that the RUF "effectively tagged on on the tail end".<sup>7149</sup> TF1-371 further confirmed that during the Freetown invasion on 6 January 1999, Bockarie was in Buedu, Issa Sesay was in Makeni and none of the senior leaders of the RUF, including Morris Kallon and Superman, went to Freetown and the 1999 Freetown invasion was an SLA-led initiative.<sup>7150</sup>

3214. While he recalled hearing a message from a radio operator that SAJ Musa had died on his way to Freetown, TF1-371 stated that he was not with SAJ Musa's group and did not know much about their movements in December 1998 and January 1999 as they made their way to Freetown.<sup>7151</sup> TF1-371 stated that the direct contact between Gullit and Bockarie of which he was aware took place when Gullit was already in the State House.<sup>7152</sup>

3215. However, TF1-371 disagreed with the proposition that the Freetown attack was planned by a renegade group that only contacted the RUF once they ran into problems. TF1-371 conceded that the AFRC "went to Freetown on their own" but stated that the RUF already had "their own in-house planning" from the time they heard about the treason trial, but that they did not have the arms and ammunition necessary to conduct such an operation. The witness explained that:

I mean while those guys were having their separate operation, Sam Bockarie actually had his operation to go to Freetown after he came, I mean, from that trip.

In fact he came out with the two axis, two approach to attack Freetown. [...] Those guys' operations were separate. I mean they may have their own agenda, but the RUF at that particular point in time had this plan and that was why Sam Bockarie went for those materials.<sup>7153</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3216. During cross-examination, TF1-371 also confirmed the statement in Exhibit D-009 which stated that during the Freetown operation, as Gullit's troops were cut off from the rear, Bockarie coordinated the positions of the fighters over the radio. Bockarie ordered them to combine their forces and to join RUF troops at Benguema and Waterloo.<sup>7154</sup> TF1-371 also affirmed, after being shown the statement in Exhibit D-009 concerning Gibril Massaquoi's refusal to comply with Bockarie's instruction to go to Buedu after his release from Pademba Road Prison, that there were tensions between Bockarie and fighters such as Gibril Massaquoi. However, TF1-371 indicated that the description of events in Exhibit D-009 is exaggerated, and that merely because there was a "misunderstanding" between these personalities did not mean that the RUF was not a cohesive group.<sup>7155</sup>

3217. Witness TF1-375, an RUF fighter,<sup>7156</sup> testified that after the Red Lion Battalion found and joined Gullit, Alfred Brown, Gullit's radio operator called SAJ Musa and Superman in Koinadugu telling them that they had met up successfully. Brown said

"Oh, we have received our brothers here. Our brothers have reached us here and we are happy to receive them". So they called Superman and Superman also called Bockarie's radio station in Kailahun that, "The men who had been sent to go and look for Gullit have arrived safely and that I have just received communication from CO Alfred", and CO Alfred was the communications man for the RUF at that time. So, when they got there they called - CO Alfred called. Everybody was happy."<sup>7157</sup>

3218. The witness explained that CO Alfred was a former NPFL fighter who later came to the RUF. He was not an SLA.<sup>7158</sup>

3219. TF1-375 testified that the RUF attacked Makeni in December 1998. He was there but he did not take part in a physical battle. The commanders of the forces attacking Makeni were from the group of Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman).<sup>7159</sup> Superman's group and Issa Sesay's group joined forces to attack the Makeni Teko barracks. Makeni was defended by Nigerian ECOMOG. It took three days for the fighting to finish.<sup>7160</sup> The witness was aware of what was occurring in the fighting on the radio, because it was directly reported to Issa Sesay.<sup>7161</sup>

3220. The witness and an advance team led by Komba Gbundema left Superman in Makeni and went to Lunsar.<sup>7162</sup> TF1-375 testified that the group advanced to Lunsar within about five days.<sup>7163</sup> He testified that the day after arriving at Lunsar, Superman joined them and informed the troops that “the people in front of us have encountered problem”. The troops at Lunsar understood that SAJ Musa had been killed at the Benguema barracks and that “we should try and get to them”.<sup>7164</sup> TF1-375 stated that while some of the SLAs were saddened by the news, some of the RUF, including Superman and Komba Gbundema, were happy because they felt SAJ Musa was ambitious for power.<sup>7165</sup> TF1-375 learned that Ibrahim Kamara (a.k.a. Bazzy) took over leadership from SAJ Musa. Gullit was there with them at the time. Gullit had a good relationship with Superman at this time, and began communicating after the death of SAJ Musa. Once Superman joined Gbundema at Lunsar, the troops attacked Gberi Junction.<sup>7166</sup>

3221. When TF1-375 went to Lunsar, the troops previously commanded by SAJ Musa were in Waterloo. TF1-375 heard that these forces attacked Masiaka, and from there Waterloo, and then Benguema Barracks.<sup>7167</sup> When the witness had reached Masiaka, and Superman was at Gberi Junction, Superman informed them that Bazzy’s forces had attacked Hastings and were ready to enter Freetown. Superman came to the front line and led the forces to Waterloo. Superman said that they should try to open the road to Freetown, to join their “friends and brothers” in the city.<sup>7168</sup> The witness also heard from one of Issa Sesay’s bodyguards, who joined the operation in Waterloo and from Rambo and others that the forces formerly led by SAJ Musa had continued to Kossoh Town, Calaba Town and were headed for the State House.<sup>7169</sup> They invaded on 6 January 1999.<sup>7170</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3222. The witness heard from Superman and others that the forces entered Freetown. When they passed Waterloo, the witness stopped in Yams Farm, where he could view the capital city, and saw that there were houses burning and fighting in Freetown.<sup>7171</sup> They also heard over the BBC Bockarie making a threatening remark regarding Freetown. The witness was not always present in the radio room when Superman and Sam Bockarie communicated; however, Superman said that Sam Bockarie will always be on the BBC and that the witness should listen.<sup>7172</sup> The commanders of the forces that entered Freetown were Gullit and Bazy. TF1-375 testified that Bazy was senior to Gullit.<sup>7173</sup>

3223. At Waterloo, Superman, Issa Sesay, Komba Gbundema and other senior officers decided that RUF Rambo should take a group to attack Hastings and get across the bridge to go to Freetown to join their “brothers”.<sup>7174</sup> Issa Sesay appointed an AFRC commander known as Rambo Red Goat to lead the group that went to Freetown because, as Sesay stated, Rambo Red Goat was once an SLA soldier and “knew his brothers in the city well”.<sup>7175</sup> The group led by Rambo Red Goat numbered roughly 60 to 65 and comprised some RUF men, some SLA and some STF. The RUF were armed by Issa Sesay and Superman, the STF were armed by General Bropleh and the SLA were armed by Brigadier Mani and Colonel T.<sup>7176</sup>

3224. TF1-375 also testified that while Rambo Red Goat was initially on SAJ Musa’s side in Musa’s dispute with Superman in late 1998, when SAJ Musa left Koinadugu, Red Goat “surrendered to” Superman, and was received well.<sup>7177</sup>

3225. TF1-375 testified that he was in Jui, a stronghold for ECOMOG, when Red Goat was dispatched to Freetown. The forces could not cross the bridge connecting Jui and Freetown, which was well defended by ECOMOG.<sup>7178</sup> Rambo Red Goat’s group instead entered Freetown by way of an old road at the back of Jui that led to Kossoh Town. After Red Goat’s group set off, the witness’s contingent went back to Yams Farm and stayed there for a week before retreating.<sup>7179</sup> The witness learned later, when Red Goat's group called, that the troops in Freetown had taken over the State House and Pademba Road Prison and freed the RUF and AFRC members imprisoned there, including Gibril Massaquoi. The witness was monitoring this call directly. Alfred Brown was the radio man in Freetown, although Gullit was always in the radio room calling Superman or Bockarie directly.<sup>7180</sup> At the same time, the witness also heard Bockarie speaking over the BBC that "any contingent that attacked his forces in Freetown he will command his forces to burn all the embassies down".<sup>7181</sup>

3226. These forces stayed in Freetown for two weeks. When they retreated, they started to burn down houses and abducted a large number of girls. Bockarie called Superman and informed Superman that he had received a call from Gullit who said that his forces were running out of ammunition and that Gullit's forces would need protection while they were retreating from ECOMOG.<sup>7182</sup> Bockarie "instructed Superman and [...] Issa Sesay to defend Gberi Junction, Benguema barracks and Waterloo so as to give free passage to the forces that were in Freetown, that is Gullit and others, whilst they were retreating".<sup>7183</sup>

3227. The forces in Freetown called for the TF1-375's group to join them, but they were unable to find a passage into Freetown and told the troops in Freetown to retreat.<sup>7184</sup> The retreating forces went from Grafton, to the Peninsula, through the mountains and then to Waterloo. Steve Bio died on the Peninsula route. During the retreat, the witness's group defended Waterloo, Klay, Benguema Barracks, and Gberi Junction, preventing the Guinean contingent at Port Loko from taking Gberi Junction. The Nigerian contingent from Jui was attacking Klay, which was being defended by Superman and Rambo. Komba Gbundema went and repelled the attack on Gberi Junction.<sup>7185</sup>

3228. Komba Sumana testified that in 1998, after a conflict between SAJ Musa and Superman, SAJ Musa left Koinadugu. Superman remained the commander and General Bropleh the deputy. Later, SAJ Musa communicated to them that he was to move with Five-Five to Freetown and requested Superman's group to move to Makeni.<sup>7186</sup> The witness and others successfully attacked and captured Makeni, driving out ECOMOG and capturing "everything" from them.<sup>7187</sup>

3229. Describing any news about SAJ Musa's group he heard while in Makeni, the witness stated:

Well, at the time that we were there we heard communication at the time that we went to Brigadier Mani. I and Wallace went there and we were there when a call was made that they wanted reinforcement. They were there together with Superman. They said they wanted reinforcements and that SAJ Musa had been shot in Freetown.<sup>7188</sup>

3230. Sumana clarified that it was Five-Five who made this call to Superman.<sup>7189</sup> After this call, and the news of Musa's death "spread everywhere", the witness and other fighters assembled at Issa's house. Issa told the fighters that they "should take reinforcements to Freetown".<sup>7190</sup>

3231. The witness travelled on a truck with other fighters, commanded by Superman, to Lunsar, where they remained for a month. From Lunsar, the witness's group attacked Gberi Junction and dislodged ECOMOG. Two other trucks went on towards Freetown.<sup>7191</sup> The witness's friend, "Rubber-Rubber" was on one of those trucks going on to Freetown.<sup>7192</sup> When both had returned to Makeni, Rubber-Rubber told Sumana that:

[T]hey went but they stopped at Waterloo. He said not all of them were able to go to Freetown. He said they took the - they used a bypass and went to Freetown. He said when they went they met Five-Five and others. At the time that they went SAJ Musa had already died.<sup>7193</sup>

3232. During the time Superman's group remained at Lunsar, they moved and attacked Gberi Junction and dislodged ECOMOG from there.<sup>7194</sup>

Prosecution Witness Foday Lansana

3233. Witness Foday Lansana, (a.k.a. Co Nya), an RUF radio operator<sup>7195</sup> who worked for Superman in the North in mid- to late-1998,<sup>7196</sup> testified that between 1996 and 2000, he used to be able to monitor the communications networks although he did not speak on the net, oversee or control any communications.<sup>7197</sup>

3234. Lansana testified that from his position at the signal unit in Koinadugu, he knew of three main sources of communication in Koinadugu: Superman and Bockarie used to communicate with each other; both Bockarie and Superman would also communicate with Gullit at Rosos, and Brigadier Mani, who was one of the expert military officers, the most senior SLA in Kurubonla, and overall planning officer for operations, also used to communicate with Bockarie, Superman and Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit).<sup>7198</sup> Lansana explained that Brigadier Mani was the co-ordinator who used to settle disputes between the senior military officers. He was the one who was able to convince Superman, Tamba Yamba and Bockarie to send reinforcements to Gullit in Rosos when he requested them. Lansana said he knew the reinforcements, manpower and ammunition, had been sent because they were organised in his presence.<sup>7199</sup>

3235. Lansana testified that after the infighting between Superman and SAJ Musa, they retreated to a ground called Pumpkin Ground. While they were there, they received information from the BBC that Foday Sankoh had been condemned in Freetown. Based on that information, Bockarie called Superman over the radio and instructed him to get instructed him not to waste time but to march to Freetown. He told Superman that he was also in communication with Gullit. He instructed the Rosos troops to move on Lunsar and advance on to Freetown, and instructed Superman's troops to attack Makeni and join the troops from Rosos. Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon were instructed to move on Koidu Town and then Makeni. Based on these instructions, Superman organised the troops under his command, then moved from Pumpkin Ground to Alkalia and on to Makeni.<sup>7200</sup> Lansana stated that they successfully captured Makeni before 25 December 1998 and the group from Kono, headed by Boston Flomo (a.k.a. Rambo), Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon joined them in Makeni.<sup>7201</sup> Lansana then testified that on 6 January 1999, he was in Lunsar because their attack had stopped there and they were waiting for the troops coming from Kono in order for them to move as reinforcement for Freetown.<sup>7202</sup>

3236. The witness explained that he knew where the other troops were moving because the groups all informed each other of their positions and progress over the HF radio. At that point, the group that was in Kono was in communication with Superman and, at the same time, the group that was in Rosos was also in communication with Superman. The communication used to flow from one point to the other based on the advancement of that particular group. He described the information delivered by these communications as daily “situation reports” made through the operators who were in charge of communications from one commander to another.<sup>7203</sup>

3237. Lansana testified that he was in Lunsar with Superman waiting for reinforcements from Kono when RUF and AFRC forces attacked Freetown on 6 January 1999.<sup>7204</sup> He remained in Lunsar throughout the attack.<sup>7205</sup>

3238. Lansana stated that on 6 January 1999, he recalled hearing Sam Bockarie on BBC radio being interviewed by Robin White. In this interview, Bockarie said that he had received a radio communication from his commander, Brigadier Gullit, in Freetown. Bockarie also said in the interview that he had received information that Tongo had fallen to the RUF and Junta.<sup>7206</sup> Lansana’s recollection was that it was made clear on the news that Brigadier Gullit was the Task Force Commander in Freetown.<sup>7207</sup> After Exhibit P-085A was played to the Trial Chamber, Lansana recognised it as the recording of this interview and the voice of Sam Bockarie in the recording. Lansana testified that Bockarie was his commander and he was familiar with his voice. Lansana then stated that Gullit was a former SLA and the overall commander for the troops at Rosos that entered Freetown.<sup>7208</sup>

3239. Lansana testified that during the 6 January invasion, Sam Bockarie was in contact with Gullit, Superman, Issa Sesay, and Boston Flomo. Lansana monitored the communications from Lunsar.<sup>7209</sup> Gullit would communicate with Sam Bockarie on a daily basis, and these communications were “uncountable”.<sup>7210</sup> On the content of these communications, Lansana recalled that before Gullit entered Freetown, Gullit informed Sam Bockarie of the death of SAJ Musa. When Gullit captured the State House in Freetown and advanced on Pademba Road Prison he also reported this to Sam Bockarie.<sup>7211</sup>

3240. Lansana recalled that he monitored one communication in which Bockarie gave an order concerning the execution of Martin Moinina, who had been a witness against Foday Sankoh during his trial in Freetown.<sup>7212</sup> Moinina was captured during the invasion by Gullit’s troops on 6 January 1999. When Gullit reported his capture to Bockarie, Bockarie ordered that Moinina be executed as a traitor. Gullit “did as he was instructed”. Lansana learnt of the execution from Gibril Massaquoi when Massaquoi arrived in Lunsar along with other combatants after the retreat from Freetown.<sup>7213</sup>

3241. Lansana also recalled that when Gullit reported to Bockarie that the troops in Freetown were under serious threat from ECOMOG, Bockarie instructed Gullit and all the other commanders in various positions in Freetown to make sure that they made themselves “fearful” so that ECOMOG would not overrun their positions. Bockarie told Gullit that “if it causes you to kill all the civilians, burn all the houses where you are, just so that you will not

Gullit’s response to this instruction was “yes sir”.<sup>7215</sup>

3242. Lansana confirmed that Alfred Brown and Perry Kamara (a.k.a. King Perry) were RUF radio operators present in Freetown during the January 1999 attack.<sup>7216</sup>

3243. Superman also had two bodyguards named CY and Jumbo Blah who left Koinadugu to join the Rosos group under the command of Gullit. Major CY informed Superman that SAJ Musa had banned them from communicating with Superman during the time they were in Rosos and up to Benguema and Waterloo because of the misunderstandings that occurred between Superman and SAJ Musa in Koinadugu. After the death of SAJ Musa, however, Major CY and Jumbo Blah used to communicate on a daily basis with Superman.<sup>7217</sup>

3244. Lansana explained that while O-Five, Jumbo Blah and Major CY were on the operation in Freetown, they would constantly send reports on their defensive positions and the areas captured by the troops. Gullit and other commanders sent reports of the positions occupied by the Junta or the RUF troops. Superman would communicate with Major CY to confirm that the information from Gullit was correct.<sup>7218</sup>

3245. Lansana testified that one of the first communications between Jumbo Blah and Superman occurred after the capture of Benguema, when Major CY informed Superman that they were clearing that area and they were not sparing any civilians from Benguema to Freetown.<sup>7219</sup> Major CY was part of the group that was stationed at the State House in Freetown. Major CY confirmed that the order by Sam Bockarie to make themselves fearful was passed by the top commanders down to the “least person”.<sup>7220</sup>

3246. Lansana knew about the communications between Major CY and Superman because he used to sit by the radio while Superman was communicating with Major CY and Jumbo

Blah. At this time, Alice Pyne was also present in Lunsar. She was the operator for Superman.<sup>7221</sup>

Prosecution Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie

3247. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie (“DAF”), an RUF radio operator,<sup>7222</sup> testified that he travelled to Kailahun after the ECOMOG intervention and believed relations between Gullit and Bockarie were ‘cordial’.<sup>7223</sup> Fornie acknowledged that once Gullit left Kailahun for Kurubonla in 1998, communications between the two men were unpleasant; Gullit “attacked” Bockarie verbally and accused Bockarie of having disgraced Johnny Paul Koroma.<sup>7224</sup>

3249. One of Fornie’s responsibilities on 6 January 1999 was to monitor ECOMOG communications, decode them, and then take them to Bockarie’s transmitting station,<sup>7229</sup> in particular ECOMOG air mission requests for Alpha Jets to bomb RUF zones. He would report such requests to the transmitting station, where they were sent to the particular target station.<sup>7230</sup> Each target station had a bell, and any time a station heard a “448”, that is, an alert that an enemy aircraft was coming, the operator in that station would ring the bell in order to alert everyone.<sup>7231</sup> One specific example of this occurred when Fornie took an intercepted message to “Bravo Zulu 4”, and the operator on duty transmitted the message to Freetown. Two RUF stations in Freetown to be attacked – in Tower Hill and Upgun – received the message and by the time the jets arrived the fighters had changed their location.<sup>7232</sup>

3250. During the invasion of Freetown, Gullit sent information directly to Bockarie and sought more materiel and reinforcements from Bockarie for further advances while Bockarie requested updates from Gullit about progress in Freetown.<sup>7233</sup> Gullit’s main radio operator was as SLA named Elongima,<sup>7234</sup> but other radio operators with Gullit in Freetown included Alfred Brown and King Perry.<sup>7235</sup> While Bockarie seldom spoke directly with Gullit on the air, the witness did monitor one direct conversation on 6 January 1999 between Gullit and Bockarie in which Bockarie told Gullit to try to coordinate reinforcements with Rambo and General Issa so that Rambo would move faster and meet Gullit in Freetown.<sup>7236</sup>

3251. The witness recalled when one of the SLAs entered the State House, called the BBC and said that “we have entered Freetown”, referring to both RUF and AFRC forces.<sup>7237</sup> When this was broadcast on the BBC, Bockarie was in Buedu and heard the broadcast. The witness did not see him in a bad mood, but heard him “grumbling” that “maybe Gullit and others would want to turn themselves into presidents in Freetown”. Before the BBC broadcast, Gullit had already notified Bockarie that they had captured Freetown. This was the same conversation in which Gullit requested reinforcements. The BBC broadcast occurred two hours after the conversation between Bockarie and Gullit.<sup>7238</sup> There had been some minor problems between Bockarie and Gullit, and Bockarie was concerned that Gullit would take power in Freetown on his own. Bockarie assured Gullit that Rambo was on his way to join him in the city, at which time Rambo and his contingent was around the Masiaka area, on their way to Freetown.<sup>7239</sup>

3252. On the morning of 7 January 1999,<sup>7240</sup> Gullit transmitted a radio message to Bockarie via King Perry that the troops in Freetown had released the political detainees from Pademba Road Prison. Among those who were released were the late ex-President Momoh, Steve Bio, Victor Foh, Osho-Williams, and other prominent Sierra Leoneans.<sup>7241</sup> Bockarie instructed Mohamed Kabbah, a radio operator, to send a radio message to Gullit to send the released prisoners to the rear for their safety.<sup>7242</sup> The witness knew that the message was received by Gullit because Gullit acted on Bockarie's instructions and sent the prisoners to Makeni. When these freed prisoners were transported to Makeni, Steve Bio was killed by an enemy bomb fragment.<sup>7243</sup>

3253. Fornie described the communication between Bockarie and Gullit during the course of the Freetown operation as "frequent" and "constant", with communications occurring at least hourly.<sup>7244</sup> The communication concerned requests from Gullit to Bockarie for ammunition. As a result, Bockarie contacted Yeaten in turn to ask for ammunition.<sup>7245</sup>

3254. Fornie recalled that, after ECOMOG had forced Gullit's troops to commence their retreat from Freetown, and after Fornie had returned from his trip to Monrovia,<sup>7246</sup> he monitored a live conversation in which Bockarie gave Gullit instructions to pass onto the AFRC/RUF troops in Freetown to "cause a lot of mayhem in the city", including destroying government facilities like the oil refinery and amputating civilians, in order to draw attention and force the international community to intervene and the RUF would be able to negotiate the release of Foday Sankoh. The witness was in the radio room when he heard this communication but does not recall the date on which it occurred.<sup>7247</sup> After this communication, Fornie heard on the BBC that on their retreat from Freetown, the RUF left behind amputees, corpses and had burnt many houses. The retreat occurred during January 1999 but Fornie could not recall the specific date.<sup>7248</sup>

3255. Fornie recalled hearing a BBC broadcast, Exhibit P-263, of a journalist reporting on the burning of houses, amputations of civilians, killings by RUF and AFRC forces in the Kissy District of eastern Freetown. Fornie testified that when Bockarie heard this broadcast he was “well pleased”, and then said “well, they have not seen anything yet” and would continue to engage in such atrocities until Sankoh was released.<sup>7249</sup>

3256. During the retreat, Fornie recalled hearing a communication from Bockarie to Gullit in which the former instructed the latter to assemble around the peninsula and wait for Rambo and others to join them in order to re-attack Freetown. The AFRC/RUF were unsuccessful in their attempt to re-attack Freetown. Gullit called Bockarie “sir” or “master” in these communications while Bockarie called Gullit “Black Jar” or “Gullit”.<sup>7250</sup> A further communication occurred at the end of February, when Gullit had almost retreated entirely from Freetown. Gullit contacted Bockarie to say that he had established contact with ECOMOG through a handset which he had captured in Freetown and that through this contact Sankoh suggested a temporary ceasefire to Gullit. Bockarie did not believe that Sankoh gave instructions concerning a ceasefire.<sup>7251</sup>

3257. Aside from Gullit, Bockarie was also in communication with other commanders, including Superman, General Bropleh, Boston Flomo (a.k.a. Rambo), Akim, Isaac Mongor and Morris Kallon. Gullit was also in communication with Rambo, Superman, Issa Sesay, and Five-Five.<sup>7252</sup> The witness was aware that Boston Flomo, who had led the attack on Kono and advanced to Masiaka, joined Gullit and others to re-attack Freetown on Bockarie’s orders because there was direct communication between Flomo and Gullit in which they coordinated how their forces would meet. The communications between Issa Sesay and Gullit also concerned how to recapture Freetown. The communications between Gullit and these commanders was very frequent, occurring about two or three times an hour.<sup>7253</sup>

3258. When SAJ Musa died, King Perry sent a message to Bockarie to inform him. The witness did not recall if he was present when this message came but read the message.<sup>7254</sup>

3259. On cross-examination, Fornie denied the suggestion of Defence counsel that the invasion of Freetown was an AFRC effort, stating that both the AFRC and the RUF invaded Freetown together.<sup>7255</sup> He testified that those RUF fighters who entered Freetown on 6 January 1999 took “direct directions” from Sam Bockarie.<sup>7256</sup> Fornie named “Gullit, King Perry, Alfred Brown, Five-Five and others” as members of the RUF who invaded Freetown. Fornie affirmed that both Gullit and Five-Five were members of the RUF.<sup>7257</sup> Fornie was unable to provide an estimate of the number of RUF members amongst the troops that entered Freetown.<sup>7258</sup>

3260. Fornie agreed with Defence counsel’s suggestion that SAJ Musa wanted his troops to arrive in Freetown before the RUF under Bockarie’s command. Fornie agreed that even after Musa’s death, the objective of his group remained to get to Freetown ahead of the RUF.<sup>7259</sup> Fornie recalled hearing a BBC broadcast in which Bockarie was interviewed by the BBC and claimed that it was RUF troops who were advancing on Freetown, but does not remember a subsequent radio exchange between SAJ Musa and Bockarie in which Musa insulted Bockarie and told him he had no right to claim that troops approaching Freetown were RUF troops.<sup>7260</sup>

3261. Fornie disagreed that that the troops entering Freetown on 6 January 1999 were loyal to SAJ Musa, insisting that they were directly subordinate to Bockarie. To illustrate his point, Fornie noted that Gullit had contacted Bockarie to tell him about SAJ Musa’s death and that immediately upon his arrival in Freetown Gullit contacted Bockarie to inform him of his movements. In the conversation after SAJ Musa's death, Bockarie had told Gullit to wait for reinforcements before entering Freetown. Fornie noted that although Gullit did not comply with Bockarie's instructions, Gullit believed his troops were in an advantaged position in relation to ECOMOG and it was strategically necessary to advance forward. Nevertheless, Bockarie ordered Rambo through Issa Sesay to join Gullit and Gullit and Rambo then coordinated their movements.<sup>7261</sup>

3262. While Fornie agreed that the relationship between the AFRC and the RUF during the AFRC regime was "not perfectly cordial" and that it got worse following the ECOMOG Intervention,<sup>7262</sup> following the death of SAJ Musa, when Brima contacted Bockarie, "there was a free flow of communication" between AFRC and RUF commanders.<sup>7263</sup>

3263. Witness TF1-585, an RUF radio operator,<sup>7264</sup> testified that after Gullit and SAJ Musa had pulled out of Freetown, they refused to go to Buedu, despite Bockarie's requests for them to do so.<sup>7265</sup>

3264. The witness testified that Gullit and Bockarie started "some amount of communication" after the death of SAJ Musa. She explained that that occurred "through Brigadier Mani", a boss in the AFRC who, the witness thought, was based around the Kono area during this time. As a result, there were then communications between Bockarie, Gullit and Brigadier Mani and Bockarie spent a lot of time in the radio room monitoring Gullit's movements.<sup>7266</sup>

3265. Before SAJ Musa died, TF1-585 testified that there was no communication between Bockarie and either SAJ Musa or Gullit. TF1-585 explained that there was no contact between Gullit and Bockarie because "there were problems". However, even though there was no understanding between them, Brigadier Mani used to relay information from SAJ and others to Bockarie. "He was the one who mediated, who was in between them. He coordinated. Whatever information there was from Bockarie to SAJ Musa and others, he was the one between them. Bockarie only got information from SAJ Musa and others through Brigadier Mani at that time".<sup>7267</sup>

3266. TF1-585 testified that communication resumed between Gullit and Bockarie after SAJ Musa's death.<sup>7268</sup> The witness said that she learned about SAJ Musa's death when King Perry informed Brigadier Mani, who spoke to Bockarie. Later Gullit came on the radio and told Bockarie about SAJ Musa's death. This was the point when communication started between Bockarie and Gullit. They spoke about "where they had reached, their position and what they were going through".<sup>7269</sup>

3267. TF1-585 testified that after Bockarie had spoken to the BBC, saying that his troops would enter Freetown in a certain period, he came to the veranda and said that he and Gullit had no problem. He said the problem was SAJ Musa and as long as SAJ Musa was dead, he and Gullit had no more problems. He trusted Gullit and knew that Gullit would make it to Freetown.<sup>7270</sup> The witness did not recall the month when Brigadier Mani began to facilitate communications between Bockarie and Gullit after the death of SAJ Musa.<sup>7271</sup>

3268. On re-examination, the witness clarified that the communication between Brigadier Mani and Bockarie commenced before SAJ Musa's death when Mani used to tell them about SAJ and others' movements, but that Bockarie and SAJ did not have any direct communication at the time when SAJ was alive.<sup>7272</sup>

3269. The witness recalled that on 6 January 1999, Bockarie was very frequently in the RUF radio station and used to monitor the movements of Gullit and others towards Freetown.<sup>7273</sup> On around 3 January 1999, Bockarie had used his satellite phone to inform the BBC that his troops would be in Freetown within three days time.<sup>7274</sup> He was able to give this timeframe because he and Gullit had already spoken and Gullit had told Bockarie his position at that time, saying that he was “entering” Freetown. The witness heard this in person, but from a distance.<sup>7275</sup> After speaking to Gullit, Bockarie said that he and Gullit had no problems, and that the problem had been with SAJ Musa. Bockarie then stated that he trusted Gullit and knew that Gullit would make it to Freetown.<sup>7276</sup> Later, the witness heard on FM radio that the rebels had entered Freetown. Bockarie then told the BBC that “he was a man of his word. He had given three days that his men would enter Freetown and indeed they had entered Freetown”. Bockarie was speaking to the BBC on a satellite phone out in the open and those around him were “dancing around”.<sup>7277</sup>

3270. TF1-585 testified that some time after his troops entered Freetown, Gullit informed Bockarie over the radio that they were being pushed out of Freetown by ECOMOG. Bockarie ordered Gullit to withdraw:

Sam Bockarie ordered Gullit that they should not challenge the ECOMOG troops. He said as long as the troop was too heavy for them they should not challenge them, they should pull out of the town, but before they should pull out of the town they should kill many people and burn down many houses before they should leave the town. He said ‘If any bush shake, fire should blaze’, but they should leave the town.<sup>7278</sup>

3271. While Bockarie was speaking to Gullit via a radio communication set, the witness overheard this conversation because the radio station was not enclosed in a room and Bockarie made these statements loudly and in the open.<sup>7279</sup>

3272. Eventually the ECOMOG forces pushed Gullit and his troops out of Freetown. Brigadier Mani reported to Bockarie that Gullit had left Freetown. The witness knew this because she read it in the logbook. Gullit carried out the instruction that Bockarie gave him concerning the manner in which he should leave Freetown. TF1-585 heard on the public radio that the rebels had killed many people and burnt many houses down before they left Freetown.<sup>7280</sup>

3273. After the troops withdrew from Freetown, persons released from Pademba Road Prison in Freetown, including Victor Foh, came to Buedu. The witness read in the radio

3274. On cross-examination, TF1-585 testified that prior to the death of SAJ Musa, there was no communication between Bockarie and SAJ Musa or Bockarie and Gullit in the lead up to the 6 January 1999 Freetown attack.<sup>7282</sup> TF1-585 did not recall the month when Brigadier Mani began to facilitate communications between Sam Bockarie and Gullit after the death of SAJ Musa. She testified that radio operators King Perry and Alfred Brown were the most senior RUF members headed to Freetown.<sup>7283</sup>

Prosecution Witness Alice Pyne

3275. Witness Alice Pyne testified that on 6 January 1999, she was working as a radio operator for Superman at Lunsar. On that day she was not working as an operator and thus did not hear anything over the RUF radio.<sup>7284</sup> However, at 5.30am on 7 January 1999, Alice Pyne heard on the BBC that rebels had invaded Freetown and captured the State House.<sup>7285</sup> The witness then switched on her radio around 7.00am. The witness heard radio operators who had gone to Freetown as part of the group that left Rosos announce over the radio network that they had entered Freetown.<sup>7286</sup> She heard Gullit himself communicating to Bockarie that they had captured Freetown and released prisoners including Gibril Massaquoi, JS Momoh, Steve Bio, Martin Moinama and others. O-Five also communicated to Superman and the witness that they had captured Freetown and had released prisoners from Pademba Road.<sup>7287</sup> to Superman at Lunsar instructing him to join RUF Rambo, who was then still at Makeni, and to proceed to invade Freetown.<sup>7288</sup>

3277. On 7 January 1999, Pyne and her commanders Superman, Foday Lansana, and Gugumeh, as well as about 200 combatants, left Lunsar. They travelled to Gberi Junction, Port Loko, Masiaka, Waterloo and then on to Hastings where they were forced to stop because they were unable to dislodge the ECOMOG soldiers. The trip took around 13 hours.<sup>7289</sup> After Hastings, the group travelled to Yams Farm where Pyne began operating her radio set. She sent a message to Bockarie at Buedu station informing him that her group had been unable to penetrate through to Hastings and was based at Yams Farm.<sup>7290</sup>

3278. The following day,<sup>7291</sup> while monitoring on her radio at Yams Farm, Pyne heard a message from Gullit sent to Bockarie that ECOMOG had dislodged the AFRC/RUF fighters at the State House.<sup>7292</sup> Bockarie then said that “if the men, that is the ECOMOG, forced Gullit and others out of Freetown, they should burn the fucking place and that they should not spare anything”. Gullit responded “Yes, sir”.<sup>7293</sup> Bockarie was angry when he spoke. The witness understood from Bockarie’s message that he intended the indiscriminate destruction of property and persons.<sup>7294</sup>

3279. The witness was in Yams Farm for over two weeks before returning to Lunsar.<sup>7295</sup> After the witness heard that the troops in Freetown had lost control of the State House, Bockarie ordered Superman and his fighters to remain at Yams Farm to ensure there is “a safe corridor for those coming from Freetown”.<sup>7296</sup> Pyne testified that by “safe corridor”, she meant:

if we were not at Yams Farm at that time when the men in Freetown, headed by Gullit and O-Five, were dislodged they could not come to Yams Farm. We made - we created a safe area, that was Yams Farm, for ECOMOG not to be able to base there, so those who would be coming from Freetown would come and join us safely.<sup>7297</sup>

3280. The witness also heard that Superman had asked for Gibril Massaquoi, who was fighting with O-Five in Freetown.<sup>7298</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-516

3281. Witness TF1-516, an RUF radio operator<sup>7299</sup> testified that he was with Gullit when Gullit ordered the retreat from Kono to Buedu after the 1998 Intervention. The witness was then based in Buedu as a radio operator for Bockarie until June/July 1999,<sup>7300</sup> He testified that on the day following their arrival in Buedu he saw Gullit on board a vehicle with Bockarie and they told the witness that they were moving down to Daru. From that time, the witness “never set eyes on him again”.<sup>7301</sup>

3282. While the witness was in Buedu, Bockarie asked Johnny Paul Koroma to address AFRC/RUF officers such as Gullit, SAJ Musa, Superman and Rambo who were located in other sections of the country over the radio. Koroma placed the call and instructed his officers to work together with the RUF as a team so that they could recapture Freetown. At this time, Gullit was in the Makeni area, while SAJ Musa and Superman were both in Kabala. The witness testified that Gullit and Bockarie maintained a “free flow” of communications after this, but that the communication improved considerably after SAJ Musa’s death.<sup>7302</sup>

3283. TF1-516 recalled that Gullit’s radio operator, Elongima, would send radio messages to “us”<sup>7303</sup> with a report to Bockarie telling him the position of the AFRC and the general situation. While they were entering Freetown, Gullit and Bockarie were still communicating.<sup>7304</sup>

3284. TF1-516 was in Buedu during the Freetown invasion.<sup>7305</sup> He testified that during the attempt to take Freetown there was little communication between SAJ Musa and the RUF.<sup>7306</sup> However, before the entry into Freetown in January 1999, Gullit's radio operator, Elongima, would send radio messages to Bockarie informing him of the position of Gullit's troops. When the troops arrived in Freetown, Gullit also contacted Sam Bockarie by radio and reported that he had captured State House. Two or three days later, Bockarie received another call from Gullit notifying Bockarie that "the pressure on them was serious" but that "they" had released some prisoners from Pademba Road prison. Bockarie ordered that all the released prisoners be sent to Buedu. There was regular and direct radio communication between Bockarie and Gullit. The witness knew this because he was "on set". Even when he was not "on set" other operators would pass on information to the witness. He also had access to the radio message book and would follow up past messages exchanged when he was not on duty.<sup>7307</sup>

3285. On one occasion during the invasion of Freetown, Bockarie spoke to Gullit over the radio and told him that he had just been interviewed by the BBC's West African correspondent Mark Doyle. Bockarie told Doyle that if the pressure mounted on Gullit, Gullit would burn down government buildings and the oil refinery and retreat to the Freetown peninsula. Bockarie instructed the frontlines to listen to his interview with the BBC for instructions.<sup>7308</sup> The witness overheard Bockarie speaking to Gullit on the radio specifically instructing Gullit to burn down public structures. Bockarie stated: "If they mount pressure on us, burn down the fucking place".<sup>7309</sup> Following Bockarie's order to Gullit to burn down public structures, Elongima sent a message to the operators in Buedu informing them that "the men have gone on a rampage. They are killing people, they are wounding civilians. The area has become fearful".<sup>7310</sup>

3286. TF1-516 testified that Superman and a number of other commanders were involved in coordinating Gullit's retreat if he was to pull out of Freetown. Superman and Colonel Rambo were both in the Freetown axis. Bockarie communicated with these commanders openly over the radio.<sup>7311</sup> When the forces in Freetown were on the verge of withdrawing, Gullit sent a message to Bockarie reporting that the situation in Freetown was tense and that his troops had run out of ammunition. Bockarie instructed Gullit to move to a location where Rambo would reinforce him. The witness then heard communications between Rambo, Superman and other commanders about providing Gullit with reinforcement.<sup>7312</sup>

3287. When asked whether Bockarie sent any assistance to the commanders in Freetown during the invasion, TF1-516 responded that all Bockarie discussed with the fighters in Freetown was military strategy,<sup>7313</sup> and he issued instructions with regards to setting ambushes, manoeuvring, on how to capture particular targets and when to withdraw.<sup>7314</sup>

3288. TF1-516 also testified that during the Freetown invasion, to assist the forces in Freetown, the RUF had a team of former SLA radio operators based in Buedu named Gbamayagi, Atati, Ache and Sheku. They were responsible for monitoring and decoding ECOMOG messages. This included transmitting "448 messages" to the front line that an ECOMOG jet was in the air and the fighters should take cover. These operators were familiar with Morse code and could therefore understand ECOMOG communications, most of which were transmitted in Morse code.<sup>7315</sup>

3289. Witness Mohamed Kabbah, who was in Buedu on 6 January 1999,<sup>7316</sup> testified that he first heard the news about the rebel invasion of Freetown from the BBC. Later that day, Kabbah was working in the radio room, along with other operators, Tiger, Sheku Sheriff, Mortiga and Zedman, when King Perry communicated with the Buedu radio station directly from Freetown. King Perry informed Kabbah that the troops had entered Freetown but "said he was under suppression", explaining that SAJ Musa had not allowed his radio operators to use the radio to call Bockarie, but as SAJ Musa had died and Gullit was in command of the Freetown troops, he was permitted to communicate with Buedu.<sup>7317</sup> SAJ Musa's group was made up primarily of former SLAs.<sup>7318</sup> There were also some members of the STF, who had been ULIMO fighters.<sup>7319</sup>

3290. Regular communication between King Perry and the operators in Buedu continued during the course of the Freetown operation. King Perry would inform Buedu about troop movements and the security situation in Freetown. When troops in Freetown began to face problems from ECOMOG, Gullit spoke directly to Sam Bockarie over the radio.<sup>7320</sup> Gullit told Bockarie that the rebel troops were being attacked in the city of Freetown, and were facing difficulties from enemy troops attacking from the surrounding hills. Gullit's troops had been pushed out of State House and the areas around it. Bockarie told Gullit to remain on the defensive and that Bockarie would send reinforcements.<sup>7321</sup> Later, in a conversation with Yeaten, Bockarie stated that he had given Rambo instructions to put together reinforcements and move to assist the troops in Freetown.<sup>7322</sup>

3291. At one point, ECOMOG cut off the supply lines of the rebel troops in Waterloo. This meant that Rambo and his reinforcements were not able to get through. When Gullit contacted Bockarie to discuss this situation, Bockarie told Gullit to move with the prisoners Gullit had released from Pademba Road Prison at night in order to evade ECOMOG jets. Bockarie told Gullit specifically not to leave the released prisoners, in particular President Momoh, behind in Freetown.<sup>7323</sup> Gullit brought the persons released from Pademba Road Prison into RUF-controlled territory, which then stretched from Lunsar to Kabala, Kailahun and Kono.<sup>7324</sup>

3292. The following day, Gullit called Bockarie again to tell him that his troops could not withstand "the tension" of the ECOMOG assault and had to withdraw from Freetown.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

Bockarie told Gullit that as the troops retreated they should “make the area fearful”. The retreating troops were to destroy everything so that anyone passing in the area after the rebel troops would know they had been there. Gullit told Bockarie that “he would go according to his instruction”<sup>7325</sup> Kabbah estimated that it was less than a week between 6 January 1999, when Gullit initially entered Freetown, and Bockarie’s instruction to Gullit to “make the area fearful”<sup>7326</sup>.

3293. Communication between the radio room in Buedu and the troops in Freetown continued every day. As with other commanders under Bockarie’s command, Gullit reported on the situation on the frontlines to Bockarie.<sup>7327</sup> While Gullit was in charge of the troops attacking Freetown, Bockarie was in charge of the “entire movement”.<sup>7328</sup>

3294. On cross-examination, Kabbah testified that prior to 6 January 1999, during “the period of SAJ Musa and Gullit”, Bockarie told Gullit not to enter Freetown until RUF could send reinforcements, but SAJ Musa and Gullit refused.<sup>7329</sup> Kabbah stated that it was only after that group had reached State House did they contact Bockarie. In fact, the RUF first heard that Gullit’s troops were in Freetown over the BBC.<sup>7330</sup> The RUF knew that Gullit’s troops “never accepted orders and that they were heading for Freetown, so it wasn’t a surprise to us because that was their own mission”.<sup>7331</sup> Kabbah agreed that the move to Freetown was not planned as far as Bockarie was concerned.<sup>7332</sup>

3295. Once Bockarie heard over the BBC about the Freetown invasion, the RUF tried contacting RUF radio stations closer to Freetown to get more information, in particular, from Superman’s radio station, which was closer to the action in Freetown. Later, King Perry came on the air when Gullit ran into trouble and Gullit asked for reinforcements. King Perry explained that he had not contacted Bockarie earlier because SAJ Musa had prevented him from doing so. When Gullit first spoke to Bockarie, there was an argument between them in which Bockarie made it clear to Gullit that he was not happy that Gullit was only contacting him because he needed Bockarie's help. Despite the argument, Bockarie did send reinforcements but those reinforcements only got as far as Waterloo.<sup>7333</sup> Kabbah agreed with the Defence proposition that Gullit only initiated contact with Bockarie when their mission failed. However the witness insisted that Bockarie and the Accused did discuss the attack on Freetown<sup>7334</sup>

3296. Witness TF1-567, who accompanied Issa Sesay's flank in the RUF attack on Kono in December 1998, testified that after the Kono attack, Issa Sesay then went to attack Makeni. Superman arrived from the North, and together with Boston Flomo (a.k.a. Rambo), the RUF was able to capture Makeni. RUF were in Makeni when they overheard on the radio that "the other SLA brothers" had entered Freetown.<sup>7335</sup> TF1-567 testified that the RUF captured Makeni in January 1999.<sup>7336</sup> Once Bockarie heard that the "brothers" had entered Freetown, he instructed Issa Sesay "to try and connect with his brothers in Freetown whereby Gullit was the commander". Sesay in turn instructed Boston Flomo to meet the men in Freetown.<sup>7337</sup> Superman remained in Makeni, but later moved to Lunsar once Flomo had reached Waterloo. Flomo sent a message to Sesay noting that he had reached Waterloo but encountered resistance at Jui Bridge. The witness remained with Issa Sesay in Makeni.<sup>7338</sup>

3297. TF1-567 testified that he spent "some time" in Makeni and then moved back to Kono. Issa Sesay remained in Makeni. The day he returned to Kono, when Gullit's troops had retreated to Waterloo, the witness overheard on the radio that there was infighting between Superman and Issa Sesay.<sup>7339</sup> When Gullit's troops were in Waterloo, the witness travelled with Issa Sesay to Waterloo. Gullit was angry with Sesay for his failure to send reinforcements, as Gullit had requested, forcing Gullit to retreat. Sesay explained that he had tried to send manpower but that the troops had not managed to get past enemy forces. Sesay then suggested that they forget about the past and instead work together to try to recapture Freetown.<sup>7340</sup>

3299. While TF1-567 was in Waterloo with Issa Sesay, Gibril Massaquoi was with Gullit's group. Sesay informed Bockarie of Massaquoi's presence and Bockarie instructed Sesay to arrest Massaquoi and send him to Buedu, explaining that Massaquoi had disobeyed him. However, Superman and other SLAs intervened to prevent the arrest of Massaquoi. This incident took place in 1999, but the witness was not sure which month.<sup>7344</sup>

3300. On cross-examination, TF1-567 testified that while Bockarie was the overall commander when the troops on the outskirts of Freetown attempted to join up with the troops in Freetown, Bockarie did not give the order to invade Freetown.<sup>7345</sup> In response to Defence counsel's proposition that the Freetown attack was not launched by the RUF, TF1-567 responded that the RUF always intended to go to Freetown, and when Gullit went ahead and launched the attack, Bockarie ordered Sesay to reinforce him.<sup>7346</sup> The witness stated that even though Gullit made the initial attack, Gullit was part of the Junta and the AFRC and RUF were working together. There were members of the RUF among the forces going to Freetown.<sup>7347</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3301. Abu Keita testified that when the attack on Freetown occurred, he and Bockarie were in Buedu.<sup>7348</sup> He and Bockarie were listening to the programme “Focus on Africa” on the BBC on 6 January 1999<sup>7349</sup> and heard a commander calling from Freetown announcing that he was in control of the State House.<sup>7350</sup> Keita testified that Bockarie became angry and called Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon, asking them how they allowed anyone other than himself to speak to the BBC. Bockarie then called the BBC on his satellite phone and shot a weapon, telling the BBC that he was at the State House although he was actually still in Buedu.<sup>7351</sup> Bockarie was speaking to various commanders in and around Freetown, including Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon, over the RUF radio network. Bockarie also communicated with Benjamin Yeaten and Joseph Tuah on a satellite phone at night, and Bockarie told the witness he was reporting to them on the status of the operation. The witness did not hear Yeaten giving any instructions to Bockarie.<sup>7352</sup>

3302. Keita testified that during the operation, radio operators “Zedman”, in Buedu, and “Memunatu” and “Sita”, who were stationed in Liberia, monitored ECOMOG radio stations based in Monrovia. If a jet took off from Roberts International Airport, in Monrovia, these operators would call 448 and “the radio operator would ring a bell and everybody would escape”.<sup>7353</sup>

3303. Witness TF1-174, who did relief work during the Sierra Leonean Civil War,<sup>7354</sup> testified that on 28 December 1998<sup>7355</sup> he was introduced to Issa Sesay in Makeni when Sesay’s vehicle pulled up close to where the witness was sitting.<sup>7356</sup> On the same day, he then encountered a black Mercedes Benz with about six persons dressed in black and military attire in the centre of Makeni. They were rebels with guns, in military brown and green shirts. They stopped the witness and one of the men pointed to a vehicle in front of them loaded with young men and women.<sup>7357</sup> According to the witness, the man then stated that “very soon we will hear what will come out of Freetown, even the vehicle ahead was proceeding to Freetown”.<sup>7358</sup> Immediately afterwards, two other vehicles arrived from behind. Inside the vehicles were young men and girls who said that they were heading for Freetown. The three vehicles loaded with young men and girls were ECOMOG trucks which had a usual capacity of about 20-30 people but were packed with up to 90 or 100 people.<sup>7359</sup> The witness could see that those sitting at the back door were armed. When they passed, the witness continued on to meet his wife and children.<sup>7360</sup>

3304. For the weeks after 28 December, the witness saw the People’s Army continuously moving to Kabala, Port Loko to Lunsar, Bumbuna and Freetown. The witness knew this because he saw the rebels loading their vehicles and they would say where they were going or where they were coming back from.<sup>7361</sup>

3305. In early January 1999, the witness listened to the transistor radio everyday and heard some announcements concerning Freetown. On 6 January 1999, he heard about an attack at Waterloo and then that the rebels captured Freetown.<sup>7362</sup> The civilian population of Makeni was asked by the RUF to dance and rejoice because Freetown had been captured. The witness danced because there were repercussions if the civilians refused to do so.<sup>7363</sup>

3306. The Accused testified that the first he knew of the Freetown invasion was on 6 January 1999 at 10.00am, when his national security adviser, Lewis Brown, informed him of the news. The Accused acknowledged that upon his instructions, Brown called Sam Bockarie on the phone. Sam Bockarie stated that he did not know what was going on in Freetown.<sup>7364</sup> One of the Accused’s security personnel then told the Accused that he heard

Bockarie announcing over BBC radio that his men had attacked Freetown.<sup>7365</sup> In order to verify the situation, the Accused again instructed his security personnel to contact Bockarie. Bockarie explained that he only said that on the radio for “morale” and to take “some claim for it”.<sup>7366</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay and Defence Exhibit D-447

3307. Defence witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>7367</sup> confirmed that Gullit was a friend of his, though not a close friend, after they came to know each other in “the days of the AFRC”.<sup>7368</sup> Gullit also gave Sesay a pick-up truck when he went to Freetown.<sup>7369</sup> Sesay testified that he and Gullit were in detention together and that Gullit had told Sesay what he was going to testify before the Special Court. Sesay told Gullit that he should testify about what happened and “should not link the RUF to what RUF did not do or what RUF was not involved in” and denied having an agreement with Gullit to lie for Gullit in his (Sesay’s) RUF trial.<sup>7370</sup>

3308. According to Sesay, Bockarie was willing to work with Gullit who was his friend, unlike SAJ Musa with whom he did not see “eye to eye”.<sup>7371</sup> He stated that when he retreated from Kono, Gullit went to stay with Bockarie in Kailahun<sup>7372</sup> and that Bockarie was “friendly” to him.<sup>7373</sup> Sesay recalled that they became friends “from the time they overthrew”.<sup>7374</sup> During the Junta period, Gullit and Bockarie travelled to The Gambia and Libya together.<sup>7375</sup>

3309. Gullit also became friends with Alfred Brown through a mutual friend, Sullay, before the retreat from Freetown.<sup>7376</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3310. After Gullit arrived in Kailahun, Sesay testified that Bockarie ordered him to take Gullit's diamonds off him, which he did near the Guinean border where Gullit had gone to buy provisions.<sup>7377</sup> When Sesay was confronted on cross-examination with the evidence he had given in his own trial, where he had testified that they had found nothing on Gullit because Gullit had already handed his diamonds over to Bockarie, Sesay re-affirmed his testimony to this Trial Chamber, saying that he did not recall "all the things that I said were events that occurred" or what he had testified previously. He added that the diamonds taken from Gullit were small pieces.<sup>7378</sup>

3311. Sesay testified that Gullit then went from Kailahun to Kono in early May 1998 to collect AFRC members to go join SAJ Musa.<sup>7379</sup> Johnny Paul Koroma appointed Bockarie Chief of Defence Staff, but from May 1998 SAJ Musa, Brigadier Mani, Gullit and others refused to take instructions from Bockarie.<sup>7380</sup>

3312. In July 1998, Bockarie sent three radio operators, Alfred Brown, King Perry and another operator whose name Sesay could not remember, to Koinadugu at a time when SAJ Musa and Gullit were in charge of the area. Bockarie openly said he was sending them to support the operation, but he was actually sending them to spy. The operators remained with SAJ Musa's forces until February 1999.<sup>7381</sup>

3313. The radio operators initially had contact with Bockarie, but that contact ended in September 1998. As a result of infighting between Superman and SAJ Musa, SAJ Musa's group left Superman and joined Gullit in Major Eddie Town in September 1998. When SAJ Musa arrived, he held a planning meeting for the Freetown invasion during which he gave an order banning the radio operators from going anywhere near the radio. If they did, they would be executed. The ban was lifted after SAJ Musa's death in December 1998 so Alfred Brown could contact Bockarie on Gullit's behalf. Gullit and Bockarie then had a discussion.<sup>7382</sup> Alfred Brown and King Perry told Sesay after they withdrew from Freetown in 1999 about the ban that had been placed upon them.<sup>7383</sup> Alfred Brown did try once to reach Bockarie when SAJ Musa's forces attacked Masiaka. SAJ Musa found out and flogged Brown.<sup>7384</sup> There was therefore no communication between SAJ Musa's group and Bockarie from September-December 1998. SAJ Musa regarded himself as head of his own operational area and he did not see Bockarie as part of his army.<sup>7385</sup>

3314. In December 1998, Superman, General Bropleh and Brigadier Mani left Koinadugu and launched an unsuccessful attack on Makeni. When the attack failed, they went to Binkolo. While there, Bockarie instructed them to join the witness's group in Makeni so they could capture Teko Barracks. This was around 24 December 1998.<sup>7386</sup>

3315. Sesay testified that when he and his group arrived in Makeni, Bockarie instructed Brigadier Mani, an AFRC member,<sup>7387</sup> General Bropleh and Superman to join Sesay's group in Makeni so they could capture Teko Barracks.<sup>7388</sup> Sesay, Brigadier Mani, General Bropleh and Superman then coordinated a joint attack on ECOMOG at Teko Barracks.<sup>7389</sup> After the attack, Brigadier Mani and General Bropleh stayed with Sesay in Makeni until March 1999.<sup>7390</sup> Sesay testified that during the attack on Makeni, the RUF had no contact with SAJ Musa. They were unaware that the attack on Freetown was imminent.<sup>7391</sup>

3316. After the Teko Barracks attack, Superman stayed in Makeni for a week before he moved to Lunsar. He stayed in Lunsar until Bockarie gave orders to Superman and Rambo to attack Port Loko.<sup>7392</sup> The attack on Port Loko took place after Gullit's troops attacked Freetown. This attack failed, and Bockarie ordered Superman and Rambo to advance towards Waterloo, where ECOMOG had redeployed after the attack on Freetown. On the way to Waterloo, they captured Masiaka. The RUF fought at Waterloo for two weeks before

MILITARY OPERATIONS

ECOMOG withdrew. By this time, the AFRC was already leaving Freetown.<sup>7393</sup> The RUF forces did not get any closer to Freetown than Waterloo.<sup>7394</sup> Rambo's forces attacked Waterloo as part of the RUF's plan to take Freetown, as the path through Waterloo was the only way to get to Freetown,<sup>7395</sup> not with the intent to link up with or open a way for the AFRC.<sup>7396</sup>

3317. According to Issa Sesay, after SAJ Musa died, Gullit called Bockarie via the radio operator Alfred Brown. He told Bockarie about SAJ Musa's death and the plan to attack Freetown. Bockarie told Gullit that they should wait to attack Freetown and that Bockarie would send reinforcements to meet them at Waterloo. Gullit did not wait and attacked Freetown one or two days later.<sup>7397</sup> Gullit also called Bockarie after they had captured the State House and their troops were at the Congo Cross Bridge and asked Bockarie to send reinforcements and ammunition.<sup>7398</sup>

3318. Sesay stated that when Gullit had taken State House, he did not call Sesay's station or radio. He confirmed that when Gullit had taken State House, Perry Kamara (a.k.a. King Perry) was the RUF operator who facilitated the communication between Bockarie and Gullit, pointing out that when Perry Kamara testified before this Trial Chamber, Kamara did not give evidence that Gullit also contacted Sesay.<sup>7399</sup>

3319. Sesay testified that while a few members of the AFRC were involved in the attack on Kono, the attack was dominated by the RUF. The RUF did not have control over the AFRC at the time of the attack on Freetown and the attacks on Freetown and Kono were two separate operations.<sup>7400</sup> The attack on Freetown was an independent plan by the AFRC. It had nothing to do with the RUF because the RUF was not part of the army.<sup>7401</sup>

3320. Sesay did not continue to Freetown because the attack on Freetown was not planned by the RUF.<sup>7402</sup> Further, when Gullit contacted Bockarie from the State House to request reinforcements, Bockarie refused because Gullit had ignored Bockarie's instruction to wait and "we" did not send reinforcements.<sup>7403</sup> Sesay also did not send any reinforcements to Lunsar or Waterloo.<sup>7404</sup>

3321. Issa Sesay testified that at the time of the Freetown invasion, Bockarie was in Buedu, Superman was in Lunsar and Sesay was in Makeni. The RUF did not take part in the attack on Freetown, and they did not send reinforcements or ammunition to the attacking forces.<sup>7405</sup> The only RUF who were in Freetown were Alfred Brown and King Perry.<sup>7406</sup> Sesay found out about the attack through the media—the BBC, VOA, RFI and the SLBS radio.<sup>7407</sup> Sesay also testified that Rambo was never given an order to meet with Gullit's troops as they entered Freetown, as stated in Exhibit P-149.<sup>7408</sup>

3322. After the attack, the AFRC troops led by Gullit retreated from Freetown to Benguema. The RUF were in Waterloo at this time. There was no unity between the AFRC and the RUF. The AFRC blamed the RUF for their forced retreat from Freetown because the RUF did not reinforce them.<sup>7409</sup> As a result of the problems between the AFRC and the RUF at Waterloo, Bockarie ordered Sesay to withdraw Rambo. Sesay did so and Rambo came to Makeni. When Rambo withdrew, ECOMOG were attacking the AFRC positions in Hastings and advancing towards Waterloo.<sup>7410</sup>

3323. Sesay testified that he went to Waterloo from Makeni after the withdrawal of the AFRC from Freetown.<sup>7411</sup> Bockarie sent Sesay to Waterloo to instruct Gibril Massaquoi, who had just been freed by the AFRC from Pademba Road Prison and had joined Superman and Rambo in Waterloo,<sup>7412</sup> to take the APC politicians who had also been freed from

Pademba Road Prison to go to Makeni to talk with Sam Bockarie.<sup>7413</sup> Massaquoi had refused to come when Bockarie called him after his release from Pademba Road and instead told Bockarie that he was going to operate with Superman.<sup>7414</sup>

3324. Sesay denied going to Waterloo to assist the AFRC in retaking Freetown.<sup>7415</sup> When Sesay arrived at Waterloo, the AFRC were split into two groups. Gullit commanded one group in Benguema and Bazzy commanded the other in Hastings.<sup>7416</sup> There was no unity between the AFRC and the RUF. Neither side would subordinate themselves to the other, so misunderstandings arose and they used to shoot at each other. Due to problems between the AFRC and the RUF at Waterloo, Bockarie ordered Sesay to withdraw Rambo. Sesay did so and Rambo came to Makeni. When Rambo withdrew, ECOMOG were attacking the AFRC positions in Hastings and advancing towards Waterloo.<sup>7417</sup>

3325. Sesay believed that it was doubtful that Bockarie gave the order for the destruction of Freetown. He noted that Gullit, having being born, educated and joined the army in Freetown, would not likely have committed these crimes only on the orders of someone in Buedu. He also pointed out that Bockarie gave no equivalent order for destruction in Makeni, which was also captured by the RUF at this time.<sup>7418</sup> He maintained that the men in Freetown were not answerable to Bockarie; they had their own command structure and when they retreated, reports were not sent to Bockarie. Gullit was not taking orders from Bockarie at the time<sup>7419</sup>

3326. On cross-examination, Sesay confirmed that Bockarie made threats via the media to attack Freetown, around December 1998 or early 1999 in order to secure Sankoh's release from Pademba Road Prison.<sup>7420</sup> However, Sesay maintained that although Bockarie made threats, what happened on the ground was different.<sup>7421</sup> Further, Freetown, as the seat of power, was always the objective of the RUF throughout the Civil War.<sup>7422</sup>

3327. Sesay stated that he heard about the death of SAJ Musa in January when he was in Makeni. Bockarie did not tell Sesay because Bockarie did not believe the news when he first heard it,<sup>7423</sup> and also did not immediately send reinforcements to Gullit. Bockarie told Gullit to wait at Benguema before attacking Freetown. Gullit did not wait so Bockarie never instructed Sesay to send reinforcements to Freetown.<sup>7424</sup> However, Sesay noted that Gullit did not ask for reinforcements when he delivered the news to Bockarie about SAJ Musa's death. Bockarie told him that if that was true, Gullit should wait so that Sesay and Superman's troops would be able to move down from Makeni and the two groups could attack Freetown together.<sup>7425</sup> Sesay agreed that Bockarie essentially volunteered reinforcements when Gullit never asked for any. Sesay explained that Bockarie was willing to work with Gullit, who was his friend, but not with SAJ Musa.<sup>7426</sup>

3328. Bockarie did not send instructions to Sesay to send reinforcements to Gullit. While Rambo did eventually go to Waterloo, this was not until late February 1999.<sup>7427</sup> It was after the failed attack on Port Loko that Bockarie gave instructions for Rambo to go to Waterloo. By that time, Gullit's forces were retreating from Freetown. The intention was then to move on to Freetown. When they got there, however, they could not get through as ECOMOG was in Hastings and Jui.<sup>7428</sup>

air, landing at Lungi, or by road from Guinea, Sesay noted that ECOMOG also had an airfield where they landed their planes at Hastings, although this was being attacked by Gullit's forces in January 1999.<sup>7430</sup> Sesay was later told by Gullit's forces that from Hastings, they moved via the ECOMOG base at Jui and crossed over the Orugu Bridge into Freetown.<sup>7431</sup>

3331. Exhibit D-447 is a map of Sierra Leone on which Issa Sesay indicated the route that the Guinean ECOMOG troops at Port Loko would have taken in providing reinforcements in Freetown in January 1999 and the position that the RUF would have taken to block them.<sup>7434</sup> Issa Sesay testified that if the RUF had intended only to cut off reinforcements to ECOMOG in Freetown then they would have only needed to capture Gberi Bridge, because that would have prevented anyone coming from Port Loko to Freetown; they would not have attacked Port Loko. Sesay explained that Gberi Bridge is located between Masiaka and Gberi Junction over the Rokel River. It is a strategic, long, narrow (single lane/one-way) bridge which, if captured, would cut off the supply line between Port Loko and Freetown.<sup>7435</sup>

3332. Witness John Vincent (a.k.a. Stone One), an RUF commander,<sup>7436</sup> testified that SAJ Musa launched an attack on Freetown on 6 January 1999, an attack in which the RUF did not participate. The witness was not aware of SAJ Musa's movements because the witness was in Jojoima at the time and was not with Musa's group.<sup>7437</sup> SAJ Musa's group had broken off from the RUF with Superman and many ex-members of the SLA. Bockarie had declared the area that SAJ Musa controlled as an enemy zone. If anyone from the RUF was in that particular zone, they were considered an enemy to the RUF.<sup>7438</sup> At the time that SAJ Musa carried out his operation in Freetown in January 1999, the RUF was still occupying Makeni. The RUF made an attempt to also reach Freetown but were unable to get further than Masiaka.<sup>7439</sup> Vincent was not part of the operation at Masiaka and was not aware that the RUF went as far as Hastings.<sup>7440</sup>

3333. Vincent stated that there was no communication between the RUF in Makeni and SAJ Musa during the attack on Freetown but King Perry, an RUF radio man who had joined Superman's group, attempted to pass information onto Bockarie in Buedu. King Perry was flogged by the SLA and escaped.<sup>7441</sup> Vincent noted that some of the RUF authorities, even the witness, believed the Freetown operation to be a joint operation between the RUF and SAJ Musa. He testified:

it was only later that I got to know that RUF did not enter Freetown. So we were all jubilating when that particular invasion took place, but it was only later that we were convinced that they were not part of it.<sup>7442</sup>

3334. Witness Sam Kolley testified that Gullit was a friend to Bockarie but that the incident with the diamonds in Kailahun "caused Gullit to go against Bockarie".<sup>7443</sup>

3335. Kolley testified that on 6 January 1999 he was in Pendembu, and heard about the Freetown invasion on the radio assigned to him. He heard on the radio that Johnny Paul Koroma and Bockarie with some other loyal AFRC soldiers who were in Buedu, such as Leather Boot and Akim, were in Kailahun planning a general attack. They instructed Issa, RUF Rambo, Morris Kallon and other RUF officers in Makeni to move to Freetown.<sup>7444</sup> Kolley understood that SAJ Musa, the SLA commander, was also on his way to Freetown. However, Musa and his troops, which Kolley understood to be more than 1,000, "went on their own", meaning they were no longer part of the junta or RUF forces. His armed men consisted of mainly SLA but also 20-25 RUF members. They went to Waterloo, around Benguema.<sup>7445</sup>

3336. At this time, RUF Rambo was very close to Waterloo. SAJ Musa gave an order to destroy the armaments captured at Benguema before others were able to use them. Kolleh heard King Perry and Alfred Brown, radio operators who were waiting for Rambo in Benguema, communicating with Issa and Rambo on the radio on an open channel that everybody could listen to.<sup>7446</sup> They reported that SAJ Musa called the RUF “the enemy”. Perry and Brown reported that SAJ Musa had drawn a line on the main road to Freetown in Benguema and told RUF members not to cross it or they would be declared enemies.<sup>7447</sup> King Perry himself was beaten on account of passing information and updates on the movements of SAJ Musa’s group to Issa and Bockarie.<sup>7448</sup>

3337. After Issa reported this to Bockarie, Bockarie told Issa to tell RUF Rambo to stop his advance and return. SAJ Musa sent his men to attack Freetown but stayed behind to get rid of the ammunition in Benguema that “they” captured.<sup>7449</sup>

3338. After SAJ Musa’s death, Kolleh heard on the BBC radio Gullit announcing that they had captured Freetown and taken over the State House. Bockarie also told the BBC that his forces captured Freetown, but that was a lie. Bockarie himself was in Buedu (Kolleh knew this since Bockarie could not have moved from Buedu without passing through Manowa Ferry, where Kolleh was located). He heard Gullit later state to the BBC, “No, we are not fighting under the same forces”, and that he was not fighting under Bockarie’s command.<sup>7450</sup> The reason why Bockarie told the BBC that his forces were in control of Freetown was because he was flamboyant, “full of big show”, and a boaster.<sup>7451</sup> Kolleh testified that the closest RUF forces got to Freetown, led by Rambo, was Waterloo and Benguema. Rambo was instructed to stop on the highway near Waterloo to report to Bockarie.<sup>7452</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3339. On cross-examination, Kolleh maintained that SAJ Musa's troops entered Freetown before Musa died at Benguema. He denied that immediately after SAJ Musa's death Gullit asked Bockarie for reinforcements, stating that they were not "friends" at the time.<sup>7453</sup>

3340. Kolleh did not hear of the Superman-led attack on Port Loko in order to take over Lungi. He disputed that in order to control Freetown it was important to take over Lungi airport, as between the two locations there was "a big water", although he confirmed that ECOMOG's helicopters landed in Lungi. He also acknowledged that there was a ferry from Lungi to Freetown. Kolleh did not know whether ECOMOG could send reinforcements to Freetown by flying troops into Lungi.<sup>7454</sup>

3341. Witness Charles Ngebeh testified that on 25 December 1998, the RUF drove ECOMOG out of Makeni and Teko Barracks.<sup>7455</sup> From Makeni the fighters advanced to Lunsar, entering that city sometime during the first two weeks of January 1999. From Lunsar the fighters proceeded to Masiaka, from where they advanced to Waterloo. Ngebeh was with the RUF when they attacked Lunsar but remained based in Makeni. The RUF entered Waterloo at the end of January 1999, although the witness himself rejoined the fighters in Waterloo in the first week of February 1999.<sup>7456</sup>

3342. RUF troops also engaged with Guinean troops in Masiaka.<sup>7457</sup> As a result of persistent attacks led by CO Rambo, the Guineans decided to retreat further to Port Loko. They formed a long convoy to effectuate this plan. That convoy fell into an AFRC and RUF ambush in Lumpa, Waterloo.<sup>7458</sup>

3343. When Ngebeh arrived in Waterloo he met up with AFRC fighters that had been dislodged from Freetown by ECOMOG. Bockarie acknowledged that the returning AFRC fighters had blundered and ordered that they be searched for government property. CO Rambo created a gate through which soldiers returning from Freetown had to pass, and inspected incoming soldiers for dollars taken from ECOMOG forces.<sup>7459</sup> Ngebeh returned to Makeni in March 1999.<sup>7460</sup>

3344. On cross-examination, Ngebeh was questioned concerning the Freetown attack. He testified that on 6 January 1999, the AFRC troops loyal to SAJ Musa led an attack on Freetown. Ngebeh heard that Musa had died in an attack on Benguema before the assault on Freetown took place, but the troops who entered Freetown were under his command ‘whether he died or was alive’, since it was his instructions that his men enter Freetown. The witness was unaware who took over command over the invading force upon Musa’s death since the witness was stationed in Waterloo during this time.<sup>7461</sup> However, “the entire RUF” knew that Musa was responsible for entering Freetown, not the RUF.<sup>7462</sup> No senior commander of the RUF nor RUF soldiers were ‘involved’ in the attack on Freetown.<sup>7463</sup>

3345. Ngebeh stated that the RUF never reached closer to Freetown than Waterloo. The RUF operated out of Waterloo, Benguema and Hastings, but only after the AFRC had already passed through and captured these places.<sup>7464</sup> Ngebeh affirmed that the RUF forces successfully attacked Masiaka on 5 January 1999, after the AFRC had already entered that town.<sup>7465</sup> After entering Masiaka, Rambo commanded the troops in an operation against RDF, a camp between Masiaka and Waterloo. The AFRC had already passed through RDF, and the remaining enemies in that area of the RUF retreated as soon as they heard gunfire, offering no resistance to Rambo’s troops.<sup>7466</sup>

join “our brothers in Freetown”, they were prevented from getting past Jui.<sup>7468</sup> The witness was unable to recall if the RUF attack on Jui occurred as early as 9 January 1999.<sup>7469</sup> Rambo’s RUF forces twice attempted to push the ECOMOG forces out of Jui but were rebuffed both times. At this time the witness was in Hastings assisting Rambo.<sup>7470</sup> The witness explained that he remained based in Makeni but travelled back and forth from Waterloo and Hastings to assist Rambo’s troops.<sup>7471</sup>

3347. The witness responded to Prosecution counsel’s suggestion that he had no idea of the timing of these troop movements by pointing out that (a) the RUF was not part of the group that entered Freetown, so he could not be expected to know the movements associated with that action, (b) while 6 January 1999 was a date associated worldwide with the invasion of Freetown, he could not be expected to recall accurately the dates of the other attacks as a significant amount of time had elapsed between the events in question.<sup>7472</sup>

3348. Ngebeh regarded the portion of Exhibit P-149 describing the 9 January 1999 RUF attacks on Jui and Kossoh Town as ‘false information’, noting that the RUF were unable to establish a foothold in Jui and pass through to Kossoh Town.<sup>7473</sup> The witness was read the portion of the report concerning a joint RUF and AFRC attack on Jui and Kossoh Town, and the retreat of RUF forces from Kossoh Town. According to the witness this was further ‘false information’. The RUF did not know the radio codes used by the AFRC radio operators in Freetown, and therefore could not have agreed to a joint operation.<sup>7474</sup> The only RUF authority that was in Freetown was Gibril Massaquoi, a prisoner at Pademba prison in Freetown on 6 January 1999.<sup>7475</sup>

3349. Witness Martin George testified that after the RUF captured Kono around Christmas 1998, he was assigned to capture Tongo with Akim, Base Marine and Vanicious Varney.

During this period, he heard about the SLA attacking Freetown and the death of SAJ Musa. Martin George believed that the RUF did not take part in the operation to attack Freetown between December 1998 and January 1999. If the RUF participated, he was not aware of it.<sup>7476</sup>

Defence Witness DCT-068

3350. Witness DCT-068 first heard about the 6 January 1999 invasion of Freetown from BBC's 'Focus' segment while he was in Bomaru. There was jubilation among the RUF at hearing the news of the invasion.<sup>7477</sup> DCT-068 did not remember if Bockarie sounded happy when he was on the radio or if Bockarie identified the men who entered Freetown as his.<sup>7478</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-093

3351. Exhibit P-093 is a Report from Brigadier Issa Sesay to Major Sam Bockarie on the take over of Koidu Town. It states that Sesay departed Defence Headquarters on 6 December 1998 for the mission and met Colonel Boston Flomo, commander of the Second Brigade, at Guinea Highway. At a forum held on 11 December 1998 at Guinea Highway, prior to the attack, Colonel Kailondo S. Banya, third Battalion Commander, was appointed the Koidu mission commander. On 16 to 17 December 1998, the mission was carried out and resulted in the successful capture of Koidu Town.<sup>7479</sup> The report states that a further ambush team captured Sewafe and Gold Town on the highway leading to Makeni on 17 December 1998. The report also notes that Masingbe was captured on 22 December 1998 by Colonel Boston Flomo, Magburaka was captured on 23 December 1998, and Makeni was captured on 24 December 1998.<sup>7480</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3352. Exhibit P-149 is a memo from the Overall Intelligence Officer Commander and Black Guard Adjutant to Brigadier Issa H. Sesay, the Battle Field Commander, dated 21 January 1999. The memo states:

Upon hearing the confirm [sic] report that the Strike Force Commander Brigadier Goodisl entered Freetown with his troops, Colonel Boston Flomo (Alias Verndame) was instructed to meet him with his troops.<sup>7481</sup>

3353. The memo reports that on 5 January 1999, the RUF launched a successful attack on Masiaka.<sup>7482</sup> On 6 January 1999, the troops were resting at the Waterloo Displaced and Refugees Camp. On 7 January 1999, they attacked the ECOMOG position at a Secondary School in Waterloo. In the afternoon, “the enemies communicated with us through letter that they doesn’t want to figth [sic] any longer with us”.<sup>7483</sup>

3354. On 8 January 1999, the troops launched a second attack on ECOMOG in Waterloo, causing ECOMOG to evacuate to Port Loko, and that on 9 January 1999, the troops deployed at Hastings. At Hastings, they found ECOMOG in Jui and Kosso Town, but despite daily attacks, were unable to repulse enemy attacks as ECOMOG was being continually reinforced with arms and manpower.<sup>7484</sup>

3355. The memo notes further that, on 15 January 1999:

It was agreed that the men in Freetown and the men at our point were to do joint operation on Jui and Kosso town. The Freetown men schedule to attack Jui and we to attack Kosso town, that night we attacked Kosso town clear the enemies but the Freetown men never turn up, therefore the enemies with the support of the Alpha Jet drove us from Kosso town.<sup>7485</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3356. The memo reports that, on 18 January 1999, Guinean troops from Port Loko attacked Waterloo with shelling and firing. They were able to occupy Waterloo from that evening to the morning, around 3.00am.<sup>7486</sup>

3357. The memo notes that the problems at the frontline include:

- (1) We have not yet connected physically with our brothers in Freetown.
- (2) Menpower [sic] indeed to be engaged on this Urban Warfare.
- (3) The strategic positions of the enemies mainly Port Loko, Lungi, Jui, Kabala are delaying our progress.<sup>7487</sup>

3358. The memo is signed by both “Lieut Raymond Kartewu, Black Guard Adjutant” and “Major Christ A. Mannah, Overall I.O. commander”.<sup>7488</sup>

3359. Exhibit P-149 was part of a series of documents seized from an RUF Office in Kono District in 2001 and admitted through TF1-567. Prosecution witness Tariq Malik, was the Chief of Evidence Unit for the OTP from April 2003 to the date of his testimony in January 2009.<sup>7489</sup> He testified that, based on supporting affidavits, it was clear that the 22 RUF documents were seized by the Special Branch officers and CID officers from an RUF office located in Kono District. Exhibit P-149 is one of those documents.<sup>7490</sup> extended the operation to Port-Loko as far as Waterloo and Kambia axis.

Furthermore, Col Rambo also tried his level best to link up with the other brothers that entered Freetown, but the Freetown operation was not coordinated as the said Commander Black Jah was not going by the instruction from the High Command. When they retreated from Freetown, the BFC met them and told them to present a comprehensive report pertaining the whole Freetown operation, but they deliberately fail to do so.<sup>7492</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-009

3361. Exhibit D-009 is a salute report to Sankoh from Bockarie, dated 26 September 1999, in which Bockarie recounts events after Sankoh left Sierra Leone in November 1996 to the date of the report. It details events after the capture of Makeni in December 1998, and a successful attack on Port Loko led by Boston Flomo (a.k.a. Rambo).<sup>7493</sup> It then states:

Meanwhile, the troops that entered Freetown had been cut off from the rear and were being encircled, leaving them no way out. I was able to coordinate their operations over set and got them to combine their forces and bulldoze from the side accessing them to the mountains through which they took a by-pass to join our troops at Benguema and Waterloo as JOI was occupied by ECOMOG. This is how the troops that entered Freetown were able to retreat. Still they sustained heavy casualties including Steve Bio and SLPP chairman Manakpaka and many others.<sup>7494</sup>

3362. Exhibit D-084 is a Salute Report dated 27 September 1999, from Brigadier Issa H Sesay Battlefield Commander RUF/SL, to the Leader of the Revolution, and was tendered into evidence through cross-examination of Prosecution Witness TF1-168. It states that after Issa Sesay, Rambo and Kallon captured Masingbi, Magburaka and Makeni:

Rambo was instructed to advance and attack Port Loko which he did, deploying his forward defensive at the Port Loko turn-table leading to Kambia. Rambo shared the town with the enemy for seven days. Superman pleaded that, even though Rambo had done well, he, as battle group commander, knew the ground well and should take over the ground. He said that he had received intelligence that the leader had been moved to Lungi and wanted to advance as far as Lungi and rescue the leader.

At this time our forces Freetown were under enemy cut off from the rear and were in danger of being boxed-in and either captured alive or killed.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

Rambo was withdrawn from his operation in Port Loko and instructed to open a through-way to connect with our men in Freetown. Rambo then attacked and captured Masiaka, advanced and captured RDF, and attacked the Guineans at Waterloo, engaging them in combat for four days and four nights.

The Guineans wrote us a letter asking for their safe passage back to Guinea, saying that they were taking their hands out of the war. I replied, denying their request. [...]

A few days later I monitored the sound of heavy bombardment from the direction of Port Loko. On inquiring, I was informed that our troops had dissolved the ground and that the enemy were advancing towards Gberi Junction. I asked for Superman and was informed that he was in Lunsar and not on the ground that he had asked for and been given.

The Guinean convoy bulldozed all the way to Masiaka where my position was also bulldozed. [...]

Superman asked to join Rambo at Waterloo. He sighted the fact that as the SLA Commanders had operated with him before he would be able to consolidate them and exercise command and control over them. Taking into consideration his status as Battle Group and the logic behind his explanations, I gave the OK for Superman to join Rambo in Waterloo.

At Waterloo Superman incited SLA Commanders and soldiers against Rambo and generally did his best to cause a break-down in command on the ground.<sup>7495</sup>

3363. Exhibit P-111 is a BBC News Article, entitled "Africa Battle for Sierra Leone", dated January 6, 1999, reporting that rebels in Freetown had captured the State House government building and a number of other installations. It also records that, in an interview with the BBC, rebel leader Sam "Bukari" referred to "his troops" in Freetown. The article states that earlier, "Gibrill [sic] Massaquoi, a senior rebel leader", also telephoned the BBC to give the rebels' view of the conflict, stating that "rebel arms forces and the Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone were in complete control of the city and taking over the reins of government".<sup>7496</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

The exhibits record Colonel Sesay claiming to be one of the people who entered Freetown in the early hours of 6 January 1999, and stating that “we, the combined forces of the AFRC and the RUF” had “again overthrown the SLPP government”.<sup>7497</sup> Colonel Sesay also states that his forces had occupied the State House, from which he was speaking to the BBC, and were controlling the entirety of Freetown. The exhibits record Colonel Sesay stating that there were 15,000 armed men involved in the Freetown attack and that they had entered Freetown from the “jungle”, the hills overlooking Freetown.<sup>7498</sup> Colonel Sesay notes that the troops met little resistance from ECOMOG on the takeover of the city. When asked about potential ECOMOG troops coming from the airport at Lungi, Colonel Sesay states that the rebels had not yet captured Lungi, but “the motion is on the way to capture Lungi”. On who the new leader of Sierra Leone would be, Colonel Sesay states:

I cannot tell you now. I cannot tell you now, because it is a combined forces, a combined forces. We have the RUF, you have the AFRC, the former Revolutionary council, over<sup>7499</sup>

3365. Colonel Sesay also told White that the most senior brigadier for the operation was Brigadier TAB Yaya, a former PLO2.<sup>7500</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

Deliberations

3368. Before turning to the substance of the parties' submissions, the Trial Chamber sets out some of the undisputed facts concerning the military movements of the various RUF and AFRC contingents in December 1998 and January 1999.

3369. After the Waterworks meeting, on or around 17 December 1998, RUF and AFRC forces led by Issa Sesay, Boston Flomo and others commenced an attack on Koidu Town and succeeded in capturing the town.<sup>7503</sup> Forces led by Boston Flomo from the 2nd Brigade then moved towards the west, capturing Masingbi on 22 December 1998,<sup>7504</sup> while forces led by Issa Sesay captured Magburaka on 23 December 1998.<sup>7505</sup> Troops led by Sesay, Flomo, and others coordinated to capture Makeni on the following day.<sup>7506</sup> At the same time, in late December 1998, troops under the direction of Bockarie mounted unsuccessful attacks on the Segbwema-Daru axis, towards Kenema.<sup>7507</sup> The attacks were led by the 1st Brigade commander, CO Denis (a.k.a. Monkey Brown), and Karmoh Kanneh (a.k.a. Eagle).<sup>7508</sup>

3370. Around early or mid-December 1998, the group of predominantly AFRC fighters based in Northern Sierra Leone, led by SAJ Musa, moved towards Freetown.<sup>7509</sup> On 22 December 1998, this group of rebels attacked Waterloo, about 20 miles from Freetown,<sup>7510</sup> and then attacked Benguema.<sup>7511</sup> On 23 December 1998, SAJ Musa died at Benguema.<sup>7512</sup> Following SAJ Musa's death, Gullit took over as commander of the fighters.<sup>7513</sup> On 3 January 1999, the troops captured Hastings.<sup>7514</sup>

(i) Evidentiary issues

3373. As a preliminary issue, the Trial Chamber notes that in support of its argument that Bockarie “coordinated”<sup>7524</sup> the troops in Freetown, and that those troops took orders from Bockarie, the Prosecution places some weight on documentary and testimonial evidence that during and after the Freetown invasion on 6 January 1999, Bockarie spoke to the BBC and other international media outlets and claimed that it was “his troops” who had entered Freetown and that he had authority over these troops.<sup>7525</sup> The Trial Chamber considers that

He was able to give this timeframe because he and Gullit had already spoken and Gullit had told Bockarie his position at that time, saying that he was “entering” Freetown. When the witness heard on FM radio that the rebels had entered Freetown, Bockarie told the BBC that “he was a man of his word. In this interview, Bockarie said that he had received a radio communication from his commander, Brigadier Gullit, in Freetown. Bockarie also said in the interview that he had received information that Tongo had fallen to the RUF and Junta); Exhibit P-111, “BBC News Article, World: Africa Battle for Sierra Leone, 6 January 1999”, p. 1 (in an interview with the BBC, rebel leader Sam “Bukari” referred to “his troops” in Freetown. The article states that earlier, “Gibril Massaquoi, a senior rebel leader”, also telephoned the BBC to give the rebels’ view of the conflict, stating that “rebel arms forces and the Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone were in complete control of the city and taking over the reins of government”).

MILITARY OPERATIONS

Bockarie's own statements to the international media is of doubtful value in determining whether Bockarie did, in fact, have command over the troops in Freetown, or whether he was working with Gullit. Both Abu Keita and Sam Kolleh testified that Bockarie made a call to the BBC during the Freetown assault in which he claimed to be in Freetown during the January 1999 attack and have control over the forces in the city, when he was in fact in Buedu.<sup>7526</sup> Nevertheless, the evidence does indicate Bockarie's intention to exercise command over the troops in Freetown and his desire to be seen as the leader of the combined forces.

3374. Neither does the Trial Chamber consider, as the Prosecution alleges, that the call made by AFRC member FAT Sesay to the BBC on 6 January that the attackers were a "combined" force of RUF and AFRC indicate the dependence of the Freetown troops on the RUF,<sup>7527</sup> although it does indicate the interest of the fighters in Freetown in being seen as a combined force. It is not disputed that both RUF and AFRC elements were involved in the January 1999 Freetown attack,<sup>7528</sup> and the evidence unequivocally establishes that RUF fighters were amongst the troops that entered Freetown,<sup>7529</sup> just as there were AFRC groups

<sup>7526</sup> Abu Keita, Transcript 23 January 2008, p. 2020 (He and Bockarie were listening to the programme "Focus on Africa" on the BBC on 6 January 1999 and heard a commander calling from Freetown announcing that he was in control of the State House. Keita testified that Bockarie became angry and called Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon, asking them how they allowed anyone other than himself to speak to the BBC. Bockarie then called the BBC on his satellite phone and shot a weapon, telling the BBC that he was at the State House although he was actually still in Buedu); Sam Kolleh, Transcript 1 November 2010, pp. 48468-48471 (Bockarie also told the BBC that his forces captured Freetown, but that was a lie. Bockarie himself was in Buedu. The reason why Bockarie told the BBC that his forces were in control of Freetown was because he was flamboyant, "full of big show", and a boaster); see also Charles Ghankay Taylor, Transcript 6 August 2009, pp. 26227-26228 (One of the Accused's security personnel told the Accused that he heard on Bockarie announcing over BBC radio that his men had attacked Freetown. I cannot tell you now, because it is a combined forces, a combined forces. We have the RUF, you have the AFRC, the former Revolutionary council, over").

<sup>7528</sup> The Prosecution and Defence agreed that "[o]n about 6 January 1999, inter alia, RUF and AFRC forces attacked Freetown" (Admitted Facts and Law, 26 April 2007, Agreed Fact 31). The Defence has indicated that "[t]he admission is simply a factual recognition that there may have been RUF elements that participated in the AFRC attack on Freetown. It says nothing about what the RUF may have done as a cohesive organization, or about whether or not the RUF sent reinforcements to Waterloo or the Freetown environs in the days after the 6 January invasion, etc" (Defence Reply to Prosecution Response to Defence Application for Judicial Notice of Adjudicated Facts from the AFRC Trial Judgement Pursuant to Rule 94(B), 24 February 2009, para. 15).

working with or under the command of Bockarie.<sup>7530</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that the factual matter at issue which is relevant to the responsibility of the Accused is not whether members of the RUF organisation participated in the Freetown assault but the involvement of Bockarie in the Freetown operation after the formulation of the plan designed by Bockarie and the Accused.

3375. For similar reasons, the Trial Chamber does not consider the presence of a group led by O-Five, referred to by the Prosecution as the Red Lion Battalion; two RUF radio operators, Perry Kamara and Alfred Brown; bodyguards of the RUF radio operators; RUF fighters freed from Pademba Road Prison; and other RUF members accompanying Gullit and SAJ Musa's forces to Freetown as conclusive proof of the RUF's contribution to the Freetown.<sup>7531</sup> Various witnesses have testified that some of these persons joined the group led by Gullit and SAJ Musa as part of a group led by O-Five arriving in Colonel Eddie Town around September 1998, including Perry Kamara and Alfred Brown,<sup>7532</sup> while others were RUF members who had gone into hiding after the ECOMOG Intervention but rejoined SAJ Musa's group as they travelled from Koinadugu to Rosos.<sup>7533</sup> These persons joined Gullit and SAJ Musa's group independently of the plan designed by Bockarie and the Accused. Similarly, while it is not contested that prisoners released from Pademba Road became involved in the hostilities in the city,<sup>7534</sup> these individuals included both former SLAs and RUF members.<sup>7535</sup> The evidence indicates that it was the intention of the forces led by Gullit and SAJ Musa to free some prisoners, not a new idea from Bockarie.<sup>7536</sup> While these individuals did contribute to the Freetown attack, the Trial Chamber reiterates that the factual matter at issue is the involvement of Bockarie in the Freetown operation after the formulation of the plan designed by Bockarie and the Accused.

3376. Further, the Trial Chamber notes that in support of its argument concerning a 'reuniting' of the troops under Bockarie's command and the AFRC troops based in the north of Sierra Leone after the death of SAJ Musa, the Prosecution cites evidence from Prosecution and Defence witnesses that the troops under Bockarie's command received the news that Gullit had captured the State with "jubilation".<sup>7537</sup> The Trial Chamber finds that this evidence is not probative of full coordination between Bockarie and Gullit in the initial assault on Freetown, particularly that evidence showing that the positive reaction to the news was induced with threats, or that it stemmed from a belief, which the witness believed to be mistaken, that the Freetown attack was a joint operation between the RUF and SAJ Musa.<sup>7538</sup>

3377. Finally, the Trial Chamber notes that it has taken judicial notice of the following Adjudicated Fact from the AFRC trial:

Following heavy assaults from ECOMOG, the troops were forced to retreat from Freetown. This failure marked the end of the AFRC offensive as the troops were running out of ammunition. While the AFRC managed a controlled retreat, engaging ECOMOG and Kamajor troops who were blocking their way, RUF reinforcements arrived in Waterloo. However, the RUF troops were either unwilling or unable to provide the necessary support to the AFRC troops.<sup>7539</sup> 3378. The Trial Chamber recalls that each of the judicially noticed adjudicated facts from the AFRC Trial<sup>7540</sup> is subject to a rebuttable presumption of truth, and could be challenged by the parties during the course of the trial.<sup>7541</sup> The Trial Chamber considers that by submitting that RUF reinforcements sent by Bockarie arrived in Waterloo before Gullit retreated from Freetown and that they attempted and partially succeeded in connecting with the troops in the city,<sup>7542</sup> the Prosecution has sufficiently challenged the truth of the asserted fact as to require the Trial Chamber's re-consideration of the matters in question.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3379. One of the key arguments raised by the Defence in response to the Prosecution's allegation that Gullit coordinated with and took orders from Bockarie during the Freetown operation is that from around April 1998, when he led a break-away group of AFRC soldiers north to Koinadugu to join SAJ Musa, Gullit did not have a good relationship with and no longer took instructions from Bockarie,<sup>7543</sup> having fallen out over Bockarie's treatment of Johnny Paul Koroma and the AFRC as a whole.<sup>7544</sup> It submits that Gullit left Kailahun under acrimonious circumstances after the RUF took diamonds from him, and describes a "rift" between the men from this point on.<sup>7545</sup>

3380. The Prosecution accepts that from October 1998, when SAJ Musa fell out with Superman and moved to Rosos until SAJ Musa's death at Benguema, SAJ Musa and his group remained outside of Bockarie's control.<sup>7546</sup> However, although the Prosecution concedes that while SAJ Musa did not recognise Bockarie's leadership,<sup>7547</sup> it contends that Gullit himself maintained a cooperative relationship with Bockarie,<sup>7548</sup> having been friends with both Bockarie and Issa Sesay.<sup>7549</sup> The Prosecution maintains that when Gullit was in the Northern Jungle, he continued to communicate with RUF commanders through radio operators,<sup>7550</sup> and through Brigadier Mani, a senior officer of the SLA who had also joined the command of SAJ Musa and Gullit in Kurubonla.<sup>7551</sup> The Prosecution alleges that Gullit briefed Bockarie and Issa Sesay about SAJ Musa's military operations at the time of SAJ Musa's move to Colonel Eddie Town.<sup>7552</sup>

3381. Both Prosecution and Defence witnesses agreed that during the Junta period, Bockarie and Gullit had an amicable relationship. TF1-371 stated that, at least while Gullit was still in Kailahun after the Intervention, Gullit and Bockarie were "very good friends”.<sup>7553</sup> Even Issa Sesay confirmed that Bockarie saw Gullit as his friend “from the time they overthrew”<sup>7554</sup> and was willing to work with Gullit, unlike SAJ Musa with whom he did not see “eye to eye”.<sup>7555</sup>

3382. The Trial Chamber heard consistent evidence of an incident shortly after the Intervention when Bockarie confiscated diamonds in the possession of Gullit, and on some accounts, sent Issa Sesay to Kailahun to forcibly effect this confiscation.<sup>7556</sup> However, witnesses differed as to the effect of this incident on the relationship between Bockarie and Gullit. Several witnesses testified that it led to Gullit’s rejection of Bockarie’s command. Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that while Gullit initially told SAJ Musa that Bockarie had released him from Kailahun because he had told Bockarie that he could settle some disputes that had arisen in Kono between the RUF and AFRC,<sup>7557</sup> later, in a closed-door meeting with Gullit and SAJ Musa, Gullit complained to SAJ Musa about the treatment he had received in Kailahun, and wanted SAJ Musa to “advise him on the next plan”.<sup>7558</sup> Kamara testified that Gullit, along with other AFRC commanders, moved north because they were not happy with the order from Johnny Paul Koroma that they take orders from Bockarie.<sup>7559</sup> Defence witnesses Sam Kolleh and Issa Sesay both confirmed that although Gullit was initially Bockarie’s friend, the incident with the diamonds caused Gullit “to go against” Bockarie.<sup>7560</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

On the other hand, according to TF1-371, relations generally remained cordial and Bockarie only disciplined Gullit by ordering that he remain in Buedu.<sup>7561</sup>

3383. Isaac Mongor testified as to an entirely different reason for Gullit leaving Kailahun, unsupported by that of the other witnesses. Mongor testified that although he was not in Buedu<sup>7562</sup> while Gullit and Bockarie were both there, he heard from Gullit that he and Bockarie had a cordial relationship, and that the reason why Gullit went to join SAJ Musa was to convince Musa to come to Buedu to talk.<sup>7563</sup>

3384. The weight of the evidence suggests that Gullit did leave Kailahun at least partly because he was unhappy with certain aspects of Bockarie's command. Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that although relations between Gullit and Bockarie at Kailahun were 'cordial',<sup>7564</sup> once Gullit left Kailahun for Kurubonla in 1998, communications between the two men were unpleasant; Gullit "attacked" Bockarie verbally and accused Bockarie of having disgraced Johnny Paul Koroma.<sup>7565</sup>

3385. However, regardless of whether Gullit's departure was acrimonious, the Trial Chamber heard consistent evidence that he maintained contact with Bockarie, at least until the arrival of SAJ Musa in Colonel Eddie Town, and that in these communications Gullit updated Bockarie and Bockarie's commanders on operational matters. Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that Gullit spoke to Bockarie and Issa Sesay from around July-August 1998,<sup>7566</sup> informing him on operations in the North and in Gbomsamba. Bockarie promised Gullit his "full support".<sup>7567</sup> Bobson Sesay noted that Gullit communicated with Bockarie before the arrival of SAJ Musa to brief him about his military operations, and he himself was present when Gullit contacted Bockarie via radio after the Kukuna operation. According to Bobson Sesay, whenever they had an operation, Gullit called Bockarie before even informing SAJ Musa.<sup>7568</sup> Bobson Sesay testified that after the Kukuna attack, Gullit also contacted Issa Sesay who from their monitoring appeared to be in the Kailahun axis to explain to him about the “activities” they had undertaken.<sup>7569</sup> Similarly, Perry Kamara, who testified that he was sent by Bockarie to Colonel Eddie Town in August/September 1998 to facilitate communications between Bockarie and Gullit, stated that while he was at Colonel Eddie Town Bockarie would inform them of his movements.<sup>7570</sup> Both Bobson Sesay and Kamara suggested that communications were not possible for some time after Gullit moved north from Kailahun because Gullit’s group lacked the communications capability.<sup>7571</sup>

3386. Foday Lansana also testified that from his position at the signal unit in Koinadugu, he was aware that both Bockarie and Superman would also communicate with Gullit at Rosos.<sup>7572</sup> TF1-516 stated that when Gullit was in the Makeni area, and SAJ Musa and Superman were both in Kabala, Johnny Paul Koroma instructed Gullit and SAJ Musa over the radio to work together with the RUF as a team so that they could recapture Freetown, and that Gullit and Bockarie maintained a “free flow” of communications after this.<sup>7573</sup>

3387. However, the Defence alleges that any allegations of collaboration between the AFRC and the RUF in their attempts to capture Freetown are quashed by the uncontested evidence of the radio communication gag SAJ Musa imposed between his group and the RUF.<sup>7574</sup> Perry Kamara testified that this gag was imposed as soon as Musa arrived at Colonel Eddie Town, and that Musa made clear to Gullit as well as all RUF personnel that they should not communicate to any outsiders. Musa also ensured that no RUF operator operated the radio.<sup>7575</sup>

He said he knew now to whom he would communicate.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3388. It is clear that the communications embargo was defied by the RUF radio operators. Issa Sesay testified that Alfred Brown, another RUF radio operator with SAJ Musa's group, did try once to reach Bockarie when SAJ Musa's forces attacked Masiaka. SAJ Musa found out and flogged Brown.<sup>7576</sup> Mongor confirmed that when Superman had captured Lunsar, Alfred Brown contacted Mongor, telling him that they were in Masiaka, that their next target was Waterloo and that he would contact Mongor again when they arrived there.<sup>7577</sup> Bobson Sesay recalled that following an announcement by Bockarie on international radio concerning specific attacks led by SAJ Musa's group, SAJ Musa was angry with Alfred Brown, one of the RUF radio operators, for giving information to Bockarie.<sup>7578</sup> Defence witnesses Sam Kolleh and John Vincent also testified that Perry Kamara himself was beaten on account of passing information and updates on the movements of SAJ Musa's group to Bockarie.<sup>7579</sup>

3389. However, it is not clear that communications from RUF radio operators to Bockarie after the imposition of the communications ban were conducted with any involvement by Gullit. According to Issa Sesay, Bockarie had sent RUF radio operators Alfred Brown and Perry Kamara to Koinadugu to spy on the forces led by SAJ Musa and Gullit,<sup>7580</sup> which would indicate that Gullit may not have known of or sanctioned their communications with Bockarie, although Sesay testified that Gullit was friends with Alfred Brown from before the retreat from Freetown.<sup>7581</sup>

3390. According to TF1-585, Brigadier Mani used to “mediate” between SAJ Musa’s group and Bockarie.<sup>7582</sup> Foday Lansana also referred to Brigadier Mani as “the co-ordinator who used to settle disputes between the senior military officers”.<sup>7583</sup> However, neither witness suggested that Gullit was actually communicating with Bockarie through Brigadier Mani after the arrival of SAJ Musa. TF1-585 specifically stated that before SAJ Musa died there was no communication between Bockarie and either SAJ Musa or Gullit; she noted that while SAJ Musa headed the group at Rosos, Bockarie only got information about that group through Brigadier Mani, although direct communication resumed after the death of SAJ Musa.<sup>7584</sup>

3391. Notably, Perry Kamara, who was one of the RUF radio operators with SAJ Musa’s group, testified that when he contacted Bockarie on behalf of Gullit after Musa’s death, Bockarie admonished Kamara for not updating him with information. Bockarie then spoke directly to Gullit and reproached him for not informing him when “you were getting ready to take off” even though he had radio operators.<sup>7585</sup> Kamara’s evidence suggests that, whatever the activities of the RUF radio operators, Gullit himself never informed Bockarie of his group’s advance towards Freetown.<sup>7586</sup> As a radio operator who participated in the move from Colonel Eddie Town to Freetown, the Trial Chamber considers Kamara’s evidence to be highly probative of what occurred during that advance.

3392. The Trial Chamber notes that in contrast to Perry Kamara, Foday Lansana suggested that Bockarie was giving instructions to the troops “from Rosos” concerning their advance to Freetown from the point when Sankoh was sentenced in late October 1998. Lansana testified that when Bockarie heard about Sankoh being condemned in Freetown, he instructed the Rosos troops to move on Lunsar and advance on to Freetown, and instructed Superman's troops to attack Makeni and join the troops from Rosos. Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon were instructed to move on Koidu Town and then Makeni.<sup>7587</sup> Lansana testified that he knew where other troops were moving because the groups gave each other "situation reports" on their positions and progress by radio.<sup>7588</sup> However, the Trial Chamber notes that in asserting such coordination before the RUF move to Koidu Town, that is, before the death of SAJ Musa, Lansana's account is inconsistent with that of all other witnesses. The Trial Chamber notes that Lansana did not refer at all to SAJ Musa's role in the move to Freetown, and testified on cross-examination that the troops moving from Rosos were led by Gullit, not SAJ Musa.<sup>7589</sup> Further, Lansana was also inconsistent on some aspects of his testimony.<sup>7590</sup> In light of the evidence of other witnesses, the Trial Chamber considers that Lansana was likely conflating events prior to and after SAJ Musa's death and does not accept that Gullit was taking instruction from Bockarie concerning the advance to Freetown before SAJ Musa's death.

3393. Despite the indications that Gullit was disgruntled about his treatment by Bockarie and that Gullit did not maintain communications with Bockarie after SAJ Musa's arrival at Rosos, oral accounts suggested that at the time of SAJ Musa's death the generally cordial relationship between the two men and their willingness to work together remained largely unaffected. TF1-585 testified that after SAJ Musa's death, Bockarie stated in her presence and in front of other RUF members that the problem was SAJ Musa and as long as SAJ Musa was dead, he and Gullit had no more problems, and also that he trusted Gullit and knew that Gullit would make it to Freetown.<sup>7591</sup> Similarly other witnesses attested to a positive reaction by other RUF commanders on the news of Gullit taking over the leadership of SAJ Musa's group. For example, Isaac Mongor testified that he "felt relieved" and "happy" when he heard that SAJ Musa had been killed because while there was a power struggle between SAJ Musa and Bockarie, Gullit did have a very good relationship with Bockarie and "they were doing things together".<sup>7592</sup> The Defence submits that this evidence is insufficient to suggest that Gullit was amenable to subordinating himself under Bockarie's command, but the Trial Chamber considers nevertheless that the evidence establishes that the relationship between Bockarie and Gullit had not deteriorated to the extent that the Defence suggests. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that nothing suggests that the relationship between Bockarie and Gullit had broken down so irretrievably that it prevented Bockarie and Gullit from working together after the death of SAJ Musa.

Lansana said that it was false that he had heard everything he knew about the

(iii) Resumption of communications after the death of SAJ Musa

3394. The evidence unequivocally shows, and the Defence concedes, that with SAJ Musa's death in or around 23 December 1998, Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) resumed contact with Bockarie.<sup>7593</sup> It is not disputed that Gullit contacted Bockarie when he was at the State House to inform him of the capture of the city and to ask for reinforcements<sup>7594</sup> or that

Bockarie told Gullit that he had instructed Rambo, who was already in Waterloo, to link up with them and provide reinforcements.<sup>7595</sup> However, the Defence denies that this indicates that Gullit's troops were coordinating with Bockarie, noting that Gullit had initially defied Bockarie's instructions to wait for reinforcements, and only called Bockarie from Freetown because his troops were in trouble. The Defence contends that Bockarie argued with Gullit and was angry about the lack of obedience to his instructions.<sup>7596</sup>

3395. Many Prosecution witnesses indicated that, contrary to the Defence's assertion that Gullit contacted Bockarie only once he ran into difficulties, Gullit maintained regular communication with Bockarie and his commanders throughout the assault on Freetown. Perry Kamara, a radio operator who travelled with SAJ Musa and Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) to Freetown and participated in the attack on 6 January 1999,<sup>7597</sup> testified that after SAJ Musa's death, and when Gullit's troops were in Waterloo, he facilitated radio contact between Gullit and Bockarie in which Gullit updated Bockarie on the progress of his troops.<sup>7598</sup> He explained that as soon as the AFRC "authorities" became settled at the State House, they contacted Bockarie to notify him of the capture of State House.<sup>7599</sup> Kamara testified that throughout his time in Freetown, he had a Yeasu radio taken from an NGO office in Freetown, which he and other RUF leaders, including Alfred Brown and Gibril Massaquoi, would use to update Bockarie on the military situation and meetings held in Freetown.<sup>7600</sup> Alimamy Bobson Sesay, a fighter accompanying the group led by SAJ Musa and Gullit from Koinadugu into Freetown, also confirmed that after the death of SAJ Musa, Gullit contacted Bockarie via radio.<sup>7601</sup> Bobson Sesay similarly noted that the first thing Gullit did when they entered the State House was to set up the radio set and call Bockarie to inform him that he had entered Freetown.<sup>7602</sup> As the only two witnesses to have participated in the Freetown attack,<sup>7603</sup> the Trial Chamber considers their evidence to be of particular value as to what occurred during the operation. The Trial Chamber recalls that both Kamara and Bobson Sesay are generally credible witnesses.<sup>7604</sup>

3396. The testimony of Kamara and Bobson Sesay is corroborated by witnesses stationed with Bockarie and commanders in other areas of Sierra Leone. Dauda Aruna Fornie, a radio operator stationed with Bockarie in Buedu in January 1999, confirmed that when SAJ Musa died, Perry Kamara sent a message to Bockarie to inform Bockarie.<sup>7605</sup> Fornie also testified that he saw a message in the message logbook from Gullit telling Bockarie that the AFRC/RUF combatants had captured the State House in Freetown.<sup>7606</sup> That Gullit reported to Bockarie on the capture of the State House and Pademba Road Prison is confirmed by TF1-516.<sup>7607</sup> Mohamed Kabbah, another radio operator stationed in Buedu in January 1999,<sup>7608</sup> testified that on 6 January 1999, he was working in the radio room when Kamara communicated with the Buedu radio station directly from Freetown to inform Buedu that the troops had entered Freetown.<sup>7609</sup> Alice Pyne, who was a radio operator for Superman at Lunsar, testified that on 7 January 1999, she heard radio operators who had gone to Freetown as part of the group that left Rosos, including Perry Kamara,<sup>7610</sup> announce over the radio network that they had entered Freetown,<sup>7611</sup> and after that, Gullit speaking to Bockarie about the capture of the State House.<sup>7612</sup> TF1-585 testified that Gullit informed Bockarie prior to 3 January 1999 that he was “entering Freetown”,<sup>7613</sup> and also contacted Bockarie when they were being pushed out of Freetown by ECOMOG.<sup>7614</sup>

3397. The witnesses agreed that this communication continued regularly throughout the Freetown assault and concerned the progress of the operation. Fornie described the communication between Bockarie and Gullit during the course of the Freetown operation as “frequent” and “constant”, with communications occurring at least hourly.<sup>7615</sup> The communication generally concerned requests from Gullit for more materiel and reinforcements for further advances while Bockarie sought updates from Gullit about progress in Freetown.<sup>7616</sup> Kabbah noted that communication between the radio room in Buedu and the troops in Freetown occurred daily,<sup>7617</sup> and that Perry Kamara would inform Buedu about troop movements and the security situation in Freetown.<sup>7618</sup> Similarly, Foday Lansana, a radio operator stationed in Lunsar with Superman throughout the Freetown attack,<sup>7619</sup> testified that Gullit would communicate with Bockarie on a daily basis, and that these communications were “uncountable”.<sup>7620</sup> Isaac Mongor, a commander at the Kailahun flank,<sup>7621</sup> testified that he was monitoring the radio while the troops were in Freetown and that during the attack Gullit communicated with Bockarie frequently, at half-hourly intervals.<sup>7622</sup> According to Perry Kamara, Gullit used to transmit messages to Bockarie concerning “whatever activities that was going on”.<sup>7623</sup>

3398. Evidence also indicates that aside from Bockarie, Gullit was in communication with Bockarie’s commanders, including Boston Flomo (a.k.a. Rambo), Superman, and Issa Sesay.<sup>7624</sup> Fornie testified that the communications between Gullit and these commanders was very frequent, occurring about two or three times an hour.<sup>7625</sup> Bobson Sesay noted that Issa Sesay, Boston Flomo (a.k.a. RUF Rambo), Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) and Morris Kallon were all in “constant” communication with the forces in Freetown.<sup>7626</sup> Lansana testified that he monitored communications between Bockarie, Gullit, Superman, Issa Sesay, and Boston Flomo during the invasion.<sup>7627</sup> Lansana explained that during the Freetown invasion, Gullit and other commanders would send a report regarding which positions were occupied by the Junta or the RUF troops. Superman would then communicate with his own bodyguards who were with the troops in Freetown to confirm the information from Gullit was correct.<sup>7628</sup> Komba Sumana also testified that during his time in Makeni in December 1998, Five-Five made a call to Superman stating that SAJ Musa had died and they wanted reinforcements.<sup>7629</sup>

Chamber accepts that during the Freetown invasion, Bockarie assisted the commanders in Freetown by transmitting “448 messages” to the fighters in the capital.

3400. In assessing the reliability of the evidence concerning these communications, the Trial Chamber notes that the bulk of the supporting evidence was adduced from radio operators and fighters stationed with Gullit, Bockarie and commanders under Bockarie’s authority whose role it was to monitor the relevant communications. The Trial Chamber places particular value on the evidence of Perry Kamara, who personally monitored and facilitated conversations between Bockarie and Gullit and recorded relevant information in a logbook.<sup>7638</sup> Similarly, Dauda Aruna Fornie was monitoring the radio during the day of the initial entry into Freetown and throughout the operation, transmitting received messages to front line commanders.<sup>7639</sup> A number of witnesses testified that they were present in the room when communications with Gullit occurred. For example, Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that he was present on several occasions when Gullit contacted Bockarie via radio.<sup>7640</sup> The Trial Chamber notes the testimony of some radio operators that where they were not present during the relevant communications, they read those messages in radio log books in which messages were recorded.<sup>7641</sup> news of SAJ Musa's death over the radio, TF1-371 stated that the direct contact between Gullit and Bockarie of which he was aware took place when Gullit was already in the State House.<sup>7642</sup> The Trial Chamber also notes that the evidence that Gullit spoke directly with Issa Sesay is contested by Sesay himself, who asserted that when Gullit had taken State House, he did not call Sesay's station or radio and noted that even Perry Kamara (a.k.a. King Perry) did not give evidence that Gullit contacted both Sesay and Bockarie.<sup>7643</sup> The Trial Chamber also recalls its finding that the evidence of Issa Sesay must be approached with caution,<sup>7644</sup> and notes that he had an interest in minimising his own role in the events in Freetown of January 1999. The omission of any such communications in Kamara's evidence is not indicative that they did not occur. In light of the evidence from Fornie, Lansana and Bobson Sesay, who also participated in the January 1999 operation, the Trial Chamber does not consider Issa Sesay's denial credible. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that Gullit maintained frequent and daily contact with Bockarie throughout the Freetown operation to discuss the ongoing military situation in the capital.

(iv) Gullit's failure to heed Bockarie's instruction to wait for reinforcements

3402. Concerning Gullit's initial failure to heed Bockarie's instruction to wait for reinforcements, the Trial Chamber notes that five witnesses provided an account of the conversation between Gullit and Bockarie after SAJ Musa's death and subsequent events.

3403. Bobson Sesay testified that it was Gullit who initiated the contact with Bockarie after SAJ Musa's death to request more reinforcements.<sup>7645</sup> Bockarie assured him that Issa Sesay and Denis Mingo from Kono and Makeni would join them in the advance on Freetown,<sup>7646</sup> but that they were at the same time making targeted attacks to weaken ECOMOG and prevent the deployment of enemy reinforcements to Freetown.<sup>7647</sup> According to Bobson Sesay, Gullit moved to Hastings Hill around Freetown Highway to wait for reinforcement.<sup>7648</sup> He contacted Issa Sesay who briefed Gullit about the movement of RUF and the intention to enter Freetown together, at which point Gullit confirmed that he would still wait for the reinforcement.<sup>7649</sup> Gullit also contacted Superman for a similar update concerning the movements of the troops led by Superman, Brigadier Mani, and Morris Kallon.<sup>7650</sup> Bobson Sesay testified that he was present during Gullit's conversations with Bockarie and Sesay.<sup>7651</sup> While Bobson Sesay did not explicitly address why Gullit ultimately entered Freetown without those reinforcements, his evidence suggests that Gullit believed it was militarily necessary. He testified that it was only after waiting for some time, and having contacted Issa Sesay and Superman, that Gullit instructed his troops to advance towards Hastings, having seen ECOMOG helicopters bringing reinforcements to that area.<sup>7652</sup>

3404. Perry Kamara corroborated Bobson Sesay's evidence that it was Gullit who initiated the contact with Bockarie after the death of SAJ Musa. Kamara testified that after Musa's death, Gullit and other persons said that they should seek his advice and "[w]hatever he said we would tell him to accept, so that we would work together again". When Gullit contacted Bockarie, after reproaching Gullit for failing to inform him of the move towards Freetown,<sup>7653</sup> Bockarie asked Gullit to wait for Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Superman and Rambo to join him before entering Freetown. These commanders at that time had passed Lunsar and were moving to Masiaka.<sup>7654</sup> Kamara noted that Gullit summoned a short meeting to discuss the proposal with other AFRC officers, and at the meeting, it was decided by a majority that they should not wait for Bockarie's reinforcements, and "whenever the other groups came they would join us".<sup>7655</sup>

an advantaged position in relation to ECOMOG and it was strategically necessary to advance forward.<sup>7656</sup> On cross-examination, Fornie affirmed that coordination between Bockarie and Gullit began before the Freetown invasion, that Gullit asked Bockarie for reinforcements before the Freetown attack, and that the only reason that the RUF troops had not arrived on time was because of the poor conditions of the roads.<sup>7657</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls that Fornie is also a credible witness.<sup>7658</sup>

3406. Two other Prosecution witnesses also testified that Gullit did not wait for reinforcements. According to Mohamed Kabbah, prior to 6 January 1999, during “the period of SAJ Musa and Gullit”, Bockarie told Gullit not to enter Freetown until RUF could send reinforcements, but SAJ Musa and Gullit refused,<sup>7659</sup> and only after their group had reached State House did they contact Bockarie.<sup>7660</sup> Kabbah stated that the RUF knew that those troops “never accepted orders and that they were heading for Freetown”,<sup>7661</sup> and agreed that the move to Freetown was not planned as far as Bockarie was concerned.<sup>7662</sup> Isaac Mongor stated in examination-in-chief that Gullit did not wait for reinforcements because he realised that there would be a delay in their arrival.<sup>7663</sup> However, on cross-examination, when Mongor was questioned on a prior statement made to the Prosecution that he understood that the Freetown invasion was largely an AFRC project.<sup>7664</sup> In response to Defence counsel’s suggestion that it was SAJ Musa and Gullit’s idea to attack Freetown in January 1999, Mongor explained that “if the RUF had not been attacking all the other places those men wouldn’t have been able to get inside”; “it was not just the AFRC” and “the group that moved for the Freetown invasion many of them were AFRC men who were soldiers. They refused to wait for the RUF to join them. They were just doing it by themselves”.<sup>7665</sup>

3407. Finally, and contrary to the evidence of Bobson Sesay, Issa Sesay testified that Gullit did not ask for reinforcements when he delivered the news to Bockarie about SAJ Musa’s death. Rather, Bockarie did not believe the news, but told Gullit that if it was true, Gullit should wait so that Sesay and Superman’s troops would be able to move down from Makeni and the two groups could attack Freetown together.<sup>7666</sup> Sesay agreed that Bockarie essentially volunteered reinforcements when Gullit never asked for any.<sup>7667</sup> Sesay stated that Gullit did not wait and attacked Freetown one or two days later.<sup>7668</sup> Sam Kolleh also denied that after SAJ Musa’s death Gullit asked Bockarie for reinforcements, stating that they were not “friends” at the time.<sup>7669</sup>

3408. Recalling its finding that it had no general reservations concerning the credibility of Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Perry Kamara,<sup>7670</sup> the Trial Chamber considers the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Perry Kamara, who both accompanied the group led by SAJ Musa and Gullit from Koinadugu into Freetown and provided direct and detailed evidence of what occurred from SAJ Musa’s death to the group’s entry into Freetown,<sup>7671</sup> to be of significant weight. The Trial Chamber notes that there are some divergences between the two accounts. First, Bobson Sesay did not refer to the meeting that Kamara described at which Gullit’s troops decided that they should not wait for Bockarie’s reinforcements. Further, Bobson Sesay testified that Gullit contacted Bockarie to discuss the need for reinforcements,<sup>7672</sup> while Kamara gave evidence that Gullit responded to Bockarie’s advice to wait for reinforcements and ammunition by saying that he did not need ammunition, and that the AFRC officers who voted to advance forward ultimately did not consider that they required reinforcements.<sup>7673</sup> The Trial Chamber considers the discrepancy concerning the meeting minor, given that Bobson Sesay was neither asked about any such meeting nor to explain the impetus for the decision to move onto Freetown.

3409. In relation to whether Gullit asked Bockarie for reinforcements, the Trial Chamber notes that Kamara did not say that Gullit rejected the need for reinforcements, he rejected the need for ammunition.<sup>7674</sup> Further, when the meeting was held to discuss Bockarie's proposal, Gullit's forces did not reject the idea of reinforcements; rather, it was decided that "whenever the other groups came they would join us".<sup>7675</sup> The evidence of Bobson Sesay and Kamara converge on the two most important aspects: first, both witnesses stated that it was Gullit who initiated the contact with Bockarie—Bobson Sesay testified that this was to seek reinforcements, while Kamara testified that it was to seek advice; second, neither suggested, as the Defence sought to argue, that by moving forward to Freetown without Bockarie's reinforcements, Gullit was rejecting either Bockarie's authority or his offer of assistance. On their evidence, Gullit was receptive to the idea of reinforcements, but military exigencies dictated a more immediate advance into Freetown. On cross-examination, Kamara made clear that he did not believe that this was disobedience to Bockarie; rather, Gullit exercised his discretion and judgement as to whether those reinforcements were necessary. Kamara pointed out that, on capturing the State House, Gullit duly reported to Bockarie.<sup>7676</sup> Moreover, according to Kamara, before the call to Bockarie was made, Gullit's forces decided that "[w]hatever [Bockarie] said we would tell him to accept, so that we

Well, I cannot particularly refer to that as disobedience, but he said because of the manpower you have and the command structure you shouldn't enter Freetown. But the man had the idea that he had enough manpower and forces so that he could enter Freetown and that was a discretionary job. So the man decided to enter Freetown and when he entered Freetown he duly informed Mr Bockarie that he has entered Freetown. Q. Bockarie had given an order not to proceed into Freetown. Correct? A. Yes. The order had a reason and that is what I'm saying. The order had a reason, because of the manpower and strength and materials. But some other people didn't even think that we were strong enough to enter Freetown, so therefore they said we will enter Freetown and when we get to Freetown we will inform him and that was what happened. When we entered Freetown the AFRC informed him that we have entered Freetown and he didn't give any negative comment about that").

MILITARY OPERATIONS

would work together again".<sup>7677</sup> Kamara also believed that if Bockarie's reinforcements had met Gullit outside Freetown before 6 January 1999, they would have entered Freetown together.<sup>7678</sup> According to Bobson Sesay, when Gullit called Bockarie after entering the State House, he stated that he was still waiting for Bockarie's reinforcements.<sup>7679</sup>

3410. The evidence of Dauda Aruna Fornie and Isaac Mongor's evidence on examination-in-chief also support the idea that Gullit did not wait for Bockarie's reinforcements due to those reinforcements being unduly delayed, rather than as a refusal of Bockarie's support. Dauda Aruna Fornie also confirmed that Gullit requested reinforcements from Bockarie before the commencement of the 6 January attack.<sup>7680</sup>

3411. The evidence of Mongor in cross-examination, Mohamed Kabbah and Issa Sesay are somewhat inconsistent with that of Bobson Sesay, Fornie and Kamara. On Issa Sesay's evidence, the Trial Chamber again recalls its finding that the evidence of Issa Sesay must be approached with caution,<sup>7681</sup> and notes that he had an interest in minimising his own role in the events in Freetown of January 1999. The Trial Chamber also notes that he was not privy to the conversation between Bockarie and Gullit, and only heard about the death of SAJ Musa and the subsequent communication from Bockarie in January when he was in Makeni.<sup>7682</sup> In relation to Sam Kolleh's evidence, the Trial Chamber considers that his testimony concerning what occurred in the lead-up to Freetown contained a number of inaccuracies. Notably, Kolleh maintained that SAJ Musa's troops entered Freetown before Musa died at Benguema.<sup>7683</sup> Further, Kolleh had little foundational basis for his testimony that Gullit did not ask for reinforcements; he did not claim to have heard the conversation between Gullit and Bockarie, and he was in Pendembu at the beginning of 6 January 1999, not with Bockarie or Gullit.<sup>7684</sup> In light of contradictory evidence from other witnesses, the Trial Chamber does not find the evidence of Issa Sesay and Sam Kolleh that Gullit never asked for reinforcements credible.

3412. Concerning Kabbah and Mongor's evidence, the Trial Chamber considers it is not clear whether the two witnesses are describing events that occurred after SAJ Musa's death. Kabbah, in particular, stated that the instruction from Bockarie to wait took place during "the period of SAJ Musa and Gullit", and affirmed that both SAJ Musa and Gullit refused. He was next questioned by Defence counsel on SAJ Musa's ban on his group maintaining radio contact with Bockarie,<sup>7685</sup> which, as noted above, was lifted after Musa's death. Similarly, while Mongor in examination-in-chief was asked explicitly concerning the communication between Bockarie and Gullit after SAJ Musa's death, his evidence on cross-examination was elicited on questioning about his prior statement that the Freetown invasion was generally an AFRC project. It is possible that the witnesses may have conflated SAJ Musa's initial refusal to join in Bockarie's plan to attack Freetown from the Waterworks meeting<sup>7686</sup> with Gullit's later failure to wait for Bockarie's reinforcements. In any case, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that their evidence as to the troops led by Gullit and SAJ Musa refusing to wait for the RUF relates specifically to the period after the death of SAJ Musa.

3413. Accepting the evidence of Bobson Sesay and Kamara, as corroborated by Dauda Aruna Fornie, the Trial Chamber finds that by advancing to Freetown from Waterloo and Benguema without Bockarie's reinforcements, Gullit was not rejecting either Bockarie's authority or his offer of assistance.

3414. The Prosecution goes further to contend, on the basis of Perry Kamara's evidence, that even though Gullit made his decision to enter Freetown without waiting for reinforcements from Bockarie, he only did so knowing that the RUF were in Makeni moving with reinforcements towards Freetown and in a position to block further ECOMOG troops moving towards the capital.<sup>7687</sup> The Trial Chamber acknowledges that there is evidence that Bockarie did discuss with Gullit targeted attacks by the RUF to prevent the deployment of enemy reinforcements to Freetown.<sup>7688</sup>

This was "an operation that was planned" and "the strategy that we used").

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3415. In relation to Bockarie's reaction to Gullit's failure to wait for reinforcements, the Defence placed emphasis on evidence from Mohamed Kabbah that the first the RUF heard of Gullit's entry into Freetown was from the BBC, that it came as a surprise to the RUF when Gullit's group entered Freetown, having heard nothing from them until they reached the State House, and that Kabbah believed the entry into Freetown was an independent mission of Gullit's troops.<sup>7689</sup> Kabbah also testified that Bockarie and Gullit argued during this communication over Gullit's alleged disobedience to Bockarie's orders.<sup>7690</sup> According to the Defence, this belies the Prosecution suggestion that the RUF was involved in the Freetown invasion.<sup>7691</sup>

3416. Certainly, the evidence from Kamara that Bockarie told Gullit to delay entering Freetown "for the command structure" indicates Bockarie was concerned about maintaining his authority over the troops led by Gullit.<sup>7692</sup> That there were tensions between Bockarie and Gullit during the hostilities in Freetown is also acknowledged by Dauda Aruna Fornie, who noted that when he heard one of the troops who had entered Freetown on the BBC, Bockarie became concerned that Gullit would take power in Freetown on his own.<sup>7693</sup>

3417. However, the evidence does not support the Defence contention that coordination between Bockarie and Gullit broke down at this point. Perry Kamara specifically disagreed with the suggestion of Defence counsel that Bockarie was dissatisfied with the troops entering Freetown without waiting.<sup>7694</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that both Kabbah and Fornie indicated that despite these tensions, Bockarie promised Gullit that he would send reinforcements to Freetown.<sup>7695</sup> The Trial Chamber also considers significant the evidence of TF1-371, a senior member of the RUF, that while he considered that the decision of the AFRC to enter Freetown in January 1999 without waiting for the RUF to be hasty, he did not consider the division to be serious.<sup>7696</sup> Similarly, Isaac Mongor conceded that throughout the relationship between the RUF and AFRC there were problems but he believed that these problems were manageable.<sup>7697</sup>

3418. Further, as the Trial Chamber has found above, the radio room in Buedu and the troops in Freetown communicated frequently during the assault on the capital concerning strategic matters.<sup>7698</sup> Fornie attested to direct communication between Boston Flomo (a.k.a. RUF Rambo) and Gullit in which they spoke about how their forces would meet.<sup>7699</sup> The submission that coordination between Bockarie and Gullit did not progress beyond Gullit's initial call to Bockarie is also belied by the evidence, examined by the Trial Chamber below, that continued attempts were made to facilitate the entry into Freetown of troops under Bockarie's command.

(v) Attempts at coordination and the entry into Freetown of Rambo Red Goat

3419. Evidence indicates that Bockarie continued to order his troops to connect with the troops in the capital during the Freetown assault.<sup>7700</sup> Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that he monitored a direct conversation on 6 January 1999 between Gullit and Bockarie in which Bockarie told Gullit to try to coordinate with Rambo and General Issa concerning reinforcements so that Rambo would move faster and meet Gullit in Freetown.<sup>7701</sup> In cross-examination, Fornie was questioned about a prior statement in which he stated that prior to the Freetown invasion, there was communication but no coordination between the AFRC and RUF,<sup>7702</sup> and that it was the AFRC who attacked Freetown.<sup>7703</sup> However, Fornie explained that when he was first interviewed, he still believed that he himself was at risk of arrest, and therefore tried to downplay the degree of the RUF's involvement in the Freetown invasion and later told the Prosecution that his earlier statements were incomplete.<sup>7704</sup> Fornie recalled that he added in a later statement that there was direct coordination between the AFRC and RUF after the death of SAJ Musa<sup>7705</sup> which begun in Benguema and continued through the Freetown attacks.<sup>7706</sup>

3420. Recalling that Fornie is a generally credible witness,<sup>7707</sup> the Trial Chamber accepts his explanation of this inconsistency, and notes that his testimony is supported by a number of other witnesses. Perry Kamara testified that in reaction to news that Gullit's forces were experiencing difficulties in Freetown, Bockarie sent a message that the troops should move to Waterloo and join fighters led by Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Denis Mingo (a.k.a. 3421. A further two witnesses testified that fighters led by Issa Sesay, Superman and others in Makeni headed to Freetown. Komba Sumana testified that after the capture of Makeni in 1998,<sup>7711</sup> Issa told the fighters that they were to reinforce the forces in Freetown,<sup>7712</sup> and he and other fighters travelled on a truck to Lunsar while two other trucks went on towards Freetown. According to the witness's friend, some of the fighters were able to bypass ECOMOG and enter Freetown.<sup>7713</sup> TF1-174 also testified seeing Issa Sesay in Makeni on 28 December 1998 and then, shortly afterwards, RUF or AFRC fighters who informed the witness that they were heading towards Freetown.<sup>7714</sup>

3422. The Defence submits that the reinforcements sent by Bockarie did not get any closer to Freetown than Waterloo,<sup>7715</sup> and the evidence largely supports this proposition, with most of the attempts by the forces commanded by Boston Flomo to enter Freetown being unsuccessful.<sup>7716</sup>

3423. However, the evidence documents one partly successful attempt by Bockarie to organise for Boston Flomo to join up with Gullit's forces. Exhibit P-149, a memo from the Overall Intelligent Officer Commander and Black Guard Adjutant to Issa Sesay, dated 21 January 1999, notes that on 15 January 1999, "it was agreed that the men in Freetown and the men at our point were to do joint operation on Jui and Kosso town", but "the Freetown men never turn up".<sup>7717</sup> Exhibit P-149 was adduced through TF1-567, who testified that when he was stationed at Waterloo in early 1999 with Issa Sesay, he was in charge of receiving reports from various securities,<sup>7718</sup> and that Exhibit P-149 was one of those reports.<sup>7719</sup> TF1-567, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be generally credible,<sup>7720</sup> affirmed that Issa Sesay instructed Boston Flomo to meet with Gullit's troops and that Flomo's troops in Hastings attempted to join up with the troops in Freetown in the planned operation to attack Kossoh Town, but failed to do so.<sup>7721</sup> TF1-567's evidence is also corroborated by Perry Kamara, who testified that in reaction to receiving news that Gullit's troops were facing increasing pressure from ECOMOG, Bockarie sent a message that in order to "clear the route" for the troops led by Kallon and Sesay to enter Freetown, Gullit's men had to attack Kossoh Town with Superman's group.<sup>7722</sup> Kamara also confirmed that Gullit did not ultimately send troops to Kossoh Town,<sup>7723</sup> explaining on cross-examination that this was because Gullit was unable to assemble men to receive the reinforcements, his forces being scattered across the city.<sup>7724</sup>

3424. However, according to Perry Kamara, the troops waiting at Waterloo did attack Kossoh Town. Although they were unable to capture it, an AFRC "strong fighter" known as Idrissa Kamara (a.k.a. Rambo Red Goat) from the group at Waterloo was able to gather a smaller contingent, bypass ECOMOG and join the troops in Freetown at Kissy Road.<sup>7725</sup> Perry Kamara testified that the troops led by Rambo Red Goat and Striker were part of the troops that remained behind in Freetown after Gullit retreated with the civilian brigade, and Rambo Red Goat and Striker's troops carried out Gullit's orders to make the area fearful.<sup>7726</sup>

3425. Alimamy Bobson Sesay, also with the troops in Freetown, corroborated the key aspects of Perry Kamara's testimony. Bobson Sesay stated that during the second week of January, while the troops were still at the State House, RUF Rambo communicated to Gullit that he was preparing reinforcements to join Gullit, stating that a former SLA member known as Rambo Red Goat, was advancing together with Superman and others towards Freetown.<sup>7727</sup> RUF Rambo explained that he had received the order to send these reinforcements from Bockarie.<sup>7728</sup> The witness explained that in the conversation RUF Rambo stated that he had moved with Issa Sesay and SLA Rambo as far as Hastings, but that RUF Rambo noted that the reinforcements were still afraid, as they did not believe that SAJ Musa was dead.<sup>7729</sup> However, Bobson Sesay noted that despite this fear, some men, led by Rambo Red Goat, were sent to join Gullit's troops in Freetown.<sup>7730</sup> Rambo Red Goat arrived some time before the third week of January, and Gullit appointed the witness and Colonel Eddie to receive Red Goat from Allen Town.<sup>7731</sup>

3426. In cross-examination, the Defence sought to challenge the credibility of Bobson Sesay's evidence concerning the reinforcements brought by Red Goat, pointing out a prior statement in which Bobson Sesay had stated that when the "reinforcements" arrived, they "only saw one Colonel Rambo also called Red Goat" and that Red Goat told them that the other men he came with remained behind fearing that SAJ Musa was still alive.<sup>7732</sup> However, Bobson Sesay maintained that Red Goat did bring 50 fighters to Freetown but that there were more that had not joined them and insisted that when he said "one Colonel Rambo" he did not mean there was only one man.<sup>7733</sup> The Trial Chamber considers this a plausible explanation of his words, noting in particular the practice of witnesses of introducing persons for the first time in their testimony as "one so-and-so".<sup>7734</sup>

3427. TF1-375, who was deployed with Superman's group on the outskirts of Freetown during the attack, testified that reinforcements led by Idrissa Kamara joined Gullit's troops in Freetown around the time that Gullit's forces took over the State House.<sup>7735</sup> TF1-375 stated that at Waterloo, Superman, Issa Sesay, Komba Gbundema and other senior officers decided that RUF Rambo should take a group to attack Hastings and get across the bridge to go to Freetown to join their “brothers”.<sup>7736</sup> Issa Sesay appointed an AFRC commander known as Rambo Red Goat to lead the group that went to Freetown because, as Sesay stated, Rambo Red Goat was once an SLA soldier and “knew his brothers in the city well”.<sup>7737</sup> According to TF1-375, Red Goat’s group was able to enter Freetown by the way of a back road.<sup>7738</sup> He testified that later he monitored a conversation in which Red Goat called the troops on the outskirts of Freetown to inform them of what was happening inside the city.<sup>7739</sup>

3428. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the evidence of TF1-375 must be considered with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>7740</sup> In this context, however, the Trial Chamber considers his evidence to be amply corroborated by Perry Kamara and Bobson Sesay, who were both inside Freetown during the January 1999 assault. The Trial Chamber notes that Bobson Sesay was present at the conversation in which RUF Rambo communicated to Gullit that he was sending Red Goat to join Gullit on Bockarie’s orders.<sup>7741</sup> The evidence of TF1-375, Perry Kamara and Bobson Sesay is also consistent with TF1-371’s testimony that during the AFRC’s retreat, Boston Flomo (a.k.a. “Rambo”), already in Waterloo, was successful in linking up with the AFRC troops on Bockarie’s instructions.<sup>7742</sup>

3429. The evidence concerning Bockarie ordering Issa Sesay to reinforce the troops in Freetown is contradicted by Issa Sesay, who testified that Bockarie never instructed him to send reinforcements to Freetown.<sup>7743</sup> He asserted that while Rambo did eventually go to Waterloo, this was not until late February 1999.<sup>7744</sup> By that time, Gullit’s forces were retreating from Freetown.<sup>7745</sup> Sesay testified that when Gullit contacted Bockarie from the State House to request reinforcements, Bockarie refused because Gullit had ignored Bockarie's instruction to wait previously in Benguema and that, as a result, Bockarie did not send troops to reinforce the AFRC in Freetown.<sup>7746</sup> Sesay denied sending any reinforcements to Lunsar or Waterloo.<sup>7747</sup> Sesay also testified that he had never seen P-149 prior to his trial<sup>7748</sup> and that he believed the information set out in it to be false,<sup>7749</sup> raising a range of issues concerning the accuracy of the contents of the document.<sup>7750</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that Defence witness Charles Ngebeh also regarded the portion of Exhibit P-149 describing the 9 January 1999 RUF attacks on Jui and Kossoh Town as 'false information', stating that the RUF did not work with the AFRC to attempt an attack on Jui and Kossoh Town.<sup>7751</sup>

3430. According to Issa Sesay, Idrissa Kamara (a.k.a. Rambo Red Goat) was part of the AFRC group led by Brigadier Mani,<sup>7752</sup> which had left Bockarie's command to join SAJ Musa in the Koinadugu District in around August 1998. Sesay testified that Brigadier Mani did not take instruction from Bockarie from February 1998 until 1999 after the Lomé Accord.<sup>7753</sup> According to Sesay, in late 1998, there was no communication at all between Bockarie and Brigadier Mani's group.<sup>7754</sup> Sesay denied ever commanding Red Goat or instructing him to go to Freetown.<sup>7755</sup>

3431. The Prosecution submits that Issa Sesay's testimony concerning his knowledge of Idrissa Kamara is also inconsistent. He testified firstly that he knew Idrissa Kamara as part of the “Red Goat Battalion” with Brigadier Mani at the Koinadugu flank.<sup>7756</sup> Next, he testified that, at the time of giving evidence, he was not aware that Rambo Red Goat’s real name was Idrissa Kamara.<sup>7757</sup> Later, he stated that he came to know Kamara’s real name during his period of detention with Kamara’s commanders.<sup>7758</sup> On re-examination, Sesay maintained that the first time he heard the name Idrissa Kamara was when the Defence investigators suggested that it was the same person as Rambo Red Goat.<sup>7759</sup>

3432. The Trial Chamber notes that Sesay’s testimony concerning the relationship between the group led by Brigadier Mani, of which Kamara was a member, and the RUF is also inconsistent in several respects. Although Sesay testified at first that Brigadier Mani’s group did not take instructions from Bockarie from February 1998 until after the Lomé Peace Accord,<sup>7760</sup> during the course of examination-in-chief Sesay admitted that he was working with Brigadier Mani, on Bockarie’s orders, for the attacks on Makeni in December 1998. Sesay later revised his testimony to state that the period in which Brigadier Mani was not cooperating with Bockarie and the RUF was limited to February to December 1998.<sup>7761</sup> Indeed, Issa Sesay stated that Brigadier Mani’s group was not part of the initial attack on Freetown by Gullit because Brigadier Mani and General Bropleh were “with” Sesay until Superman and Massaquoi attacked Sesay in March 1999.<sup>7762</sup> Further, although Sesay emphasised that he and Brigadier Mani separately commanded the RUF and AFRC respectively,<sup>7763</sup> he also testified that the Red Goat “Battalion” comprised RUF fighters,<sup>7764</sup> but also that it was led by an SLA fighter, Idrissa Kamara. Later on in cross-examination, he rejected his earlier testimony that the Red Goat “Battalion” was made up of RUF soldiers, but clarified that that battalion was a “combined” group operating in the Koinadugu area with Brigadier Mani, and “all of them together with Superman came to Makeni” in December 1998.<sup>7765</sup>

3433. Due to these inconsistencies, the Trial Chamber does not consider to be credible Sesay’s evidence that Idrissa Kamara could not have provided reinforcements to Gullit’s group in Freetown because he and Brigadier Mani were in Makeni or because he and the AFRC had separate commands. Sesay’s evidence to this effect is contradicted by TF1-375, who testified that Brigadier Mani was involved with Sesay in operations on the outskirts of Freetown while Gullit’s group was in Freetown.<sup>7766</sup> It is also contradicted by the evidence of Komba Sumana that after the capture of Makeni in 1998,<sup>7767</sup> Issa Sesay told the fighters that they were to reinforce the forces in Freetown.<sup>7768</sup>

3434. The Trial Chamber also does not accept the challenge by Issa Sesay and Charles Ngebeh to the accuracy of the information contained in Exhibit P-149.<sup>7769</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the evidence of Issa Sesay must be approached with caution.<sup>7770</sup> It further notes that Ngebeh’s suggestion that the RUF did not know the radio codes used by the AFRC radio operators in Freetown, and therefore could not have agreed to a joint operation on Jui and Kossoh Town,<sup>7771</sup> contradicts the consistent and undisputed evidence of Prosecution witnesses that there were RUF radio operators with the forces in Freetown. Noting that the origin of Exhibit P-149 is confirmed by TF1-567<sup>7772</sup> and its account of events is corroborated by Perry Kamara, the Trial Chamber accepts that Exhibit P-149 is a reliable record of the movements of the RUF during the January 1999 operation.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3435. On the basis of the Prosecution evidence, particularly that of Bobson Sesay, Perry Kamara, TF1-567, TF1-375 and Exhibit P-149, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that after resuming communications with Gullit, Bockarie ordered his troops to advance towards Freetown, with the aim of joining forces with Gullit in Freetown, and that Gullit, Bockarie and Bockarie's commanders coordinated in order to achieve that aim. It is also satisfied that a small contingent of the troops Bockarie sent as reinforcements, led by Idrissa Kamara (a.k.a. Rambo Red Goat), was able to join Gullit's troops in Freetown some time after Gullit's forces had captured the State House.

(vi) Whether fighters in Freetown took orders from Bockarie

3436. The Prosecution contends that from 6 January 1999, Gullit's forces not only coordinated with Bockarie but also implemented his orders. It alleges that unlike SAJ Musa, Gullit and his comrades were willing to subordinate themselves to Bockarie. The Prosecution submits that during the Freetown invasion, the AFRC and RUF forces inside the city implemented specific instructions from Bockarie, including orders that resulted in many of the atrocities.<sup>7773</sup> The Prosecution adduced evidence in relation to a number of specific instructions from Bockarie which the AFRC and RUF forces inside Freetown were alleged to have implemented, including the instruction to make the area "fearful", to send Pademba Road prisoners to secure locations, to execute captured ECOMOG soldiers and to kill released prisoner Martin Moinama.<sup>7774</sup>

3437. In support of its submissions concerning the general relationship between Bockarie and Gullit, the Prosecution relies on Dauda Aruna Fornie's evidence that those RUF fighters who entered Freetown on 6 January 1999 took "direct instructions" from Sam Bockarie.<sup>7775</sup> Fornie also testified that during the radio conversations that he monitored between Gullit and Bockarie, Gullit referred to Bockarie as "Sir" and sometimes as "Master".<sup>7776</sup> Isaac Mongor testified that Gullit called Bockarie "Sir" when they communicated over the radio during the attack because Gullit was aware of Bockarie's position as "Chief of Defence".<sup>7777</sup> Both Bobson Sesay and Kabbah explained that while Gullit was the overall commander of the troops, he reported to Bockarie, who was in charge of the “entire movement”.<sup>7778</sup> According to TF1-516, Bockarie gave the contingents in Freetown instructions on military strategy, particularly in regards to setting ambushes, manoeuvring, on how to capture particular targets and when to withdraw.<sup>7779</sup> Similarly, Perry Kamara testified that when Bockarie communicated with Gullit’s troops during the Freetown assault, Bockarie would give the troops in Freetown instructions concerning which targets to attack and destroy, such as the Kissy Terminal refinery, which was then burnt by the Freetown forces, and where to set road blocks.<sup>7780</sup> The Prosecution also cited the evidence from Foday Lansana and Exhibit P-085A concerning Bockarie’s public claims that Gullit was “his” commander in support of the allegation that the Freetown forces implemented Bockarie’s orders.

3438. The Defence submits that there is no evidence of a superior-subordinate relationship between Bockarie and Gullit that would have led Gullit to comply with Bockarie’s orders. It contends that neither the alleged claims by Bockarie that Gullit was his subordinate commander nor the evidence that Gullit referred to Bockarie as “Sir” would suffice,<sup>7781</sup> and that there is evidence in Exhibit P-067 to the contrary that Gullit was not following orders from Bockarie during the Freetown invasion.<sup>7782</sup> The Defence contends that the Prosecution allegations ignore evidence suggesting that, in the period prior to SAJ Musa’s death, Gullit clearly did not consider Bockarie as his superior and was disgruntled at his treatment by the RUF.<sup>7783</sup> The Defence also challenges the credibility of the Prosecution evidence. For example, it notes that on cross-examination, Fornie insisted that both Gullit and Five-Five were members of the RUF, and contends that this inaccuracy is a sign of the witness’s general lack of reliability concerning the structure of the RUF and AFRC factions.<sup>7784</sup> The Defence also cited one of Fornie’s responses during his examination in chief, which could be construed to indicate that only the RUF invaded Freetown: Fornie described a radio recording as being made “after the Freetown invasion on January 6 by the RUF”.<sup>7785</sup> The Prosecution did not question Fornie again on whether it was the RUF alone that invaded Freetown.

3439. The Trial Chamber has already opined that the evidence of Bockarie's public claims concerning his authority over the troops in Freetown should be accorded little weight, although they evidence his desire and intention to exercise command and control over the joint AFRC and RUF forces. While it also considers that evidence that Gullit referred to Bockarie as "Sir" or "Master" is not sufficient alone to substantiate any conclusions concerning the terms on which the two individuals engaged, it is relevant to corroborating other evidence concerning a formal or de facto superior-subordinate relationship.

3440. Concerning Dauda Aruna Fornie's evidence, the Trial Chamber accepts, as the Defence points out, that neither Gullit nor Five-Five were members of the RUF.<sup>7786</sup> However, the Trial Chamber does not consider this discrepancy to cast any serious doubt on the reliability of Fornie's evidence concerning the command relationship between the two leaders, given that following the ECOMOG Intervention Bockarie was appointed as the leader of the joint RUF/AFRC forces.<sup>7787</sup> It also notes that Fornie had previously indicated his awareness that both Gullit and Five-Five were in fact, members of the AFRC.<sup>7788</sup> As to his reference to "the Freetown invasion on January 6 by the RUF", the Trial Chamber notes that not only does this testimony not exclude the possibility that both the RUF and the AFRC participated in the Freetown invasion, but Fornie later presented a detailed account of the movements by the RUF and AFRC that culminated in the invasion.<sup>7789</sup> believed he would not be able to achieve his goals as long as there was infighting between the AFRC and the RUF. Fornie stated that, “indeed when he started working with Sam Bockarie he started seeing some improvement”.<sup>7791</sup>

3442. The Defence submission is supported by Exhibit P-067, a 1999 report to Foday Sankoh by the Black Guards, authored by Junior Vandí, a Black Guard commander.<sup>7792</sup> Exhibit P-067 recounts the operation to capture Kono and Makeni led by Colonel Rambo and notes that after the fall of Makeni, Rambo tried to “link up with the other brothers that entered Freetown”, but failed because “Commander Black Jah [Gullit] was not going by the instruction from the High Command”.<sup>7793</sup> However, recalling evidence from witnesses who provided firsthand accounts of Gullit’s command, the Trial Chamber notes that certain decisions made by Gullit which had the appearance either of insubordination, or a rejection of Bockarie’s involvement, were explicable by military necessity. The Trial Chamber also considers significant the testimony of TF1-371 that accounts of serious divisions within the AFRC/RUF command structure were often exaggerated,<sup>7794</sup> and that generally it was not difficult for Bockarie to control commanders on the ground, including Gullit, even if there were isolated instances when that control was not effective.<sup>7795</sup>

3443. The Trial Chamber also notes that Issa Sesay maintained that the men in Freetown did not take orders from Bockarie, were not answerable to Bockarie and had their own command structure.<sup>7796</sup>

3444. The Trial Chamber considers that the general evidence on Bockarie’s relationship with Gullit will need to be examined in the context of specific orders he is alleged to have made.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3445. A significant amount of evidence was adduced in support of the allegation that as Gullit was facing increasing pressure from ECOMOG, Bockarie ordered him to make the area “fearful”. Alimamy Bobson Sesay confirmed that he was present in the State House when Bockarie contacted Gullit to give an order to start burning strategic positions in Freetown and to capture civilians.<sup>7797</sup> Similarly Perry Kamara testified that he first heard Bockarie order Gullit to “make Freetown more fearful than before” after the fighters were inside Freetown,<sup>7798</sup> and then again when Bockarie told Gullit that he believed Gullit should leave Freetown and that Gullit should “make the area fearful” until they came back and reorganised themselves to “regain Freetown”.<sup>7799</sup> One of the more detailed accounts is provided by Dauda Aruna Fornie, who testified that he monitored a conversation between Gullit and Bockarie in which Bockarie gave “direct instructions” to Gullit for Gullit “to cause a lot of mayhem in the city [...] whereby the international community would show more concern about the RUF until they released Foday Sankoh”. Bockarie specifically referred to the destruction of government buildings and the amputation of civilians, explaining that, “Gullit and others should raise alarm to the level of the international community so that they can come in”.<sup>7800</sup>

3446. The Trial Chamber notes that on cross-examination, Defence counsel questioned Fornie on why the alleged conversation he monitored between Bockarie and Gullit in which the former ordered Gullit to destroy government property and amputate civilians to cause international alarm, was not mentioned by Fornie in any of his previous 28 witness statements. However, Fornie maintained that he was certain that he had informed Prosecution investigators about this incident but that it was not recorded.<sup>7801</sup>

3447. The Trial Chamber recalls that Fornie is a generally credible witness<sup>7802</sup> and considers that his explanation for failing to mention the conversation between Bockarie and Gullit to be forthright and credible, and does not undermine the reliability of his account. In any case, other witnesses provide very similar accounts. Isaac Mongor overheard Bockarie instructing Gullit that if they were unable to hold their ground in Freetown they should start a campaign of destruction.<sup>7803</sup> Specifically, Mongor stated that he heard Bockarie on the radio ordering the Nigerian Embassy to be burnt.<sup>7804</sup>

3448. The remaining witnesses who worked as radio operators during the January 1999 attack all confirmed that Bockarie told Gullit to commit acts of terror, including the destruction of government buildings and violence towards civilians, as they retreated from Freetown. TF1-516 overheard Bockarie speaking to Gullit on the radio stating: “If they mount pressure on us, burn down the fucking place”.<sup>7805</sup> Similarly, TF1-585 testified that when ECOMOG put pressure on Gullit and his fighters, Bockarie ordered Gullit to withdraw, stating “but before they should pull out of the town they should kill many people and burn down many houses before they should leave the town”.<sup>7806</sup> Mohamed Kabbah also testified that when Gullit called Bockarie to tell him that his troops would not withstand the ECOMOG assault and were withdrawing from Freetown, Bockarie told Gullit that as the troops retreated they should destroy everything so that anyone passing in the area after the rebel troops would know they had been there.<sup>7807</sup> Further, Alice Pyne testified that Bockarie told Gullit that if ECOMOG forced Gullit’s troops from Freetown, “they should burn the fucking place and [...] should not spare anything”.<sup>7808</sup> Foday Lansana also recalled that when Gullit reported to Bockarie that the troops in Freetown were under serious threat from ECOMOG, Bockarie told Gullit that “if it causes you to kill all the civilians, burn all the houses where you are, just so that you will not leave Freetown you should go ahead and make sure that you maintain where you were”.<sup>7809</sup>

3449. One of the reasons that Bockarie gave for his direction to make Freetown “fearful” was in order to improve the RUF’s negotiating position in relation to any future peace talks and the release of Foday Sankoh.<sup>7810</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that when discussing the plan to attack Kono and Freetown, the Accused told Bockarie that the operation should be “fearful” and that the RUF should use “all means”, also in order to pressure the Government into negotiations for the release of Foday Sankoh.<sup>7811</sup>

3450. Witnesses confirmed that Gullit’s response was one of acquiescence. Bobson Sesay stated that Gullit responded: “Yes, sir, I will do according to your wish. Just as you have given me order, I will also order the men now to start the operation to burn down and capture people in Freetown”,<sup>7812</sup> and in the presence of the witness and others, Gullit ordered senior commanders to distribute fuel as they burnt areas in Freetown.<sup>7813</sup> Perry Kamara testified that after receiving the instruction from Bockarie to make the area fearful, Gullit in turn passed on the order to Rambo Red Goat after leaving him in charge of Freetown.<sup>7814</sup> Both Pyne and Lansana testified that after Bockarie gave that order, Gullit replied “Yes, sir”,<sup>7815</sup> and according to Lansana, Major CY, who was part of the group that was stationed at the State House in Freetown, confirmed that Bockarie’s order to make themselves fearful was passed by the top commanders down to the “least person”.<sup>7816</sup> According to Kabbah, Gullit told Bockarie that “he would go according to his instruction”<sup>7817</sup>

3451. While some witnesses did not give evidence as to Gullit’s response, they attested as to the implementation of Bockarie’s order. TF1-516, for example, noted that following Bockarie’s order to Gullit to burn down public structures, Elongima sent a message to the operators in Buedu informing them that “the men have gone on a rampage. They are killing people, they are wounding civilians. The area has become fearful”.<sup>7818</sup> Similarly, after the instruction from Bockarie, Fornie heard on the BBC that on their retreat from Freetown, the RUF left behind amputees, corpses and had burnt many houses.<sup>7819</sup> TF1-371 also stated that there were media reports on the BBC and the VOA at this time concerning the carnage in Freetown as the RUF and AFRC were retreating, including the burning of houses and the killing and amputating of civilians. TF1-371 noted that this destruction was consistent with Sam Bockarie’s description of “Operation No Living Thing”.<sup>7820</sup>

3452. The Trial Chamber notes that Issa Sesay testified that he believed that it was doubtful that Bockarie gave the order for the destruction of Freetown or that Gullit would have obeyed it. He noted that Gullit, having being born, educated and joined the army in Freetown, would not likely have committed these crimes only on the orders of someone located in Buedu.<sup>7821</sup> The Trial Chamber does not consider Sesay’s evidence, which the Trial Chamber notes is not direct knowledge but rather an inference drawn from his knowledge of Bockarie and Gullit, to be plausible in light of the numerous Prosecution witnesses who testified as to Bockarie’s instruction to Gullit. In particular, Sesay’s query concerning why Bockarie would have ordered destruction in Freetown when he had not done so for the capture of Makeni is explicable by reference to the fact that Gullit’s troops had in fact failed to retain Freetown. As Kamara stated, Bockarie told the troops to make the area fearful because “the international body would intervene and maybe [...] start calling for peace talks”.<sup>7822</sup> The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on the strength of the Prosecution evidence, that Bockarie did direct Gullit to use terror tactics against the civilian population on the retreat from Freetown, and that Gullit complied.

b. To send Pademba Road prisoners to Buedu

3453. The Prosecution also alleged that Bockarie passed onto Gullit instructions he had received from the Accused through Benjamin Yeaten that the high-profile prisoners who had been released from Pademba Road Prison during the Freetown assault, be taken to RUF-controlled areas.<sup>7823</sup>

3454. The Trial Chamber notes its finding that the Prosecution proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused did provide directions to Bockarie concerning the security of the persons released from Pademba Road Prison.<sup>7824</sup> Concerning whether those instructions were then transmitted from Bockarie to Gullit, the Trial Chamber notes that the Prosecution relies on witnesses Alimamy Bobson Sesay, Perry Kamara, Dauda Aruna Fornie, TF1-516 and Mohamed Kabbah. The Trial Chamber recalls that it had no general reservations concerning the evidence of these witnesses.<sup>7825</sup>

3455. All of these witnesses confirm that Bockarie did instruct Gullit to send the politically prominent members of the prisoners released from Pademba Road to RUF controlled-territory. According to Perry Kamara, when Gullit told Bockarie that they had been able to capture State House, National Stadium and Pademba Road Prison, in response, Bockarie “urged” Gullit to “do as a military man” and provide security for the persons released from Pademba Road.<sup>7826</sup> On the retreat of Gullit’s forces to Waterloo, Gullit sent the prisoners released from Pademba Road directly to Makeni.<sup>7827</sup> Bobson Sesay corroborated this account, noting that at some point after the release of the prisoners, the witness heard from Gullit that the released prisoners were taken by RUF Rambo and Issa Sesay to Makeni due to security reasons.<sup>7828</sup>

3456. Similarly, Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that when Gullit transmitted a radio message to Bockarie via Perry Kamara that the troops in Freetown had released the political detainees,<sup>7829</sup> Bockarie instructed Mohamed Kabbah, a radio operator, to send a radio message to Gullit to send those big names to the rear for safety.<sup>7830</sup> The witness knew that the message was received by Gullit because Gullit acted on Bockarie's instructions and sent the prisoners to Makeni.<sup>7831</sup> While Mohamed Kabbah himself did not attest to having personally received this instruction,<sup>7832</sup> he affirmed that when Gullit contacted Bockarie to discuss his increasingly insecure situation in Freetown, Bockarie told Gullit to retreat with the prisoners Gullit had released from Pademba Road Prison, specifically telling Gullit not to leave the prisoners he released behind in Freetown, in particular President Momoh.<sup>7833</sup> Kabbah then testified that Gullit later brought the persons released from Pademba Road Prison into RUF-controlled territory.<sup>7834</sup> TF1-516 testified that two or three days after Gullit informed Bockarie of the capture of the State House, Bockarie received another call from Gullit notifying him that Gullit had released some prisoners from Pademba prison and Bockarie ordered that all the released prisoners be sent to Buedu.<sup>7835</sup>

3457. The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on the strength of the evidence of Bobson Sesay, Kamara, Fornie and Kabbah, which the Trial Chamber considers to be credible, that Bockarie did direct Gullit to send high-profile political detainees released from Pademba Road Prison to RUF-controlled territory and Gullit complied with that instruction.

c. Other orders

3458. The Prosecution also adduced evidence as to an order given by Bockarie for the execution of Martin Moinama, a former radio operator who had testified in Foday Sankoh's treason trial and had been released when the troops in Freetown overran Pademba Road Prison, and an order for the execution of captured ECOMOG prisoners.<sup>7836</sup>

3459. Two radio operators, both stationed with Superman in Lunsar throughout the Freetown attack, testified concerning the alleged order to execute Martin Moinama. Foday Lansana recalled that he monitored one communication in which Bockarie gave an order concerning the execution of Martin Moinama, who had been a witness against Foday

Sankoh during his trial in Freetown.<sup>7837</sup> Moinama was captured during the invasion by Gullit's troops on 6 January 1999. When Gullit reported his capture to Bockarie, Bockarie ordered that Moinama be executed as a traitor. Gullit "did as he was instructed". Lansana learnt of the execution from Gibril Massaquoi when Massaquoi arrived in Lunsar along with other combatants after the retreat from Freetown.<sup>7838</sup> Alice Pyne also told the Trial Chamber that she heard that Martin Moinama, one of the persons released from Pademba Road Prison in January 1999, was killed on Bockarie's orders for testifying against Foday Sankoh.<sup>7839</sup>

3460. In its submissions, the Defence points out that Foday Lansana was imprisoned for seven years alongside other former RUF and AFRC fighters, and admitted that he spoke to other RUF prisoners about events during the civil war. In particular, in a prior statement Lansana had been asked about Martin Moinama and did not tell the Prosecution that he had been executed.<sup>7840</sup> Further, Lansana had told the Prosecution in a prior statement that the man who carried out the execution of Moinama was Alhaji Conteh (a.k.a. Black Jesus), who, Lansana affirmed, was one of the inmates with him at Pademba Road.<sup>7841</sup> The Defence suggests that consciously or subconsciously, Lansana amended his own account to include what he was told by those other prisoners.<sup>7842</sup> In relation to Pyne's evidence, the Defence pointed out that Pyne was questioned about prior statements to the Prosecution in which she stated that she believed that Martin Moinama was killed before the Intervention of February 1998, rather than during the Freetown invasion.<sup>7843</sup> The Defence suggests that Pyne heard about the alleged killing from Foday Lansana, as she met with Lansana in June 2008, the same week as her departure to The Hague to testify in these proceedings.<sup>7844</sup>

3461. The Trial Chamber finds that objections raised by the Defence to the evidence of Lansana and Pyne are insufficient to cast doubt as to the credibility of their evidence on the execution of Moinama. The suggestion that both witnesses amended their accounts after having spoken to others is not supported by anything other than circumstantial evidence, and both witnesses denied that their accounts were so influenced.<sup>7845</sup> Both also offered plausible explanations for the alleged inconsistencies in their evidence. Lansana explained that he did not initially tell the Prosecution about Moinama's death because he did not yet feel safe as a witness,<sup>7846</sup> while Alice Pyne explained that before the Intervention Moinama's wife told Pyne that Moinama had been killed when he had in fact been taken prisoner and that she later learnt from other prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison that Moinama had been killed. In light of these considerations, and the Trial Chamber's previous findings that both Lansana and Pyne are generally credible witnesses,<sup>7847</sup> the Trial Chamber accepts their evidence that Bockarie ordered the execution of Moinama.

3462. In relation to the alleged order to execute ECOMOG prisoners, Kamara testified that Bockarie told Gullit that as there was no prison for ECOMOG, any captured ECOMOG soldiers should be killed. Kamara stated that captured fighters were then executed under the cotton tree near the State House.<sup>7848</sup> Bobson Sesay corroborated Kamara's evidence that when the troops in Freetown had control of the State House, Gullit ordered the execution of captured Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers at the back of the State House,<sup>7849</sup> although Bobson Sesay did not attribute the order to Bockarie. The Trial Chamber considers that as one of the radio operators located in Freetown, Kamara was privy to the communications between Gullit and Bockarie to which Bobson Sesay, as a fighter on the ground, would not always have had access. Hence, that Bobson Sesay failed to refer to Bockarie's involvement in the order does not undermine the credibility of Kamara's evidence. Recalling its finding that Perry Kamara is a generally credible witness,<sup>7850</sup> the Trial Chamber accepts his evidence that the order to execute the ECOMOG soldiers originated from Bockarie.

3463. The Trial Chamber is satisfied, on the Prosecution evidence, that Bockarie gave Gullit orders to execute Martin Moinama, and a group of captured ECOMOG soldiers near the State House, and both of which orders were carried out by Gullit.

d. Conclusion on whether fighters in Freetown took orders from Bockarie 3464. The Trial Chamber recalls that after the ECOMOG Intervention in February 1998, Bockarie took command over both the RUF and the AFRC,<sup>7851</sup> pursuant to which he had a formal superior-subordinate relationship with Gullit. It is clear that throughout the Freetown operation, Bockarie issued a number of specific instructions to Gullit, including instructions leading to the commission of crimes, which were implemented by Gullit and his troops. In light of this evidence, the Trial Chamber does not consider credible Issa Sesay's testimony that the men in Freetown did not take orders from Bockarie.<sup>7852</sup> Coupled with the general evidence concerning the level of deference exhibited by Gullit towards Bockarie in their communications,<sup>7853</sup> and that Gullit reported to Bockarie as the overall commander,<sup>7854</sup> the Trial Chamber accepts that the fighters in Freetown did take orders from Bockarie, through Gullit, and that Bockarie exercised effective command and control over Gullit from the point at which Gullit reported to Bockarie after the capture of the State House and Pademba Road Prison.

(vii) Whether Bockarie assisted the retreat of Gullit's forces from Freetown

3465. In support of their contention that when Gullit's forces retreated from Freetown, Bockarie instructed his forces on the outskirts of the city to ensure a safe line of retreat for the withdrawing troops,<sup>7855</sup> the Prosecution relies on the evidence of Alice Pyne, TF1-375 and Exhibit D-009.

3466. Alice Pyne, a radio operator under Superman's command, testified that she was in Yams Farm for over two weeks during the Freetown invasion. At Yams Farm, she monitored a communication in which Bockarie give an order to Gullit to destroy people and property in Freetown.<sup>7856</sup> Bockarie then ordered Superman and his fighters to remain at Yams Farm to ensure there is “a safe corridor for those coming from Freetown”.<sup>7857</sup> Pyne testified that by “safe corridor” she meant that Superman’s fighters “created a safe area, that was Yams Farm, for ECOMOG not to be able to base there, so those who would be coming from Freetown would come and join us safely”.<sup>7858</sup> TF1-375, who fought with Superman’s troops during the Freetown operation, also testified that when Gullit’s forces retreated, Bockarie called Superman, informing Superman that Gullit’s forces would need protection while they were retreating from ECOMOG,<sup>7859</sup> and instructing Superman and Issa Sesay to defend Gberi Junction, Benguema barracks and Waterloo “so as to give free passage to the forces that were in Freetown [...] whilst they were retreating”.<sup>7860</sup> He testified that the forces retreating from Freetown took the road from Grafton, to the Peninsula, through the mountains and then to Waterloo, and during that retreat, the witness’s group defended Waterloo, Klay, Benguema Barracks, and Gberi Junction, preventing the Guinean contingent at Port Loko from taking Gberi Junction.<sup>7861</sup> Isaac Mongor also testified that when RUF Rambo engaged the ECOMOG forces in the Hastings area, the men who retreated from Freetown were able to use the forest and hilly area nearby to come towards the Waterloo area.<sup>7862</sup>

3467. Exhibit D-009, a salute report to Sankoh by Bockarie dated 26 September 1999, corroborates this version of events. It states that when the troops who entered Freetown “had been cut off from the rear”, Bockarie was able to “coordinate their operations over set and got them to combine their forces and bulldoze from the side accessing them to the mountains through which they took a bypass to join our troops at Benguema and Waterloo”.<sup>7863</sup> TF1-

375 confirmed that the incident described in Exhibit D-009 referred to the Peninsula route through the mountains, which the retreating forces took from Freetown to Waterloo.<sup>7864</sup>

3468. As stated previously, the Trial Chamber considers that as one of the witnesses who participated in the Freetown attack and withdrew with those forces from Freetown, Bobson Sesay's evidence is of particular relevance as to what occurred during the operation. Bobson Sesay testified that the retreat from Freetown took place in two stages. Gullit first moved with a civilian brigade to Benguema,<sup>7865</sup> and notified the remaining forces in Freetown that reinforcements were advancing to assist them at Jui. When those reinforcements were not forthcoming, the troops took a bypass from Jui to the Grafton Hastings jungle towards Benguema.<sup>7866</sup> The Trial Chamber does not consider Bobson Sesay's failure to refer to any attempt by the forces led by Superman and Issa Sesay to assist this retreat to contradict the evidence of Pyne, Exhibit D-009 and TF1-375, given that he was in Freetown and in the midst of hostilities at the time. Moreover, he corroborates the evidence of TF1-375 and Exhibit D-009 concerning the path taken by the retreating forces to Benguema, and his account of the promised reinforcements at Jui suggests that on the retreat, the forces in Freetown were coordinating with those on the outskirts.

3469. Issa Sesay testified that when Gullit retreated from Freetown, the RUF were in Waterloo. He confirmed that the forces from Freetown "took the hills to Benguema".<sup>7867</sup> He agreed that the troops in Freetown were encircled by ECOMOG, who were deployed at Waterloo, Mile 38 and Masiaka. However, he maintained that the fact that the RUF was at Waterloo did not assist in their withdrawal; the retreating forces would still have been able to withdraw because they had bypassed ECOMOG troops in the same positions on the way into Freetown. Hence, it was not inevitable that they would have to battle with ECOMOG. In response to counsel's question about whether Gullit's troops would have been able to set up a base at Benguema, as they did, without the support of RUF troops at Waterloo, Sesay stated that they could have bypassed ECOMOG and surfaced behind Benguema and then retreated.<sup>7868</sup>

3470. However, regardless of whether Bockarie's manoeuvres in Waterloo, Benguema Barracks, and Gberi Junction actually assisted Gullit's troops to retreat, the Trial Chamber considers that the evidence is sufficient to establish that Bockarie did intend, by his instructions to his commanders, to ensure safe passageway for Gullit's retreat. The Trial Chamber recalls its previous finding that Pyne is a generally reliable witness,<sup>7869</sup> and notes that Pyne was personally monitoring communications between Bockarie and Gullit and other commanders.<sup>7870</sup> Further, her evidence is corroborated by the evidence of TF1-375 and contemporary documentary evidence in the form of Exhibit D-009.

3471. Moreover, notably, on re-examination, Issa Sesay acknowledged that any ECOMOG reinforcements at Port Loko had to travel southwards through Gberi Junction, through Gberi Bridge, down to Masiaka to reach Freetown.<sup>7871</sup> This evidence is consistent with TF1-375's account that the RUF troops on the outskirts of Freetown were instructed to prevent the Guinean contingent at Porto Loko from taking Gberi Junction in order to protect the withdrawing forces from ECOMOG reinforcements.<sup>7872</sup> On the Prosecution evidence, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that when Gullit's forces withdrew from Freetown, Bockarie instructed his forces on the outskirts of the city to ensure a secure line of retreat for the withdrawing troops.

1) Joint RUF and AFRC attempts to re-enter Freetown

3472. Concerning joint attempts to re-enter Freetown after the retreat, Bobson Sesay and TF1-567 also testified there was a joint AFRC and RUF operation to attack Tombo involving groups led by Gullit and by Issa Sesay.<sup>7873</sup> Bobson Sesay gave evidence that when the fighters that had left Freetown reached Benguema, in the presence of Gullit, Five-Five, Superman, RUF Rambo, Rambo Red Goat and O-Five, Issa Sesay then planned an operation to recapture Freetown by using Tombo axis instead of the Freetown-Waterloo highway, where ECOMOG forces were concentrated.<sup>7874</sup> Bobson Sesay was personally chosen to lead as an advanced team to settle a base at Macdonald.<sup>7875</sup> Around mid-February 1999, as instructed by Five-Five, Superman, Bomb Blast, RUF Rambo, Five-Five, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Med Bajehjeh and Rambo Red Goat bombarded Tombo village and were repelled by ECOMOG troops.<sup>7876</sup> While Issa Sesay, Morris Kallon and others moved to Waterloo, Five-Five, the witness, Bomb Blast and others moved to Benguema barracks where they spent a month.<sup>7877</sup> Bobson Sesay stated that at Benguema there was cordiality between the RUF and the AFRC because they were able to organise to re-attack. He also noted that Issa Sesay “had command over Gullit” but agreed that these were essentially two groups working together against a common enemy, the Sierra Leonean government.<sup>7878</sup> assemble around the peninsula and wait for Rambo and others to join them in order to re-attack Freetown.<sup>7885</sup>

3474. Issa Sesay denied going to Waterloo to assist the AFRC in retaking Freetown.<sup>7886</sup> He testified that Bockarie sent him to Waterloo to instruct Gibril Massaquoi, who had just been freed by the AFRC from Pademba Road Prison and had joined Superman and Rambo in Waterloo,<sup>7887</sup> to take the APC politicians who had also been freed from Pademba Road Prison to go to Makeni to talk with Sam Bockarie.<sup>7888</sup> Massaquoi had refused to come when Bockarie called him after his release from Pademba Road and instead told Bockarie that he was going to operate with Superman.<sup>7889</sup> Sesay denied that he made a plan with Gullit to re-attack Freetown after Gullit's forces left the city or that they jointly planned to attack Tombo with a view to retaking Freetown.<sup>7890</sup> According to Issa Sesay, when the RUF was in Waterloo, Gullit was in Benguema and Bazy was based behind Hastings and there was a lot of tension between the groups because the AFRC forces had not provided necessary reinforcements.<sup>7891</sup>

AFRC that was led by Gullit and Bazzy fell out with the RUF at Waterloo and their relationship was not mended throughout 1999.<sup>7895</sup> However, TF1-371 also testified that such divisions arose out of isolated “misunderstandings” and insubordination, and did not mean that the RUF was not a cohesive group.<sup>7896</sup>

3476. On the issue of whether cooperation took place, Sesay on cross-examination conceded that Superman and Rambo, both on Bockarie’s orders,<sup>7897</sup> jointly launched an attack on Tombo with Gullit in February 1999.<sup>7898</sup> Further, while Sesay testified that the RUF and Gullit were based in separate areas—the RUF in Waterloo, Gullit in Benguema,<sup>7899</sup> it is significant that Sesay later stated that it was only roughly 10 to 15 minutes walk from the RUF base in Waterloo to Gullit’s camp in Benguema.<sup>7900</sup> Sesay also acknowledged seeing Perry Kamara, who was at that time part of Gullit’s group,<sup>7901</sup> while he was in Waterloo after the Freetown invasion.<sup>7902</sup>

3477. The Trial Chamber considers that Issa Sesay’s evidence concerning the coordination between the RUF and AFRC troops retreating from Freetown is not credible<sup>7903</sup> and is outweighed by the consistent evidence of Prosecution witnesses that there was such cooperation in which Sesay himself was involved. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that, despite emerging tensions between the AFRC and RUF forces at this stage, the factions made collaborative efforts to re-attack Freetown.

Conclusion

3478. The evidence suggests that while, as TF1-371 testified, the initiative for the invasion of Freetown was taken by the group commanded by SAJ Musa and Gullit, and the RUF under Bockarie's command were "Johnny-come-latelies" who "effectively tagged on on the tail end",<sup>7904</sup> Bockarie's troops already had "their own in-house planning"<sup>7905</sup> and took the opportunity presented by SAJ Musa's death and the concomitant resumption of cooperation with his troops to attempt a coordinated effort to get to Freetown. The Trial Chamber considers that the Defence submission that the two factions were "no more than fighting a common enemy"<sup>7906</sup> fails to capture the level of coordination that took place and the control that Bockarie exercised over Gullit.

3479. The Prosecution also went further in its submissions to submit that even though the attempts to coordinate Bockarie and Gullit's forces largely failed, with the exception of the entry into Freetown of Rambo Red Goat, the RUF attacks by Boston Flomo and other troops under Bockarie's command had the effect of assisting Gullit's troops to enter Freetown and maintain their position in Freetown.<sup>7907</sup> The Trial Chamber does not consider it necessary to make a determination on the effect of the RUF attacks because regardless of the impact of Bockarie's efforts to assist the forces in Freetown, what is relevant to the responsibility of the Accused is whether Bockarie was effectively in command of a concerted and coordinated effort to take Freetown, with Gullit as his subordinate. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that this was the case.

3480. The Trial Chamber notes that the plan made by Bockarie and the Accused, without the involvement of Gullit's troops, succeeded to the extent that the attack on Kono was successful and fighters under the leadership of Rambo Red Goat were able to enter Freetown, although the attempts to take over and capture Kenema and Freetown were unsuccessful. However, recalling that even at Waterworks Bockarie envisaged SAJ Musa's direct involvement in the implementation of this plan,<sup>7908</sup> and having regard to Isaac Mongor's evidence that the plan made by Bockarie and Taylor did not envisage a specific group going to Freetown,<sup>7909</sup> the Trial Chamber considers that with SAJ Musa's death in or around 23 December 1998, when Gullit took over the leadership of the troops at Benguema and resumed contact with Bockarie, Bockarie and Gullit coordinated in their efforts to capture Freetown. From that point onwards, the Trial Chamber finds that SAJ Musa's original plan was abandoned, and Gullit's movements were incorporated into the Bockarie/Taylor plan, as had been envisioned by Bockarie at Waterworks.

Findings

3481. The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Gullit resumed communications with Bockarie on the death of SAJ Musa and that Gullit maintained frequent daily contact with Bockarie throughout the Freetown operation to discuss the ongoing military situation in the capital.

3482. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Bockarie ordered his troops to advance towards Freetown, with the aim of joining forces with Gullit in Freetown, and that Gullit, Bockarie and Bockarie's commanders coordinated in order to achieve that aim.

3483. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that although the attempts at coordination were largely unsuccessful, a small contingent of the troops Bockarie sent as reinforcements were able to join Gullit's troops in Freetown some time after Gullit's forces had captured the State House.

3484. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that when Gullit's forces withdrew from Freetown, Bockarie instructed his forces on the outskirts of the city to ensure a secure line of retreat for the withdrawing troops, and that after the retreat from Freetown the RUF and AFRC made joint efforts to re-attack the city.

3485. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that, throughout the Freetown operation, Bockarie issued a number of instructions to Gullit, including an order to use terror tactics against the civilian population on the retreat from Freetown, which were implemented by Gullit and the fighters in Freetown. Bockarie exercised effective command and control over Gullit during the capture of the State House and Pademba Road Prison.

3486. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that following his first conversation with Gullit after the death of SAJ Musa, Bockarie and Gullit coordinated in their efforts to capture Freetown. From that point on, SAJ Musa's original plan to attack Freetown was abandoned, and Gullit's movements were incorporated into the Bockarie/Taylor plan, as had been contemplated by Bockarie and the Accused.

Allegation that the Accused directed the Freetown Invasion

3487. The Prosecution contends that in addition to planning the multi-axis offensive culminating in the January 1999 attack on Freetown, the Accused remained in control of the overall implementation of the plan both directly by communicating with Bockarie and also through his trusted subordinate, Benjamin Yeaten. The Prosecution points to several examples of the Accused's role in directing this operation, including when the original plan for Bockarie to obtain arms and ammunitions from Libya failed, directing Bockarie to go to Burkina Faso instead.<sup>7910</sup> The Prosecution alleges that Yeaten travelled to Buedu to meet with Bockarie just before the attack on Kono in December 1998.<sup>7911</sup>

3488. The Prosecution submits that during the operation, Bockarie and Yeaten were in contact every 3-4 hours on a daily basis, with Bockarie providing Yeaten with updates from the front line.<sup>7912</sup> In particular, Bockarie spoke directly with Yeaten on the satellite phone immediately after the capture of Koidu Town to inform him of troop movements.<sup>7913</sup> The Prosecution also contends that during the attacks on Koidu, Makeni and locations in

Kenema district, Marzah, Sampson and Jungle were in Buedu on multiple occasions. They met with Bockarie and received his briefings about the operations, then went back to inform Yeaten.<sup>7914</sup>

3489. The Prosecution also submits that the Accused issued a number of orders during the operation. The Accused firstly ordered the release of captured ECOMOG soldiers held in Buedu after the capture of Koidu Town. Bockarie complied with the Accused's order and released them to Yeaten and Tuah in Foya.<sup>7915</sup> Second, around 7 January 1999, the Accused sent an order to Bockarie via Yeaten for the high profile prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison, including former President of Sierra Leone Joseph Momoh, to be sent to RUF-controlled areas at Buedu.<sup>7916</sup> Third, the Accused also provided instructions on military attacks and strategy.<sup>7917</sup> Fourth, the Accused announced a ceasefire during the fighting.<sup>7918</sup> Finally, during the Freetown invasion, Bockarie even took a trip to Monrovia during which the Accused had instructed him that he should maintain the RUF-controlled areas.<sup>7919</sup>

3490. The Prosecution submits that Bockarie continued to take direct instruction from the Accused after the withdrawal from Freetown and continued to keep the Accused informed of what was happening in Sierra Leone through Bockarie's visits to Monrovia and through constant radio communication between his radio operators in Sierra Leone and the Accused's subordinates in Liberia.<sup>7920</sup>

inconsistent.<sup>7923</sup> Specifically, it suggests that the evidence indicating Yeaten visited Buedu prior to the December 1998 attacks is uncorroborated and contradicted by other Prosecution evidence;<sup>7924</sup> that the evidence relating to the Accused's subordinates visiting Buedu is also contradicted by other Prosecution evidence;<sup>7925</sup> and, with respect to the orgy of violence that followed the retreat from Freetown after the January 6 invasion there was a general breakdown of command and control and most of the violence was attributable to the rogue elements within the retreating forces.<sup>7926</sup> In relation to the alleged order to release the ECOMOG peacekeepers captured during the Kono operation in December 1998, the Defence contests the allegation that the peacekeepers were released per the Accused's 'orders'.<sup>7927</sup>

3492. Even accepting that interactions occurred between Yeaten and Bockarie, the Defence submits that the evidence fails to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that Yeaten's alleged communication with Bockarie carried the force of superior command, or that the alleged communication with Yeaten was at Taylor's behest. The Defence refers to its argument that Bockarie and Yeaten developed a close personal relationship outside the knowledge and control of the Accused. The Defence also contends that the Prosecution evidence only indicates interactions between Yeaten and Bockarie at the time, and not between Yeaten and Taylor.<sup>7928</sup> In any case, the Defence contends that taken at face value, Prosecution evidence suggests a relationship between Taylor and Bockarie that was largely based on the latter's reverence to the former and cannot found superior responsibility or effective control.<sup>7929</sup>

3493. The Defence further alleges that the evidence also fails to connect the Accused to the crimes committed in Freetown: first, because the RUF played no part in the Freetown invasion; even assuming that the Accused had effective control over Bockarie, the Prosecution fails to show a clear chain of command between the Accused and members of the AFRC who carried out the Freetown invasion; and second, the evidence fails to establish

EvidenceProsecution Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie

3494. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that, prior to the December 1998 attack on Kono,<sup>7931</sup> he saw Bockarie having a discussion with Benjamin Yeaten (a.k.a. Five-Zero) one evening around 10.00 to 11.00pm at Bockarie's house. The witness had just received a message from the front line and was going to take it to Bockarie. He saw two vehicles enter and persons alight from those vehicles. When the witness approached, he saw Yeaten sitting together with Bockarie in Bockarie's backyard. Some Liberian SSS members were also present, wearing blue SSS uniforms. Fornie only remained there for long enough to give Bockarie the message and then left. The two men then left to take a stroll towards Dawa Road. Fornie did not know what the two men discussed but asserts that they met for about an hour, and then Yeaten returned to Liberia. Other radio operators also knew about this meeting.<sup>7932</sup>

3495. Fornie testified that an "all-out" attack by the RUF on the Kono and Kenema districts began around 15 to 20 December 1998. When this general attack started he was in Buedu. At Buedu, Bockarie was in constant contact with Yeaten on a daily basis and was monitoring the frontlines. This attack led to the capture of Kono.<sup>7933</sup> After the fall of Kono, Bockarie contacted Yeaten and informed him of the capture of Kono. The witness was the first person to receive the message from Issa Sesay that Kono had fallen. Sesay also stated that some other fighters, led by Morris Kallon and Bai Bureh, were heading towards the Masingbi area.<sup>7934</sup> When the witness gave Bockarie this message, he called Yeaten immediately using a satellite phone to inform him that Kono was under RUF control. The witness was present when Bockarie contacted Yeaten. Yeaten would call Bockarie often seeking updates from the frontline during the Kono operation. Bockarie would receive at least one message every three to four hours that the witness spent with Bockarie.<sup>7935</sup>

3496. On 6 January 1999, the witness was in Buedu monitoring the radio constantly. Any time that the RUF received a message, he would bring the messages from the monitoring station to Bockarie's transmitting station to send to the front line commanders.<sup>7936</sup>

3497. Bockarie was in constant contact with Yeaten in Liberia during the course of the January operation. They spoke at least two or three times a day through the satellite phone. The witness would often be in the radio room with Bockarie during these conversations.<sup>7937</sup> These communications would concern arms and ammunition, food, supplies, fuel, operational decisions and updates. Fornie stated that sometimes Bockarie "would contact Benjamin to consult him on some decisions before he ever took them".<sup>7938</sup>

3498. On the morning of 7 January 1999,<sup>7939</sup> Gullit transmitted a radio message to Bockarie via King Perry that the troops in Freetown had released the political detainees from Pademba Road Prison. Among those who were released included the late ex-President Momoh, Steve Bio, Victor Foh, Osho-Williams, and other Sierra Leone politicians.<sup>7940</sup> Less than an hour after Bockarie received this message, he called Benjamin Yeaten on the satellite phone to inform him of the release of the prisoners.<sup>7941</sup> Fornie was present when the call was made.<sup>7942</sup> After some time, Yeaten came back on the telephone line and gave Bockarie instructions to ensure that the prisoners released were transferred to Buedu, because they should not be at the frontlines.<sup>7943</sup> Yeaten told Bockarie that this was an instruction from Taylor. Bockarie then instructed Mohamed Kabbah, a radio operator, to send a radio message to Gullit to send the released prisoners to the rear for their safety. The witness knew Bockarie was speaking to Yeaten because Bockarie asked the person on the line to confirm that it was "Five-Zero", and it was confirmed. In their conversation, Bockarie responded to Yeaten by saying “Yes, Sir. Okay, okay, I will do that”. Further, when the conversation ended, Bockarie told Mohamed Kabbah directly that he had had instructions from Taylor through Yeaten.<sup>7944</sup> The witness knew that the message was received by Gullit because Gullit acted on Bockarie’s instructions and sent the prisoners to Makeni. When these freed prisoners were transported to Makeni, Steve Bio was killed by an enemy bomb fragment.<sup>7945</sup>

3499. There was frequent communication between Bockarie and Gullit during the course of the Freetown operation, with communications occurring every hour or so.<sup>7946</sup> The communication concerned requests from Gullit to Bockarie for ammunition. As a result, Bockarie contacted Yeaten in turn to ask for ammunition.<sup>7947</sup> Fornie testified that as Bockarie was too busy co-ordinating the front lines, he sent Fornie and two others to Monrovia where they were met by Yeaten. This trip occurred two days after Gullit entered Freetown on 6 January 1999. Yeaten took them to White Flower where they retrieved approximately 25 boxes of ammunition and some RPGs and grenades and returned to Buedu, all within 36 hours.<sup>7948</sup>

3500. Fornie testified that the ammunition he brought back to Buedu immediately after the Freetown invasion was dispatched directly to Kono where Peter Vandi received it and sent it directly on to Issa Sesay in Makeni who dispatched it to Rambo and others in the Waterloo area. The ammunition reached Rambo approximately 3 days after Fornie came with them to Buedu. The witness explained that he knew all this because it was written down in the message log book.<sup>7949</sup>

3501. Witness TF1-567 testified that after the capture of Koidu Town in December 1998, when the witness was on his way toward Makeni, there were communications with Benjamin Yeaten’s radio operator, Sunlight, in Monrovia. Radio operators informed Sunlight that the RUF had captured Koidu, as well as arms and ammunition and some

Nigerian soldiers. The witness was in the radio room when these communications were going on.<sup>7950</sup>

Prosecution Witness Abu Keita

3502. Witness Abu Keita, who took part in the RUF December 1998 offensives,<sup>7951</sup> testified that after the RUF recapture of Kono on 25 December 1998,<sup>7952</sup> Issa Sesay arrested 11 Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers in Kono as prisoners of war. They were taken to Buedu and kept in a dungeon at the military police headquarters.<sup>7953</sup> Benjamin Yeaten and Sam Bockarie met at Dawa. Yeaten told Bockarie that Taylor had informed him that he wanted the ECOMOG soldiers released to him in Liberia. Bockarie did not disagree but he did not release the soldiers that day. A “couple of days” later, Bockarie stated that he had a call from Yeaten telling him that Charles Taylor’s request was in fact an order. Following this call, the witness, Marzah, and Sampson drove to Foya in Liberia with the ECOMOG soldiers where they were handed over to Yeaten and Joe Tuah.<sup>7954</sup>

3503. Keita testified that during the attack on Freetown, he and Bockarie were in Buedu.<sup>7955</sup> When Bockarie heard on BBC radio on 6 January 1999 a commander speaking from Freetown stating that he was in control of the State House, Bockarie became angry that he was not the first to speak to the BBC. Bockarie then called the BBC on his satellite phone and stated that the RUF were approaching the State House.<sup>7956</sup> Bockarie was speaking to various commanders in and around Freetown, including Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon, over the RUF radio network. Bockarie also communicated with Benjamin Yeaten and Joseph Tuah on the satellite phone at night, and Bockarie told the witness he was reporting to them on the status of the operation. The witness did not hear Yeaten giving any instructions to Bockarie.<sup>7957</sup>

3504. Keita also testified that during the Freetown invasion,<sup>7958</sup> Bockarie travelled back to Liberia. The witness accompanied Bockarie to Foya where a helicopter came to fetch Bockarie.<sup>7959</sup> Bockarie was picked up by Joe Tuah in a helicopter and flown to Monrovia. Bockarie spent a day in Liberia,<sup>7960</sup> and when he returned to Foya the witness met him there. Bockarie brought with him a Toyota Land Cruiser, which he said had been given to him by Taylor. The vehicle also contained jeans, t-shirts, medicine and bandages.<sup>7961</sup> Keita also saw Bockarie depart on another trip to Monrovia from Foya via helicopter, on which Bockarie carried a seriously wounded soldier. When Bockarie returned on the trip during the Freetown invasion, he told the witness that he had brought back a message from Taylor that the RUF should maintain its controlled areas. He passed this message onto Issa Sesay and Morris Kallon.<sup>7962</sup>

3505. Witness Mohamed Kabbah, who was in Buedu on 6 January 1999,<sup>7963</sup> testified that one morning after Gullit's troops entered Freetown, Benjamin Yeaten contacted Sam Bockarie via the radio from Foya. The contact was initiated by Yeaten's radio operator.<sup>7964</sup> The witness and other operators in Buedu heard this conversation on VHF radio as it was quite loud. Yeaten asked Bockarie about the situation in Freetown, and Bockarie told him that "our men in Freetown" were under enormous pressure, that they had been pushed out of State House and that ECOMOG had cut off their supply lines. Yeaten told Bockarie to reinforce the troops in Freetown so that they would not lose the city, and Bockarie responded that he had given Rambo instructions to put together reinforcements and move to assist the troops in Freetown.<sup>7965</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3506. Kabbah testified that eventually ECOMOG cut off the supply lines of the rebel troops in Waterloo, which meant that Rambo and his reinforcements were not able to get through. When Gullit contacted Bockarie to discuss this situation, Bockarie told Gullit to move with the prisoners Gullit had released from Pademba Road Prison at night in order to evade ECOMOG jets. Bockarie told Gullit specifically not to leave the prisoners he released behind in Freetown, in particular President Momoh.<sup>7966</sup> When Gullit withdrew, he brought the persons released from Pademba Road Prison into RUF-controlled territory, which at that point stretched from Lunsar to Kabala, Kailahun and Kono.<sup>7967</sup>

3507. Kabbah testified that generally when Bockarie was the leader of the RUF,<sup>7968</sup> and also during the period that Gullit was in Freetown,<sup>7969</sup> Bockarie would communicate with Benjamin Yeaten. Communication between Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten during the Freetown invasion was the continuation of a “sisterly or brotherly operation”, and the two men would share both good and bad news. Kabbah observed that Bockarie spoke to Yeaten as if Bockarie was in the position of a subordinate receiving instruction from a superior. Kabbah noted as an example that when Bockarie told Yeaten about the increasing difficulties Gullit’s troops were facing in Freetown, Yeaten told Bockarie to send reinforcements to the city.<sup>7970</sup> More generally during Bockarie’s leadership, Bockarie spoke to Yeaten because “[i]t was a sort of a joint operation that was going on. Everybody wanted to know the successes and the failures that each had at a particular time, so they used to talk on those things”.<sup>7971</sup> Kabbah knew that Bockarie was talking to Yeaten while the witness was in Buedu because Yeaten’s radio operator used to conduct the dialogue from Liberia.<sup>7972</sup>

3508. During the Freetown invasion, Bockarie would also communicate directly with Charles Taylor by satellite phone, and he would do so openly.<sup>7973</sup> In one instance, on the very day that King Perry initially made contact with the Buedu radio station, Bockarie told the operator on duty, Tiger, to inform Taylor's operator Sunlight that he wanted to talk to Taylor. Bockarie then drove with the witness and others to the MP headquarters in Buedu where the satellite could get reception, and Bockarie spoke with Taylor on the phone.<sup>7974</sup> The witness heard Bockarie say that his men had entered Freetown, and had captured State House. Bockarie was laughing when he spoke on the phone and said "Yes sir" several times.<sup>7975</sup> The witness understood that Bockarie was speaking with Charles Taylor because, just prior to this conversation, Bockarie had stated that he had wanted to speak with Taylor.<sup>7976</sup>

3509. Kabbah also testified that he did not recall Bockarie discussing any crimes over the radio, although he noted that such matters would not be discussed over the air. Rather, Bockarie and Yeaten would discuss developments at the frontlines, and Bockarie might request materiel, or relate the death of a prominent member of RUF but they never discussed civilian deaths or mistreatment of civilians.<sup>7977</sup>

3510. On cross-examination, Kabbah was questioned on a prior statement to the Prosecution in which he had said that Yeaten never gave Bockarie advice or instructions on military strategy. Defence counsel asked why he had testified in direct examination in relation to the Freetown invasion that he had heard Yeaten telling Bockarie that Freetown was a "big city" and that Bockarie should send troops to reinforce the troops that had invaded Freetown.<sup>7978</sup> Kabbah explained that he did not consider this to be an instruction related to military strategy, and affirmed that Yeaten did not give directions relating to whether the RUF should attack particular areas or set a certain ambush, but he did occasionally offer suggestions. Kabbah confirmed another prior statement that he did not recall hearing any orders or instructions from Charles Taylor or his subordinates regarding the Freetown invasion.<sup>7979</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3511. Kabbah testified further on cross-examination that while Yeaten was a “Special Force”, Bockarie was “a trainee from Liberia”. However, although Yeaten was superior to Bockarie, Bockarie felt that he did not want to take orders from Yeaten because Bockarie “was commanding a whole revolution”.<sup>7980</sup> Kabbah then affirmed a prior statement to the Prosecution in which he stated that while Bockarie did not “take orders” from Yeaten because Bockarie would have seen Yeaten as “inferior” in rank, nonetheless Bockarie would have followed instructions by Yeaten because it “had to have come from Charles Taylor”.<sup>7981</sup> Kabbah testified that even if a message from Yeaten did not specifically refer to Taylor, it was understood in the RUF, and by Bockarie, that anything Yeaten said must have been sanctioned by Taylor as Yeaten was the President’s “right-hand man”. However, Kabbah agreed in cross-examination that there was no evidence to support the assumption that all instructions from Yeaten stemmed from Taylor, and that it was just what people assumed.<sup>7982</sup>

3512. Witness TF1-585 testified that just after Bockarie used his satellite phone to inform the BBC that his troops would be in Freetown within three days’ time,<sup>7983</sup> the witness heard the radio operator on duty receive a call from Benjamin Yeaten’s operator Sunlight, asking them to find Bockarie so that he could speak with Yeaten.<sup>7984</sup> Bockarie came to the radio, and the witness heard Yeaten tell Bockarie that if what he heard on the BBC was true, Bockarie should expect Yeaten to come to Buedu in two days’ time. He told Bockarie to switch on his satellite phone because “my father”, who the witness understood to be Taylor, “would want to talk to you”.<sup>7985</sup> Bockarie went directly to the veranda where the satellite phone was located and spoke on the phone. The witness was not present for this conversation. She also testified that Yeaten came to Buedu two days later, and Bockarie instructed her to prepare food for Yeaten.<sup>7986</sup> This was the first time that the witness saw

3513. After the troops withdrew from Freetown, persons released from Pademba Road Prison in Freetown, including Victor Foh, came to Buedu. The witness read in the radio logbook that Bockarie had instructed Superman to send them to Buedu. He also invited Gibril Massaquoi, but Massaquoi did not come.<sup>7989</sup>

3514. Witness TF1-516, an RUF radio operator based in Buedu during the Freetown invasion,<sup>7990</sup> testified that when the troops arrived in Freetown, Gullit contacted Sam Bockarie by radio and reported that he had captured State House. Two or three days later, Bockarie received another call from Gullit notifying Bockarie that Gullit had released some prisoners from Pademba Road Prison. Bockarie ordered that all the released prisoners be sent to Buedu.<sup>7991</sup> The witness monitored this conversation on the radio.<sup>7992</sup>

3515. During this period Bockarie was also in “persistent” communication with Charles Taylor, call sign “020”, and Benjamin Yeaten, call sign “Base 1”.<sup>7993</sup> After Benjamin Yeaten’s radio operator, Sunlight, intercepted Bockarie’s radio communications about the release of prisoners from Pademba Road Prison in Freetown, Yeaten contacted Bockarie by radio to congratulate him on the release of the prisoners. Sunlight had access to the RUF radio network and knew almost all of the RUF frequencies.<sup>7994</sup>

3516. There were also communications between Bockarie and Taylor during the invasion of Freetown via satellite phone. After conversing with Taylor, Bockarie would come to the radio station and draft instructions for the commanders regarding military manoeuvres. After such conversations Bockarie would instruct Gullit to set ambushes and go on attacks. The witness overheard these satellite communications.<sup>7995</sup>

3517. The witness also recalled two particular orders issued by Bockarie during the invasion of Freetown after discussions with Yeaten or Taylor. Following a satellite phone conversation with “020” in Liberia, at a time when the forces in Freetown were under increasing pressure from ECOMOG attack, Bockarie told Gullit over the radio to instruct his men to burn down areas in Freetown, including government buildings, in order to attract the attention of the international community.<sup>7996</sup> The instruction that Bockarie gave to Gullit to send the prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison to Buedu was also made following a conversation with Yeaten’s radio station “Base 1”.<sup>7997</sup>

3518. In cross-examination, the witness confirmed that he had made a prior statement to the Prosecution that he “was not aware of any directives by Charles Taylor or Benjamin Yeaten regarding the Freetown invasion of January 1999”.<sup>7998</sup> TF1-516 explained that this statement was referring strictly to radio communications, and noted that there were discussions via satellite phone, after which Bockarie would issue instructions over the radio.<sup>7999</sup>

3519. Brima’s radio operator, Elongima, informed the RUF in Buedu of reports that the fighters in Freetown had gone on a rampage and were committing atrocities. He said that they had captured large numbers of women and were “wounding civilians”.<sup>8000</sup> In response to counsel’s question on whether the atrocities that were committed were reported to any other party, TF1-516 testified that Bockarie would provide reports on the situation at the frontlines to Base 1 and sometimes to “020”. The witness himself called “Base 1” several times on Bockarie’s behalf. Bockarie would then communicate with Yeaten either by phone or over the radio.<sup>8001</sup>

3520. TF1-516 also testified initially that during the Freetown invasion Bockarie flew to Monrovia from Foya in a helicopter to see Charles Taylor and returned 72 hours later by air.<sup>8002</sup> However on cross-examination, TF1-516 admitted that he had made a mistake and that the incident he described had not taken place during the Freetown invasion and, although he could not recall exactly when it had happened, “the operation in Freetown had long been undertaken”.<sup>8003</sup>

3521. Witness Perry Kamara testified that he was part of the forces led by Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) who entered Freetown on 6 January 1999.<sup>8004</sup> Before invading Freetown, the troops were divided into groups, with one group appointed to attack areas of Ferry Junction, Upgun and State House in Freetown, National Stadium, and another group assigned to attack Pademba Road Prison to release Foday Sankoh and all the detainees who were members of the AFRC/RUF or who had collaborated with them.<sup>8005</sup> Kamara belonged to the group that entered Pademba Road Prison.<sup>8006</sup> Among those released were former president J S Momoh, Gibril Massaquoi, the former RUF spokesman, and Steve Bio.<sup>8007</sup>

3522. When Gullit had captured the State House, he updated Bockarie about the release of the prisoners.<sup>8008</sup> In response, Bockarie urged Gullit to “do as a military man” and keep the freed prisoners secure until he could dispatch them to Kailahun.<sup>8009</sup> The witness recalled that later, pursuant to Bockarie’s orders, Gullit took the released prisoners directly to Makeni.<sup>8010</sup> In relation to one of the prisoners, Hilton Fyle, Sam Bockarie requested that he be taken by Issa Sesay to Buedu.<sup>8011</sup>

3523. Witness TF1-371 testified that during the December 1998 attacks on Koidu to Makeni, Zigzag Marzah, Sampson and Jungle were frequent visitors to Buedu. Sometimes they met with Bockarie, and at one point Zigzag received looted materials, including generators and TV sets, to take back to Monrovia. Bockarie often briefed them on the operation plans. TF1-371 recalled that Christopher Varmoh (a.k.a. Liberian Mosquito) came once to Buedu with Dopoe Menkarzon and met Bockarie to discuss Bockarie travelling to Monrovia to see Taylor and to discuss the organisation of a fighting force to give support to the Liberian Anti-Terrorist Unit (ATU) under attack in Lofa County by LURD rebels. However, Bockarie was awaiting the outcome of the Freetown invasion. At first, Zigzag, Sampson and Jungle stayed in a guesthouse provided by Bockarie. Towards the latter point of 1998, they would stay with their girlfriends in Buedu.<sup>8012</sup>

3524. TF1-371 also testified that immediately after the retreat from Freetown in 1999, discipline was not under control for the AFRC faction leaving Freetown, although somewhere along the way the commanders took control of their men.<sup>8013</sup>

3525. TF1-371 testified that after the AFRC and RUF forces retreated from Freetown, Sam Bockarie went to Monrovia for a week to meet the Accused, accompanied by his bodyguards and Jungle.<sup>8014</sup> TF1-371 stated that when Bockarie returned to Buedu, he summoned the commanders for a briefing, and Jungle told them that Bockarie had been promoted to a “two-star” lieutenant general by Taylor. TF1-371 said that Taylor promoted Bockarie because he had accomplished the mission of capturing of Koidu and Freetown. The witness also saw Bockarie with two sets of the SS uniform used by Taylor’s securities.<sup>8015</sup>

Prosecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif

3526. Witness Varmuyan Sherif testified that before 6 January 1999,<sup>8016</sup> he went to Foya on a monitoring mission to ascertain that there was free movement on the border. In Foya he saw Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten together. On the way back, he met Zigzag Marzah, who told him that he had some arms and ammunitions which he was taking to Bockarie.<sup>8017</sup>

3527. On 6 January 1999, Sherif learned of the Freetown attack from the BBC. Sherif explained that he was with a group of Taylor's bodyguards when he heard the announcement. Sherif testified that he heard Bockarie over the BBC explaining that he would not retreat except when his "father" tells him to, and that Bockarie explained that by "father" he meant "Charles Taylor". Sherif said that he and the other bodyguards were annoyed about the news because he publicly involved Taylor's name.<sup>8018</sup>

3528. Witness Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag Marzah), testified that he personally took part in the Freetown attack and that during the attack the RUF took instructions from Charles Taylor. He stated that "[t]here was no RUF. From Freetown to Liberia we took instructions from one man and that was Charles Taylor".<sup>8019</sup> Marzah testified that it was in Freetown that he received an injury to his head and that he had entered Freetown in a vehicle.<sup>8020</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

3529. Witness TF1-168 was imprisoned by the RUF in Buedu during the first half of 1999. He testified that in the same camp where he was held, there were also 12 ECOMOG soldiers captured from the Kono attack in December 1998 or January 1999 and kept as prisoners of war.<sup>8021</sup> One of these ECOMOG soldiers was a Nigerian national and was killed in Buedu because he had tuberculosis and the RUF did not want the disease to spread to the rest of the prisoners.<sup>8022</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3530. The Accused testified that neither he nor his government was involved in the Freetown invasion on 6 January 1999.<sup>8023</sup> He had no prior knowledge, never instructed anyone, nor encouraged anyone to invade Freetown.<sup>8024</sup> The Accused denied even knowing, at the time, an AFRC Commander named Gullit who led troops in the invasion of Freetown.<sup>8025</sup>

3531. The Accused testified that the first he knew of the Freetown invasion was on 6 January 1999 at 10.00am, when his national security adviser, Lewis Brown, informed him of the news. The Accused acknowledged that upon his instructions, Brown called Sam Bockarie on the phone. Sam Bockarie stated that he did not know what was going on in Freetown.<sup>8026</sup> One of the Accused's security personnel then told the Accused that he heard Bockarie announcing over BBC radio that his men had attacked Freetown.<sup>8027</sup> In order to verify the situation, the Accused again instructed his security personnel to contact Bockarie. Bockarie explained that he only said that on the radio for "morale" and to take "some claim for it".<sup>8028</sup>

3532. The Accused stated that he did not speak with Bockarie on a satellite phone on the night before the Freetown invasion. He stated that the Freetown invasion of January 1999 came as a surprise to those involved in the Sierra Leonean peace process, who were preparing to implement the Abidjan peace agreement of November 1996.<sup>8029</sup> The Accused denied, as Mohamed Kabbah testified, that he received any information about the Freetown invasion from Benjamin Yeaten.<sup>8030</sup> The Accused believed that no official in the Liberian Government had anything to do with the Freetown invasion,<sup>8031</sup> or were in contact with

Bockarie via satellite phone during the Freetown invasion, because they would have no reason to be.<sup>8032</sup>

3533. The Accused denied Dauda Aruna Fornie's testimony that Benjamin Yeaten gave instructions on the Accused's behalf during the Freetown invasion which were then relayed to troops in Freetown.<sup>8033</sup> The Accused affirmed that on 6 January 1999, he did not communicate with Bockarie or instruct Benjamin Yeaten to pass on instructions.<sup>8034</sup> In relation to Kabbah's testimony that he overheard conversations on the satellite phone between the Accused and Bockarie, the Accused referred to other Prosecution witnesses who said that whenever Sam Bockarie received a call on his satellite phone, he moved away and spoke secretly.<sup>8035</sup>

3534. Concerning communications between Yeaten and Bockarie through Sunlight, the Accused did not know whether Benjamin Yeaten had a radio operator named "Sunlight" or whether Yeaten would have received communications concerning the capture of Koidu town and the capture of Nigerian soldiers, as TF1-567 testified. However, he acknowledged that Yeaten did have a radio operator and acknowledged the possibility that Yeaten, as the coordinator of security, would have reason to contact Bockarie by radio.<sup>8036</sup>

3535. The Accused denied knowledge of specific instructions alleged to have come from him. In relation to the alleged instruction to Bockarie to send reinforcements to Freetown, the Accused believed that Bockarie, being an experienced General, would not have required Yeaten to tell him to send reinforcements to Freetown if the troops there were under siege.<sup>8037</sup>

3536. The Accused testified that he did not know about Bockarie's instructions to Gullit to burn government buildings to raise alarm in the international community, and to take released prisoners from Pademba Road Prison to Buedu, nor did he order Sam Bockarie to do these things.<sup>8038</sup> The Accused testified that he did not condone amputations carried out on civilians in Sierra Leone, emphasising that he had no motive to order any kind of atrocities in Freetown.<sup>8039</sup>

3537. The Accused denied, as Abu Keita testified, that Issa Sesay captured 11 Nigerian ECOMOG peacekeepers after the Christmas 1998 Kono attack and released them into Liberia on the Accused's orders. The Accused denied knowledge of any such event, stating that the only peacekeepers released in Liberia occurred in 2000 and there were several hundreds of them.<sup>8040</sup>

3538. The Accused testified that he was involved in negotiations between the RUF and the Sierra Leonean government during the Freetown invasion. On either 6 or 7 January 1999, he spoke to President Kabbah as part of his role on the ECOWAS Committee of Six. There was also a meeting between Sankoh and Kabbah on 7 January 1999 about which the Committee was briefed.<sup>8041</sup> The Accused and the Committee continued their participation in the negotiations until the Accused successfully secured a ceasefire between the RUF and the Government of Sierra Leone on or around 12 January 1999.<sup>8042</sup> On 14 January 1999, the Accused made an announcement concerning the undertaking by the RUF to agree to a ceasefire on behalf of the three countries charged with the responsibility of engagement with the RUF forces, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana and Liberia. Liberia had been the frontline mediator but all of the other parties had been fully briefed on this development. Tambakai Jangaba, the Liberian Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs, was the senior foreign ministry official responsible for the Sierra Leone portfolio.<sup>8043</sup>

3539. The Accused affirmed that in January 1999, there was communication between the government of Liberia and Bockarie in order to negotiate the cease-fire. However, there were no visits by Bockarie to Liberia in that period.<sup>8044</sup>

3540. Witness Issa Sesay testified that he attacked Kono in December 1998. During the attack, on 16 to 17 December 1998 in Koidu Town, he captured 12 Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers.<sup>8045</sup> Sesay affirmed that the capture of these men is the same incident as that to which Abu Keita testified.<sup>8046</sup> During the fighting, the ECOMOG soldiers raised their arms up and surrendered.<sup>8047</sup>

3541. Bockarie told Sesay to send the ECOMOG soldiers to him in Buedu. So with escorts, Sesay took them to Buedu,<sup>8048</sup> where they were detained until the Lomé Accord, at which time they were released to a delegation comprised of the Nigerian ambassador to Lomé, the Nigerian ambassador to Liberia, and one other ambassador from Nigeria, as well as Musa Cissé, SYB Rogers, Omrie Golley.<sup>8049</sup> Sankoh ordered Bockarie to release the soldiers to the ambassadors as a goodwill gesture, to show the RUF's commitment to the Lomé Accord.<sup>8050</sup> Sesay did not hear any directive by Taylor to Bockarie to release the ECOMOG peacekeepers, but having seen Musa Cissé, Taylor's chief of protocol among the delegation, he assumed that Taylor must have known about their release.<sup>8051</sup> Sesay was not aware of the discussion between Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten that Abu Keita described, nor did he hear that the peacekeepers were to be released to Benjamin Yeaten.<sup>8052</sup>

3542. Sesay testified that he was in Makeni at the time of the Freetown invasion. He denied receiving a message that AFRC/RUF combatants had captured the State House.<sup>8053</sup> During the Freetown invasion, Sesay denied knowledge of Bockarie telephoning Benjamin Yeaten<sup>8054</sup> and denied hearing that Benjamin Yeaten had given instructions to Bockarie, to send the politicians from Pademba Road Prison to Buedu for safety.<sup>8055</sup> Rather, Sesay stated that Bockarie had sent Sesay to Waterloo to tell Gibril Massaquoi to travel to Buedu to escort the politicians who had been freed from Pademba Road Prison to go to Makeni to speak with Bockarie. The AFRC had freed Massaquoi and other politicians held at Pademba Road Prison when they entered Freetown.<sup>8056</sup> Sesay denied any involvement by Benjamin Yeaten or Taylor in the invasion of Freetown on 6 January 1999.<sup>8057</sup>

3543. Sesay knew Pascal to be Bockarie's operator based in Buedu.<sup>8058</sup> Bockarie was Pascal's boss in 1998 and 1999. In December 1999 Pascal went to Liberia with Bockarie but returned to Sierra Leone with Sesay in 2000. Sesay denied Pascal was assigned to Benjamin Yeaten or based in Foya, Liberia, in 1998 and 1999.<sup>8059</sup> Sesay denied that Bockarie gave the order for the destruction of Freetown. It was carried out by the AFRC. Sesay did not hear of Yeaten and Taylor directly communicating with Bockarie or instructing him during the Freetown invasion. The troops in Freetown were not answerable to Bockarie. They had their own command structure and when they retreated, reports were not sent to Bockarie.<sup>8060</sup>

3544. Witness DCT-008, a Liberian radio operator,<sup>8061</sup> testified that Sunlight, the primary operator at Base 1, the radio station located at Benjamin Yeaten's home, would receive coded messages on Base 1 and decode them for Yeaten.<sup>8062</sup> DCT-008 testified to an incident in September 1998, in which Sampson Wehyee (a.k.a. Sampson), a bodyguard for Benjamin Yeaten, arrived at Base 1 and introduced Sunlight to Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle).<sup>8063</sup> Wehyee told Sunlight that Yeaten had ordered him to allow Tamba to use Base 1 to contact the RUF.<sup>8064</sup> Tamba had a piece of paper with the RUF frequency, "RUF 35B", which was the same frequency the NPFL used in 1991 and 1992 to contact the RUF. Sunlight entered onto the RUF frequency, and operator "Sellay" answered the call.<sup>8065</sup>

3545. In November or December 1998, Sampson and Tamba brought Memunatu Deen to Base 1 so that she could use the radio to communicate with the RUF.<sup>8066</sup> DCT-008 testified that the messages that Deen sent could not be understood because they were in code.<sup>8067</sup> After one month, around December 1998 or January 1999, she gave the code to Sunlight so that he could take down messages while she was away.<sup>8068</sup>

3546. DCT-008 testified that Sunlight never intercepted a message between Gullit and Bockarie about the release of prisoners from Pademba Road, maintaining that the only communication intercepted by Base 1 within the RUF net was between Bockarie and Sankoh in late 1999, when they argued over the peace process.<sup>8069</sup> DCT-008 also stated that Yeaten could not have spoken to Bockarie on the radio, because Yeaten did not know the RUF communication code. Further, Yeaten was afraid of being heard on the radio, so he would not have spoken on the VHF radio, but rather only over the satellite phone.<sup>8070</sup> DCT-008 denies that Bockarie called to make situation reports concerning operations around Freetown.<sup>8071</sup> He testified that there was no communication between Base 1 and any RUF radio or Buedu in January 1999.<sup>8072</sup>

3547. Witness Fayia Musa was held prisoner by the RUF in Buedu during the first half of 1999. He testified that he was incarcerated with some Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers kept as prisoners of war. One of these ECOMOG soldiers was executed after having contracted tuberculosis.<sup>8073</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3549. Fornie identified on the recording the voices of Foday Sankoh, Sam Bockarie, Isaac Mongor and Sunlight, Benjamin Yeaten's radio operator and the language in which they were speaking as Liberian English.<sup>8079</sup>

3550. Exhibit P-361 is a radio log book covering communications within the RUF for the period 28 April 1999 to 11 September 1999. Exhibit P-361 was part of a series of documents seized from Foday Sankoh's house on Spur Road in Freetown in May 2000 admitted through rule 92*bis*.<sup>8080</sup> It records a message sent by Foday Sankoh (a.k.a. the Leader) to "all

Sunlight then continued speaking, stating something to the effect of: "You can't remember what [...] you and my father spoke just now, or what you and I spoke?" Defence Exhibit D-189

3552. Exhibit D-189 is an official Statement released by the Government of Liberia on measures it has taken to “Dispel Allegations Regarding Liberia’s Support for the RUF/Junta between May 1998 and February 1999”. It takes the form of a chronology, and states that on 14 January 1999, “President Taylor announces an undertaking by the RUF to agree to a cease-fire in response to a request by Liberia.”<sup>8083</sup>

3553. The Trial Chamber will first consider the Prosecution allegation that, from the commencement of the December 1998 offensives to Gullit’s withdrawal from Freetown, the Accused, either directly or through Yeaten, remained in communication with Bockarie concerning the progress of the Freetown attack. It will then turn to examine allegations of specific instructions or directions given by the Accused concerning the operation.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3554. In support of its allegation that the Accused was in constant contact with Bockarie through Yeaten during the Freetown operation, the Prosecution relies on witnesses Dauda Aruna Fornie, TF1-585, Abu Keita, TF1-516, TF1-567 and Mohamed Kabbah.

3555. Fornie testified that from the commencement of the attacks by the RUF on the Kono and Kenema districts on around 15 to 20 December 1998, Bockarie was in constant contact with Yeaten, providing him with updates on progress on the frontlines.<sup>8084</sup> Fornie saw Bockarie contact Yeaten using a satellite phone and inform him of the capture of Kono,<sup>8085</sup> and he maintained this contact during the course of the January operation.<sup>8086</sup> Similarly, TF1-516 testified that during this period Bockarie contacted the Accused's radio station in Monrovia, radio call sign "020", and Benjamin Yeaten's radio station, call sign "Base 1".<sup>8087</sup> Mohamed Kabbah also testified that during the period that Gullit was in Freetown, Bockarie would communicate with Benjamin Yeaten via radio,<sup>8088</sup> and also directly with Charles Taylor by satellite phone.<sup>8089</sup> TF1-567 also testified that RUF radio operators informed Sunlight that the RUF had captured Koidu, as well as arms and ammunition and some Nigerian soldiers.<sup>8090</sup> Abu Keita testified that Bockarie communicated with Benjamin Yeaten and Joseph Tuah on the satellite phone, telling the witness that he was reporting to them on the status of the operation.<sup>8091</sup> A number of witnesses agreed that this contact was frequent. Fornie testified that during the Kono operation, Bockarie would receive at least one message every three to four hours that the witness spent with Bockarie,<sup>8092</sup> and that during the Freetown invasion, they spoke at least two or three times a day through the satellite phone.<sup>8093</sup> The evidence also suggests that such reports were promptly given as progress on the frontline developed.<sup>8094</sup>

3556. Sometimes these communications concerned operational decisions. TF1-516 stated that after conversing with the Accused, Bockarie would come to the radio station and draft instructions for the commanders, including Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) in Freetown, regarding military manoeuvres, the setting of ambushes and attacks on particular targets.<sup>8095</sup> Kabbah noted as an example that when Bockarie told Yeaten about the increasing difficulties Gullit's troops were facing in Freetown, Yeaten told Bockarie to send reinforcements to the city.<sup>8096</sup> Fornie stated that sometimes Bockarie "would contact Benjamin to consult him on some decisions before he ever took them".<sup>8097</sup>

3557. Kabbah attested to a complicated relationship between Yeaten and Bockarie during the conversations concerning the Kono and Freetown operations. He stated initially that Bockarie spoke to Yeaten as part of a "sisterly or brotherly operation", or a "joint operation", where each party sought to be kept updated on each other's successes and failures.<sup>8098</sup> Kabbah also observed that Bockarie spoke to Yeaten as if Bockarie was in the position of a subordinate receiving instruction from a superior.<sup>8099</sup> However, Kabbah in cross-examination then affirmed a seemingly inconsistent prior statement in which he stated that Bockarie did not "take orders" from Yeaten because Bockarie would have seen Yeaten as "inferior" in rank.<sup>8100</sup> Kabbah explained to the Trial Chamber that while Yeaten was officially of a higher rank, Bockarie viewed Yeaten as inferior because Bockarie had a larger and more important role in Sierra Leone.<sup>8101</sup> Kabbah testified that Bockarie nonetheless followed instructions by Yeaten because he would have assumed such orders came from the Accused.<sup>8102</sup> Even if a message from Yeaten did not specifically refer to the Accused, it was understood in the RUF that Yeaten was the conduit for the Accused's instructions as he was the Accused's "right-hand man".<sup>8103</sup>

3558. The Defence contends that the evidence of the Prosecution witnesses is unreliable.<sup>8104</sup> It cites, as an example, Mohamed Kabbah's evidence that he got the information concerning the alleged radio communications between Bockarie and Yeaten during the Freetown invasion through TF1-516 whom he alleged was Yeaten's radio operator at the time, even though, TF1-516 testified that he was only assigned to Yeaten in Liberia from about mid-1999.<sup>8105</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that Kabbah did become confused at one stage of his testimony when discussing a communication between Yeaten and Bockarie concerning the ECOMOG assault on the supply lines of the troops in Freetown. He first stated that this communication was initiated by Pascal, who was stationed in Liberia,<sup>8106</sup> but corrected his testimony to state that it was TF1-516 who was stationed in Liberia and was assigned to Yeaten.<sup>8107</sup> However, Kabbah did indicate that TF1-516 was, at one point, assigned as an operator for Yeaten,<sup>8108</sup> and recognised that there was a period when Yeaten spoke to Bockarie before TF1-516 had been assigned to Liberia.<sup>8109</sup> The Trial Chamber considers this discrepancy minor; in light of the passage of time and the witness's acknowledgement that TF1-516 was only stationed in Liberia for a certain period of time, it is understandable that Kabbah may have become confused about precisely when that period was.<sup>8110</sup>

(Memu Deen, Tolo's wife was in Monrovia working as a radio operator at Cissé Musa's house when Bockarie was stationed in Buedu). Note that although DCT-008 first testified that Memunatu would use the radio at Base One in Liberia every day in November or late December 1998, and she continued to do so in 1999 (DCT-008, Transcript 27 August 2010, pp. 47400, 47407-411, Transcript 30 August 2010, pp. 47403-47404) later in his testimony he stated that there was no radio contact between the RUF and Deen in Liberia in

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3559. The Defence also pointed to alleged inconsistencies in TF1-516's evidence regarding alleged communications between Bockarie and Yeaten, noting that it conflicted with TF1-516's testimony that the Liberian Government did not have the codes for the RUF radio net in January 1999 and that TF1-516 later confirmed that he never heard any directive from Taylor or Yeaten concerning the Freetown Invasion.<sup>8111</sup>

3560. In relation to the first alleged inconsistency, the Trial Chamber notes that DCT-008 also stated that Yeaten could not have spoken to Bockarie on the radio, because Yeaten did not know the RUF communication codes.<sup>8112</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that it does not accept the contention of the Defence that messages between Liberian radio operators and the RUF operators could not have been relayed simply because they did not possess each others' codes, having concluded that the RUF and NPFL radio networks were accessible by operators from outside their respective networks.<sup>8113</sup> In any case, DCT-008 also testified that in November or December 1998, Memunatu Deen, an RUF radio operator, began operating out of Base 1,<sup>8114</sup> and that around December 1998 or January 1999, she gave the RUF codes to Sunlight so that he could take down messages while she was away.<sup>8115</sup> Hence, it is clear that at least by the time of the Freetown invasion the Liberian operators were in possession of the relevant RUF codes. DCT-008 also testified that Yeaten was afraid of being heard on the radio, so he would not have spoken on the VHF radio, but rather only over the satellite phone.<sup>8116</sup> However, TF1-516 testified that generally, discussions between Yeaten and Bockarie did occur via satellite phone, after which Bockarie would issue instructions over the radio.<sup>8117</sup>

3561. In relation to the second alleged inconsistency, the Trial Chamber considers that the Defence has mischaracterised TF1-516's evidence. In cross-examination, the witness confirmed that he had said in a prior statement to the Prosecution that he "was not aware of any directives by Charles Taylor or Benjamin Yeaten regarding the Freetown invasion of January 1999". However, TF1-516 explained that he was referring strictly to radio communications, and emphasised that he had also noted in the prior statement that discussions concerning military strategy were conducted via satellite phone, after which Bockarie would issue instructions over the radio.<sup>8118</sup> In light of the witness's explanation, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the prior statement referred to by the Defence is inconsistent with TF1-516's testimony.

3562. Reviewing the reliability of the evidence concerning communications between Bockarie and the Accused or Yeaten during the Kono and Freetown operations, the Trial Chamber takes into account that much of the evidence adduced was from radio operators in Buedu during the relevant time period, and that the witnesses were careful to substantiate the basis on which they believed such communications took place. These radio operators were either monitoring or facilitating such radio communications with Liberia,<sup>8119</sup> present in the radio room when such communications occurred,<sup>8120</sup> or present when Bockarie spoke on the satellite phone with Yeaten or the Accused.<sup>8121</sup>

3563. The Accused contended that Kabbah's testimony that conversations on the satellite phone between the Accused and Bockarie were conducted openly<sup>8122</sup> contradicts the evidence of other Prosecution witnesses that whenever Sam Bockarie received a call on his satellite phone, he moved away and spoke secretly.<sup>8123</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that the Accused did not specify with which witnesses he was contrasting Kabbah's testimony and the evidence clearly establishes that there was no particular secrecy surrounding Bockarie's satellite phone conversations with Yeaten at this time. TF1-585 testified that the satellite phone in Buedu was located on an open veranda and conversations were easily overheard.<sup>8124</sup> TF1-516,<sup>8125</sup> Abu Keita<sup>8126</sup> and Dauda Aruna Fornie<sup>8127</sup> also heard Bockarie speak to Yeaten via satellite phone. Apart from Keita's evidence that these conversations would take place at night, none of these witnesses testified that there were any secrecy measures in place concerning the satellite phone communication.

3564. The Accused stated that neither he nor any official in the Liberian Government was in contact with Bockarie via satellite phone during the Freetown invasion.<sup>8128</sup> There are inconsistencies in the Accused's testimony, which cast doubt on his denial that he was communicating with Bockarie directly or through Yeaten. First his insistence that no official in the Liberian Government would have been in contact with Bockarie during the Freetown invasion because they would have no reason to be<sup>8129</sup> is undermined somewhat by his later acknowledgement that in January 1999, there was communication between the government of Liberia and Bockarie in order to negotiate the cease-fire for which the Liberian Government took credit.<sup>8130</sup> Further, when asked about communications between Yeaten and Bockarie through Sunlight, the Accused stated that he was not aware of such communications, but importantly, acknowledged the possibility that Yeaten, as the coordinator of security, would have reason to contact Bockarie by radio.<sup>8131</sup> In light of these inconsistencies, and against the weight of the Prosecution evidence, the Trial Chamber does not find the Accused's denial that he was communicating with Bockarie directly or through Yeaten during the Kono or Freetown operations credible. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that in December 1998 and January 1999, Bockarie was in frequent contact via radio or satellite phone with the Accused, either directly or through Yeaten, in relation to the progress of the Kono and Freetown operations.

3565. The Prosecution also contends that Bockarie continued to update the Accused on the Sierra Leone situation and take instructions from the Accused after the withdrawal from Freetown. In support, the Prosecution refers to Exhibit P-261,<sup>8132</sup> an audio clip of an RUF radio conversation, which Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that he recorded around February to March 1999.<sup>8133</sup> Fornie identified on the recording the voices of Foday Sankoh, Sam Bockarie, Isaac Mongor and Sunlight, Benjamin Yeaten's radio operator and the language in which they were speaking as Liberian English.<sup>8134</sup> The Defence adduced evidence from DCT-008 challenging the authenticity of this Exhibit. In particular, DCT-008 testified that he did not recognise any of the voices on Exhibit P-261 and disagreed that the second voice on the recording, which stated "35 Bravo, come in. Come in, 35 Bravo", was the voice of Sunlight, as Fornie had testified.<sup>8135</sup> DCT-008 also stated that Sunlight never used "35B" or "35 Bravo" as the call sign for Buedu, and that although he had heard from previous operators that the RUF code during 1991 to 1992 was "35 Bravo",<sup>8136</sup> from the time when Base 1 was established, until late 1999, the call sign for Buedu was either "Planet 1" or "Bravo Zulu 4".<sup>8137</sup>

3566. The Trial Chamber recalls its previous finding that Dauda Aruna Fornie is a generally reliable witness, and that the evidence of DCT-008 must be treated with caution.<sup>8138</sup> The Trial Chamber observes that the evidence of DCT-008 as to Exhibit P-261 should be treated with particular caution, noting that he had earlier testified to an incident in September 1998, in which, at the instruction of Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle),<sup>8139</sup> Sunlight had used the RUF frequency, “RUF 35B” to contact the RUF in Buedu,<sup>8140</sup> directly contradicting his evidence that “35B” or “35 Bravo” was no longer the call sign for Buedu.

3567. On the basis of Exhibit P-261 and the supporting evidence of Dauda Aruna Fornie, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that around February to March 1999, after the withdrawal of AFRC troops from Freetown, there was contact between the RUF radio stations and Yeaten’s radio operator. However, it notes that the content of the recording, as described by Dauda Aruna Fornie and corroborated by DCT-008, suggests no substantive discussion between the parties to the conversation concerning the situation in Sierra Leone. As such, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that Exhibit P-261 indicates Bockarie was updating the Accused on the Sierra Leone situation or taking instructions from the Accused at this time.

b. Visits by Benjamin Yeaten to Buedu in December 1998 and January 1999

3568. The Trial Chamber heard evidence from two witnesses concerning visits by Benjamin Yeaten to Bockarie’s headquarters in Buedu in December 1998 and January 1999 immediately prior to and during the Kono and Freetown operations. Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that, prior to the December 1998 attack on Kono,<sup>8141</sup> he saw Bockarie having a discussion with Benjamin Yeaten (a.k.a. Five-Zero) one evening at Bockarie’s house, but did not know what the two men discussed.<sup>8142</sup> TF1-585 also testified that two days after Bockarie used his satellite phone to inform the BBC that his troops would be in Freetown, Yeaten came to Buedu, and Bockarie instructed “us” to prepare food for the visitor.<sup>8143</sup>

3569. The Defence contends that despite Fornie’s insistence that there were other people who witnessed this meeting, no other witness corroborates his account. The Defence also points to evidence that Bockarie made a trip to Liberia to see Yeaten during this time, not the other way around, and that TF1-585 “claimed that Yeaten’s first trip to Buedu was after the troops had entered Freetown”.<sup>8144</sup>

3570. The Trial Chamber considers both contentions to be without merit. First, it does not consider the evidence that Bockarie made a trip to Liberia to see Yeaten during the Kono-Freetown operation to preclude the possibility of Yeaten also visiting Buedu, and notes that in any case, the evidence was that Bockarie's visits to Monrovia took place during January 1999, while Fornie's evidence concerns a visit in December 1998.

3571. Second, the Trial Chamber notes that the Defence has mischaracterised TF1-585's evidence. She did not claim that Yeaten's first trip to Buedu was after the AFRC troops had entered Freetown. Rather, she testified that the visit in January 1999 was the first time that she herself saw Yeaten in Buedu.<sup>8145</sup> Given that the visit Fornie described took place late at night<sup>8146</sup> and lasted only for about an hour before Yeaten returned to Liberia,<sup>8147</sup> it is not improbable that TF1-585 would not have witnessed it.

3572. The Trial Chamber recalls that it has found TF1-585 and Dauda Aruna Fornie to be generally credible witnesses<sup>8148</sup> and has no reason to doubt their testimony in relation to these incidents. The Trial Chamber also considers that the testimony of Varmuyan Sherif that before 6 January 1999,<sup>8149</sup> he saw Bockarie and Yeaten together in Foya<sup>8150</sup> corroborates the evidence of TF1-585 and Fornie that Yeaten and Bockarie met during the Kono-Freetown operations. On the evidence of TF1-585 and Dauda Aruna Fornie, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten met at least twice in December 1998 and January 1999.

c. Trips by Bockarie and his subordinates to Monrovia during the Freetown invasion

3573. The Prosecution also alleges that Bockarie took trips to Monrovia during the Freetown operation, relying on the evidence of Abu Keita. Keita testified that during the Freetown invasion,<sup>8151</sup> Bockarie travelled to Liberia. The first time, the witness accompanied Bockarie to Foya where a helicopter came to fetch Bockarie<sup>8152</sup> and the witness met Bockarie on his return at Foya in a new ash-coloured Toyota Land Cruiser pick-up from the Accused loaded with clothing, medicine and bandages.<sup>8153</sup> Keita also saw Bockarie depart on another trip to Monrovia from Foya via helicopter, on which Bockarie carried a seriously wounded soldier,<sup>8154</sup> although it is not clear from Keita's evidence whether this also took place during the Freetown invasion. On Keita's evidence, when Bockarie returned from Liberia on the trip during the Freetown invasion, he told the witness that he had brought back a message from the Accused that the RUF should maintain its controlled areas.<sup>8155</sup>

3574. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Abu Keita is a generally credible witness.<sup>8156</sup> The Prosecution cites TF1-516's account of Bockarie flying to Monrovia from Foya in a helicopter to see the Accused during the Freetown invasion in support of Keita's account.<sup>8157</sup> However, the Trial Chamber notes that TF1-516 admitted on cross-examination that he had made a mistake and that the incident he described had not taken place during the Freetown invasion, but instead, long after the Freetown operation.<sup>8158</sup> The Trial Chamber does not therefore consider that TF1-516's evidence corroborates Keita's evidence concerning trips by Bockarie to Monrovia during January 1999.<sup>8159</sup> The Trial Chamber also notes that Varmuyan Sherif's evidence that before 6 January 1999,<sup>8160</sup> he saw Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten together in Foya supports to some extent Keita's evidence, but only partially, indicating that Bockarie did travel to Foya.<sup>8161</sup>

MILITARY OPERATIONS

3575. However, two other Prosecution witnesses suggest that Bockarie was unable to travel to Monrovia during the Kono and Freetown operations. TF1-371 testified that when Christopher Varmoh (a.k.a. Liberian Mosquito) and Dopoe Menkarzon came to Buedu during the December 1998 attacks to discuss Bockarie travelling to Monrovia to see the Accused, Bockarie did not go because he was “waiting for the success of the operation, especially the Freetown invasion”.<sup>8162</sup> Similarly, Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that Bockarie was too busy co-ordinating the front lines to travel to Monrovia to pick up materiel after Gullit entered Freetown on 6 January 1999 and he sent Fornie and two others instead.<sup>8163</sup>

3576. The Trial Chamber notes the evidence of TF1-371 that after the AFRC and RUF forces retreated from Freetown, in January 1999, Bockarie did travel to Monrovia for a week to meet the Accused, who promoted Bockarie to a “two-star” lieutenant general.<sup>8164</sup> It has assessed TF1-371’s evidence concerning the promotion in a separate section of the Judgement.<sup>8165</sup> However, it is apparent from TF1-371’s evidence that this took place after the Freetown operation had concluded, after the AFRC and RUF forces retreated from Freetown,<sup>8166</sup> in contrast to the evidence of Keita that Bockarie travelled to Monrovia around the time of the Freetown attack.<sup>8167</sup> TF1-371’s evidence that Bockarie was in Monrovia for a week<sup>8168</sup> would also suggest that he is referring to a different trip to that discussed by Abu Keita, who told the Trial Chamber that Bockarie was gone from Buedu for only a day. TF1-371 also does not refer to Bockarie bringing back, as Keita testified, a vehicle containing jeans, t-shirts, medicine and bandages or carrying with him to Monrovia a seriously wounded soldier.<sup>8169</sup> According to TF1-371, Bockarie returned with two sets of the SS uniform used by the Accused’s securities.<sup>8170</sup> TF1-371 also does not refer to any instruction by the Accused that the RUF should maintain its controlled areas. For these reasons, the Trial Chamber is of the view that the trip described by TF1-371 to Monrovia is not the same trip described by Keita and that the trip described by TF1-371 took place later than that referred to by Keita.

3577. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that both TF1-371 and Dauda Aruna Fornie are generally reliable witnesses,<sup>8171</sup> and considers that their evidence supports the conclusion that during the Kono and Freetown operations, Bockarie was too occupied with the military front to travel to Monrovia. The Trial Chamber notes that it has previously considered and accepted the Prosecution allegation that Dauda Aruna Fornie travelled to Monrovia during the Freetown invasion to obtain materiel.<sup>8172</sup>

3578. In light of the lack of corroborative evidence, and the testimonies of TF1-371 and Dauda Aruna Fornie, the Trial Chamber does not accept Abu Keita's evidence that Bockarie travelled to Liberia during the Freetown operation to take instruction from the Accused.

3579. The Prosecution also contends that during the December 1998 offensives, Joseph Marzah, Sampson Weah and Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) met with Bockarie in Buedu and reported back to Yeaten.<sup>8173</sup> The Prosecution relies primarily on the evidence of witness TF1-371. The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371 did testify that Marzah, Weah and Tamba, along with other subordinates of the Accused, Christopher Varmoh and Dopoe Menkarzon, were frequent visitors to Buedu and Bockarie often briefed them on operation plans.<sup>8174</sup>

3580. However, the Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371 did not himself say that these persons passed the briefings given by Bockarie to Yeaten. Furthermore, according to TF1-371, as the Defence pointed out,<sup>8175</sup> these individuals travelled to Buedu for a number of different reasons. For example, TF1-371 recalled that on one occasion Marzah received looted materials, including generators and TV sets, to take back to Monrovia, while on another Varmoh and Menkarzon came to discuss the organisation of an RUF fighting force to give support to the Liberian Anti-Terrorist Unit (ATU) under attack in Lofa County by LURD rebels.<sup>8176</sup> While the Trial Chamber considers that it is likely that these individuals did report back to the Accused on briefings they received from Bockarie, the Prosecution has adduced no evidence to establish a basis for a finding that this did in fact occur.

(x) Specific directions from the Accused

a. To release the captured ECOMOG soldiers

3581. Turning to specific directions alleged to have been given by the Accused to Bockarie, the Prosecution alleges that the Accused ordered Bockarie to release ECOMOG soldiers captured in the attacks on Koidu Town in December 1998.<sup>8177</sup> It is not contested that 11 or 12 Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers were captured by the RUF after this attack, and detained in Buedu<sup>8178</sup> or that they were eventually released.<sup>8179</sup> However, the Defence contests the allegation that the peacekeepers were released pursuant to the Accused's 'orders'.<sup>8180</sup>

3582. In support of its allegation, the Prosecution relies primarily on the evidence of Abu Keita, who testified that after a meeting between Benjamin Yeaten and Bockarie at Dawa, Yeaten informed Bockarie that the Accused wanted the ECOMOG soldiers released to him in Liberia. After a "couple of days", Bockarie told the witness that he had a call from Yeaten telling him that the Accused's request was in fact an order, following which the witness, Marzah, and Sampson drove to Foya in Liberia and handed over the soldiers to Yeaten and Joe Tuah.<sup>8181</sup> While TF1-567 also testified that after the capture of Koidu Town in December 1998, RUF radio operators informed Benjamin Yeaten's radio operator, Sunlight, about the capture of Nigerian soldiers,<sup>8182</sup> he did not state what happened to these soldiers. Keita is the only witness to testify as to instructions from Yeaten concerning their release.

3583. Keita's evidence is contradicted by Issa Sesay, who contends that there were 12 ECOMOG prisoners captured in the December 1998 offensive, who were held at Buedu until Sankoh ordered Bockarie during the Lomé peace talks to release them as a show of commitment to the peace talks.<sup>8183</sup> In his examination-in-chief, Sesay was questioned about Exhibit P-361, an RUF radio log book recording a message sent by Issa Sesay to Foday Sankoh on 27 July 1999 in response to a previous directive by Sankoh to his commanders to turn all prisoners of war over to ICRC, UNOMSIL or ECOMOG.<sup>8184</sup> The message from Sesay notes the existence of 12 Nigerian "war prisoners" at Sesay's headquarters ready to be released to the ICRC.<sup>8185</sup> Sesay confirmed in his testimony that this message referred to the release of the 12 ECOMOG prisoners captured during the December 1998 attacks.<sup>8186</sup>

3584. Sesay's testimony is corroborated by TF1-168 and Fayia Musa, both of whom the Trial Chamber has found to be credible witnesses,<sup>8187</sup> also held prisoner in Buedu during the first half of 1999 and released as part of the Lomé peace talks, who testified that in the same camp where they were held, there were also Nigerian ECOMOG prisoners of war, one of whom was executed in February 1999 after having contracted tuberculosis.<sup>8188</sup> TF1-168 stated that these prisoners were captured from the Kono attack in December 1998.<sup>8189</sup>

3585. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the 12 Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers referred to by Sesay, TF1-168 and Fayia Musa are the same Nigerian ECOMOG soldiers referred to by Abu Keita. In light of the fact that Keita's evidence is uncorroborated, and that his testimony is directly contradicted by Prosecution and Defence witnesses, the Trial Chamber does not accept his evidence that, on the Accused's orders, these captured ECOMOG soldiers were released in December 1998 to Liberia.

b. To send prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison to RUF controlled areas 3586. The Prosecution further alleges that around 7 January 1999, the Accused ordered Bockarie, via Yeaten, to send the high profile prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison to RUF-controlled areas at Buedu.<sup>8190</sup> The Defence made no specific submission as to the alleged instruction to release prisoners from Pademba Road Prison.

3587. Prosecution and Defence witnesses agree that shortly after their entry into Freetown, the troops led by Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) released a number of political detainees from Pademba Road Prison, including, among others, the former President of Sierra Leone Joseph Momoh.<sup>8191</sup> All the witnesses, except Perry Kamara,<sup>8192</sup> agreed that on Bockarie's directive, the released prisoners were sent to Buedu. Three of the five Prosecution witnesses who testified as to this event, Kabbah,<sup>8193</sup> Perry Kamara,<sup>8194</sup> TF1-585,<sup>8195</sup> did not mention any instruction by Benjamin Yeaten or the Accused relevant to the Pademba Road prisoners. Issa Sesay specifically denied any involvement by Yeaten or the Accused in the invasion of Freetown on the 6 January 1999.<sup>8196</sup>

3588. However, Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that less than an hour after Bockarie received the news from Brima concerning the release of the prisoners, he called Benjamin Yeaten on the satellite phone<sup>8197</sup> and Yeaten told Bockarie that the Accused wanted him to ensure that the prisoners released were transferred to Buedu for their protection.<sup>8198</sup> Fornie testified that he was present when Bockarie spoke on the satellite phone to Yeaten to inform him of the release of the prisoners,<sup>8199</sup> that he knew Bockarie was speaking to Yeaten because Bockarie asked the person on the line to confirm that it was “Five-Zero”, and that when the conversation ended, he heard Bockarie telling Mohamed Kabbah that he had received instructions from the Accused through Yeaten.<sup>8200</sup> TF1-516 testified that after Benjamin Yeaten’s radio operator, Sunlight, intercepted Bockarie’s radio communication to Brima about the release of prisoners from Pademba Road Prison in Freetown, Yeaten contacted Bockarie by radio to congratulate him on the release of the prisoners.<sup>8201</sup> While TF1-516 did not specifically state that Yeaten gave Bockarie any directive concerning the Pademba Road prisoners, he later testified that the instruction that Bockarie gave to Brima to send the prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison to Buedu was made following a conversation with Yeaten’s radio station “Base 1”.<sup>8202</sup> TF1-516 stated that he monitored the conversation between Bockarie and Brima on the radio, but it is unclear from his evidence whether he also heard the conversation with Base 1.<sup>8203</sup>

3589. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-516 and Dauda Aruna Fornie are generally credible witnesses.<sup>8204</sup> However, it notes that their accounts differ slightly. TF1-516 stated that the conversation preceding the instruction to send the Pademba Road prisoners to Buedu was made with Yeaten’s radio station “Base 1”,<sup>8205</sup> while according to Fornie, Bockarie spoke to Yeaten via satellite phone.<sup>8206</sup> The Trial Chamber considers such a discrepancy to be inconsequential, having regard to the witness’s practice of using the Liberian radio call signs, “020” or “Base 1”, even when referring to satellite phone conversations.<sup>8207</sup> The Trial Chamber also notes that while Fornie stated that Bockarie instructed Mohamed Kabbah to send a radio message to Gullit to send the released prisoners to the rear for their safety,<sup>8208</sup> Mohamed Kabbah himself did not attest to having personally received this instruction, or being told by Bockarie that it came from Yeaten or the Accused. However, having testified prior to Fornie, Kabbah was not questioned further on his testimony concerning the release of the Pademba Road prisoners. The Trial Chamber considers that the failure to mention such an instruction is explicable by the passage of time and does not undermine Fornie's evidence.

3590. DCT-008 testified that, to his knowledge, Sunlight never intercepted a message between Gullit and Bockarie about the release of prisoners from Pademba Road, although he acknowledged that Base 1 did intercept messages within the RUF net at a later period between Bockarie and Sankoh.<sup>8209</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the evidence of DCT-008 must be treated with caution.<sup>8210</sup>

3591. On the evidence of Dauda Aruna Fornie, as corroborated by TF1-516, which the Trial Chamber considers to be credible, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the Accused passed on instructions Bockarie to transfer the Pademba Road prisoners to Buedu.

c. In relation to military strategy/sending reinforcements

3592. The Prosecution alleges that immediately after the retreat from Freetown and after speaking to the Accused's radio operator, Bockarie issued a command to AFRC/RUF troops near Freetown to set ambushes and set specific attacks.<sup>8211</sup> The Prosecution relies primarily on the evidence of TF1-516. TF1-516 testified that there were communications between Bockarie and the Accused during the invasion of Freetown, after which Bockarie would come to the radio station and draft instructions for the commanders regarding military manoeuvres and instruct Alex Tamba Brima in Freetown to set ambushes and go on attacks.<sup>8212</sup>

3593. However, the Trial Chamber notes that while TF1-516 testified that Bockarie would instruct his commanders after communicating with the Accused via satellite phone, TF1-516 did not directly assert that Bockarie received any instructions from the Accused.<sup>8213</sup> While TF1-516 testified that he was in close physical proximity to Bockarie when he undertook these satellite communications,<sup>8214</sup> the witness did not give evidence as to the content of those conversations.<sup>8215</sup>

3594. In response to the Prosecution's allegation, the Defence points to<sup>8216</sup> evidence from Mohamed Kabbah that he did not recall hearing any orders or instructions from the Accused or his subordinates regarding the Freetown invasion<sup>8217</sup> and, importantly, that Yeaten never gave Bockarie advice or instructions on military strategy.<sup>8218</sup>

instruction related to military strategy.<sup>8222</sup> Kabbah affirmed that while Yeaten did not give directions relating to military strategy in the sense of whether the RUF should attack particular areas or set a certain ambush, he did occasionally offer suggestions in response to problems that Bockarie informed him about, such as the need for reinforcements.<sup>8223</sup>

3596. The Trial Chamber considers that although Kabbah drew a fine distinction between military and non-military advice, and between advice and instruction, such a distinction is not implausible or unreasonable against the texture of the evidence as to the relationship between Bockarie and Yeaten. Hence, for example, the Trial Chamber agrees with the Accused's suggestion that Bockarie, being an experienced General, would not likely have needed Yeaten's specific advice on the need to send reinforcements to Freetown.<sup>8224</sup> Even on Kabbah's evidence, Bockarie told Yeaten when Yeaten made the comment concerning reinforcements that he had already given instructions to RUF commanders to reinforce the troops in Freetown.<sup>8225</sup> However, that Yeaten offered suggestions and advice in response to problems that Bockarie informed him about,<sup>8226</sup> rather than instructions or directives is consistent with Kabbah's evidence that communication between Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten during the Freetown invasion reflected a tense relationship in which rank and equality between the parties was a sensitive issue.<sup>8227</sup> Hence, while the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that any “suggestions” made by Yeaten pertaining to military strategy were in the nature of instructions or directives, the evidence indicates that Bockarie frequently consulted Yeaten on operational and military decisions. The Trial Chamber considers Fornie’s evidence that sometimes Bockarie “would contact Benjamin to consult him on some decisions before he ever took them” to be corroborative of this view.<sup>8228</sup>

d. To burn down Freetown

3597. The Trial Chamber has also had regard to TF1-516’s evidence that on one occasion when the forces in Freetown were under increasing pressure from ECOMOG attack, he overheard Bockarie speaking to Gullit on the radio specifically instructing Gullit to burn down areas in Freetown, including government buildings, in order to attract the attention of the international community.<sup>8229</sup> According to TF1-516, this order followed a satellite phone conversation with “020” in Liberia.<sup>8230</sup>

3598. The Accused testified that he did not know about or have anything to do with Bockarie’s instructions to Gullit to burn government buildings to raise alarm in the international community.<sup>8231</sup> The Accused testified that he did not condone amputations carried out on civilians in Sierra Leone, emphasising that he had no motive whatsoever to order any kind of atrocities in Freetown.<sup>8232</sup>

3599. The Defence suggests that the violence coinciding with the AFRC retreat from Freetown after the January 6 invasion was attributable to a general breakdown of command and control and the rogue elements within the retreating forces, rather than any specific order.<sup>8233</sup> They cite the evidence of TF1-371 that immediately after the retreat from Freetown in 1999, discipline was not under control for the AFRC faction leaving Freetown, although somewhere along the way the commanders took control of their men.<sup>8234</sup> However,

TF1-371 explicitly noted that the AFRC faction in Freetown “managed to remain cohesive despite maybe insubordination from other commanders”.<sup>8235</sup>

3600. The Trial Chamber recalls that a number of witnesses testified to a specific directive from Bockarie to Alex Tamba Brima to destroy property in Freetown as Brima retreated. For example, TF1-516 overheard Bockarie speaking to Gullit on the radio specifically instructing Gullit “to burn down the fucking place”.<sup>8236</sup> Therefore the violence coinciding with the AFRC retreat cannot entirely be attributable to rogue elements. However, according to TF1-516’s evidence, Bockarie only made this directive after a conversation with the Accused in Liberia; TF1-516 did not testify that the Accused otherwise had anything to do with the order or even that it was discussed in the conversation. Due to the lack of evidentiary basis, the Trial Chamber is not able to find that the Accused, either directly or through Yeaten, directed or advised Bockarie that the troops in Freetown should destroy property in Freetown as they retreated after the 6 January 1999 invasion.

e. In relation to the ceasefire announced in mid-January 1999

3601. Finally, the Prosecution cites the Accused’s evidence that he and his government successfully secured a ceasefire between the RUF and the Government of Sierra Leone in mid-January 1999<sup>8237</sup> as evidence of the Accused’s “control” over the Freetown operation.<sup>8238</sup> However, neither the Accused nor any other witness suggest that the Liberian Government’s role in securing a cease-fire reflected any control of or involvement by the Accused in the Freetown operation, or that it was indicative of any superior-subordinate relationship between the Accused and the AFRC/RUF. The Accused himself stated that the cease-fire was engineered as part of the ongoing peace talks.<sup>8239</sup> Due to the lack of any evidentiary basis in support, the Trial Chamber considers that the Liberian Government's role in securing a cease-fire does not implicate the Accused's involvement in the Freetown operation.

(xi) General evidence that the Accused directed the Freetown operation

3602. The Trial Chamber has also considered the evidence of Varmuyan Sherif that on 6 January 1999, he heard Bockarie over the BBC stating that he would not retreat from Freetown except when his "father", the Accused, told him to,<sup>8240</sup> and the evidence of Joseph Marzah that he personally took part in the Freetown attack and that during the attack the RUF took instructions from Charles Taylor.<sup>8241</sup>

3603. In relation to Sherif's evidence, the Trial Chamber notes that of the BBC broadcasts in December 1998 or January 1999 admitted into the record, none support Sherif's testimony that Bockarie made any reference to the Accused or that he would only stop fighting on the instruction of the Accused.<sup>8242</sup> On the contrary, Exhibit P-350A, a clip from BBC Focus on Africa dated 8 January 1999 indicates that instead, Bockarie said his forces would only stop fighting if Foday Sankoh was freed from prison.<sup>8243</sup> No other witness corroborates Sherif's account of Bockarie making any statement to this effect. In light of the lack of testimonial evidence corroborating Sherif's evidence, the lack of documentary evidence of the BBC broadcast Sherif testified to, and considering the content of the BBC broadcast of 8 January 1999 that is in evidence, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Bockarie made a statement over the BBC stating that he would not retreat from Freetown except when the Accused told him to.

3604. Concerning Marzah's evidence, the Trial Chamber recalls that Marzah's evidence must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>8244</sup> Significantly, no other witness places Marzah in Freetown during the January 1999 attack. The Trial Chamber notes that Defence counsel confronted Marzah with a statement that he made to the Prosecution on 13 March 2006, in which he said that he was in Monrovia and medically unable to join the RUF during the Freetown attack of January 1999.<sup>8245</sup> Marzah could not recall the year in which the Freetown attack took place but explained that during the attack, he was injured by a rocket and could not continue, and that he met Johnny Paul Koroma and Eddie Kanneh in Buedu but did not know how he had got there.<sup>8246</sup> In light of these inconsistencies, the Trial Chamber is not able to accept Marzah's evidence that he participated in the Freetown attack or his evidence concerning the role of the Accused in that attack.

(xii) Conclusion on whether the Accused had control over the Freetown operation

3605. Although the evidence establishes that the Accused and Bockarie, whether directly or via Yeaten, communicated regularly and frequently during December 1998 and January 1999 concerning the operations in Kono and Freetown, it is not clear that the Accused had any level of control over the conduct of these operations. While the evidence indicates that Bockarie consulted Benjamin Yeaten or the Accused from time to time on operational decisions, the tone of these communications was largely in the nature of "suggestions" made by Yeaten rather than instructions and Bockarie spoke to Yeaten as part of a "sisterly or brotherly operation", or a "joint operation".<sup>8247</sup> Even if, as Kabbah testified, Bockarie followed instructions by Yeaten because he assumed such orders came from the Accused,<sup>8248</sup> there is little evidence that such orders were given. Of the instructions that the Prosecution allege that the Accused gave to Bockarie, the Trial Chamber has found that only one has been proved beyond reasonable doubt, that the Accused instructed Bockarie to transfer the Pademba Road prisoners to Buedu for their protection. The Trial Chamber considers that this is insufficient to establish, as the Prosecution has alleged, that the Accused directed or had control over the Kono and Freetown operations in December 1998 and January 1999.

Findings

3607. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Bockarie travelled to Monrovia during the Kono-Freetown operations to take instruction from the Accused.

3608. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused directed Bockarie: 1) to release the ECOMOG soldiers captured in December 1998; 2) to burn down Freetown, 3) to effect a ceasefire in mid-January 1999; 4) to send reinforcements to Freetown; or 5) generally in relation to military strategy.

3610. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt the Accused directed the Kono and Freetown operations in December 1998 and January 1999.

Summary of Findings

3611. The Trial Chamber has found that -

- (i) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that when the AFRC/RUF forces were pulling out of Kono during the Intervention, the radio station of Benjamin Yeaten in Monrovia, intercepted a radio transmission between AFRC/RUF radio stations about the withdrawal and intervened to ask why the forces were withdrawing;

- (ii) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused told Johnny Paul Koroma to capture Kono, and after a first failed attempt, the Accused gave instructions for a second attack, which led to the ultimate recapture of Koidu Town in Kono District by the AFRC/RUF in late February/early March 1998;
- (iii) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused told Bockarie to be sure to maintain control of Kono for the purpose of trading diamonds with him for arms and ammunition;
- (iv) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused participated in the planning of or instructed the AFRC/RUF to recapture Kono in mid-June 1998, as the first step in a detailed plan with an overarching mission to recapture Freetown or otherwise;
- (v) It has been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused advised Bockarie to recapture Kono so that the diamonds there would be used to purchase arms and ammunition. Such advice was transmitted to RUF commanders both through Bockarie and Liberian emissaries, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and/or Ibrahim Bah, and resulted in the Fitti-Fatta attack in mid-June 1998;
- (vi) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in November/December 1998 the Accused and Sam Bockarie jointly designed a two-pronged attack on Kono, Kenema and Freetown as the ultimate destination, the Accused emphasising the need to first attack Kono District;
- (vii) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused told Bockarie to make the operation “fearful” in order to force the Government into negotiation and free Foday Sankoh from prison and that after the Waterworks meeting, the Accused told Bockarie to use “all means” to get to Freetown in a satellite phone conversation. Subsequently, Bockarie named the operation “Operation No Living Thing”, implying that anything that stood in their way should be eliminated;

MILITARY OPERATIONS

- (viii) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Gullit resumed communications with Bockarie on the death of SAJ Musa and that Gullit maintained frequent daily contact with Bockarie throughout the Freetown operation to discuss the ongoing military situation in the capital;
- (ix) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Bockarie ordered his troops to advance towards Freetown, with the aim of joining forces with Gullit in Freetown, and that Gullit, Bockarie and Bockarie's commanders coordinated in order to achieve that aim;
- (x) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that although the attempts at coordination were largely unsuccessful, a small contingent of the troops Bockarie sent as reinforcements were able to join Gullit's troops in Freetown some time after Gullit's forces had captured the State House;
- (xi) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that when Gullit's forces withdrew from Freetown, Bockarie instructed his forces on the outskirts of the city to ensure a secure line of retreat for the withdrawing troops, and that after the retreat from Freetown the RUF and AFRC made joint efforts to re-attack the city;
- (xii) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that, throughout the Freetown operation, Bockarie issued a number of instructions to Gullit, including an order to use terror tactics against the civilian population on the retreat from Freetown, which were implemented by Gullit and the fighters in Freetown. Bockarie exercised effective command and control over Gullit during the capture of the State House and Pademba Road Prison;
- (xiii) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that following his first conversation with Gullit after the death of SAJ Musa, Bockarie and Gullit coordinated in their efforts to capture Freetown. From that point on, SAJ Musa's original plan to attack Freetown was abandoned, and Gullit's movements were incorporated into the Bockarie/Taylor plan, as had been contemplated by Bockarie and the Accused;

MILITARY OPERATIONS

- (xiv) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused gave advice to Bockarie and received updates in relation to the progress of the operations in Kono and Freetown in the implementation of their plan. Bockarie was in frequent and even daily contact via radio or satellite phone with the Accused in December 1998 and January 1999, either directly or through Benjamin Yeaten. Yeaten travelled to Sierra Leone to meet with Bockarie in Buedu during this period;
- (xv) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Bockarie travelled to Monrovia during the Kono-Freetown operations to take instruction from the Accused;
- (xvi) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused directed Bockarie: 1) to release the ECOMOG soldiers captured in December 1998; 2) to burn down Freetown, 3) to effect a ceasefire in mid-January 1999; 4) to send reinforcements to Freetown; or 5) generally in relation to military strategy;
- (xvii) The Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused directed Bockarie to send prisoners released from Pademba Road Prison to RUF controlled areas;
- (xviii) The Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt the Accused directed the Kono and Freetown operations in December 1998 and January 1999.

Conclusion

3612. In February 1998, ECOMOG forces intervened in Sierra Leone and expelled the RUF/AFRC Junta from Freetown, reinstating Tejan Kabbah's SLPP Government to power in March 1998. Although ECOMOG initially forced RUF and AFRC forces to withdraw from Kono, under the orders of AFRC leader Johnny Paul Koroma, these forces managed to recapture Koidu Town in late February/early March 1998. A few weeks later, ECOMOG forces regained control of Koidu Town. In mid-June 1998, forces under the ultimate direction of Sam Bockarie, who had by then assumed leadership of the RUF/AFRC forces, made another attempt to take Koidu Town, code-named Operation Fitti-Fatta. The Fitti-Fatta attack was unsuccessful, and in late November/early December 1998, after a trip by

Bockarie to Liberia where he met with the Accused, a meeting was held at Waterworks in which Bockarie ordered RUF/AFRC troops under his command to carry out a two pronged attack on Kono and Kenema, with Freetown as the ultimate target. The attacks on Kenema and Kono were launched in mid-December 1998. While the former was unsuccessful, the latter attack succeeded, and the RUF/AFRC troops continued towards Freetown. On 6 January 1999, a group of predominantly AFRC troops led by Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) launched an assault on Freetown.

3613. The Trial Chamber has found that from the time of the Intervention, the Accused and his subordinates communicated the imperative to maintain control over Kono, a diamondiferous area. When the AFRC/RUF forces were pulling out of Kono during the Intervention, the radio station of Benjamin Yeaten, Director of the Accused's Special Security Service, intercepted a radio transmission between AFRC/RUF radio stations about the withdrawal and intervened to ask why the forces were withdrawing. Then, in several satellite phone conversations with Johnny Paul Koroma, who was trying to make arrangements to get to Liberia by helicopter, the Accused instructed Koroma to capture Kono. After a first failed attempt, the Accused gave instructions for a second attack, which led to the ultimate recapture of Koidu Town in Kono District in late February/early March 1998. Once Kono had been recaptured, the Accused told Bockarie to be sure to maintain control over Kono for the purpose of trading diamonds with him for arms and ammunition.

3614. The Trial Chamber has found that the Accused advised Bockarie to recapture Kono following its loss to ECOMOG, again so that the diamonds there could be used to purchase arms and ammunition. Such advice was transmitted to RUF commanders both through Bockarie and Liberian emissaries Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and/or Ibrahim Bah and resulted in the Fitti-Fatta attack on Koidu Town in mid-June 1998. Contrary to the Prosecution's submission, the evidence did not establish that the Accused participated in the formulation of a multi-axis operational attack plan leading to Freetown prior to the Fitti-Fatta attack.

3615. The Fitti-Fatta attack was unsuccessful, and in November 1998/December 1998, Sam Bockarie went with a delegation to Burkina Faso via Monrovia, meeting the Accused on the way to Burkina Faso and on the way back to Sierra Leone. In their meetings, the Accused jointly designed with Bockarie the two-pronged attack on Kono, Kenema and Freetown as the ultimate destination. This plan was outlined by Bockarie to his commanders in a meeting at Waterworks on his return to Sierra Leone. Although the idea to advance towards Freetown was already in discussion when Bockarie went to Monrovia, the Accused emphasised to Bockarie the need to first attack Kono District and told Bockarie to make the operation “fearful” in order to pressure the Government of Sierra Leone into negotiations on the release of Foday Sankoh from prison. After the Waterworks meeting, Bockarie briefed the Accused over a satellite phone conversation about the meeting. During this conversation, the Accused told Bockarie to use “all means” to get to Freetown. Subsequently, Bockarie named the operation “Operation No Living Thing”, implying that anything that stood in their way should be eliminated.

3616. The Trial Chamber has found that at this time there were two plans to attack Freetown, one made by Bockarie with the Accused, and one made by breakaway AFRC commander Solomon Anthony Joseph Musa (a.k.a. SAJ Musa), whose troops had already started an advance towards Freetown at the end of June/beginning of July 1998.

3617. Consistent with discussions he had made with the Accused, Bockarie invited SAJ Musa after the Waterworks meeting to join his efforts to attack Freetown but Musa refused. However, with SAJ Musa’s death in or around 23 December 1998, when Gullit took over the leadership of the troops at Benguema and resumed contact with Bockarie, Bockarie and Gullit coordinated in their efforts to capture Freetown. From that point onwards, the SAJ Musa’s original plan was abandoned, and Gullit followed the Bockarie/Taylor plan, as had been contemplated by Bockarie and the Accused. During the operation, Bockarie exercised effective command and control over Gullit, issuing a number of instructions to Gullit, including the order to use terror tactics against the civilian population on the retreat from Freetown. The Trial Chamber did not make a finding as to how SAJ Musa was killed, but noted that his death had been mentioned by Bockarie at the time of the Waterworks meeting.

3618. The Trial Chamber has found that the Accused gave advice to Bockarie and received updates in relation to the progress of the operations in Kono and Freetown in the implementation of their plan. Bockarie was in frequent contact via radio or satellite phone with the Accused in December 1998 and January 1999, either directly or through Benjamin Yeaten. Yeaten also travelled to Sierra Leone to meet with Bockarie in Buedu during this period. However, it is not clear that the Accused had any level of control over the conduct of these operations. Of the instructions allegedly given to Bockarie by the Accused during this period, the Trial Chamber finds only one to have been proved beyond reasonable doubt, that being that the Accused instructed Bockarie to transfer the Pademba Road prisoners to Buedu for their protection. This finding is insufficient to establish, as the Prosecution has alleged, that the Accused directed or had control over the Kono and Freetown operations in December 1998 and January 1999.

3619. The Prosecution alleges that the Accused provided communications equipment and training to the RUF, the benefits of which continued throughout the conflict in Sierra Leone.<sup>8249</sup> For example, through radio sets provided by the Accused, the RUF was later able to communicate with the Accused in Liberia and the RUF in Côte d'Ivoire.<sup>8250</sup> In addition, radio operators such as Foday Lansana (a.k.a. CO Nya), an NPFL member, installed equipment in Sierra Leone and then continued to operate with the RUF in Sierra Leone during the conflict.<sup>8251</sup>

3620. The Defence denies that the Accused provided communications equipment and training to the RUF which benefited the RUF during the conflict in Sierra Leone. The Defence concedes that the Accused sent an NPFL radio and NPFL radio operators to Sierra Leone during the period of the two groups' cooperation against ULIMO, in 1991 or 1992.<sup>8252</sup> The Defence argues, however, that the only purpose of this was to allow the NPFL to monitor the progress of NPFL operations in Sierra Leone.<sup>8253</sup> The Defence claims that no NPFL radio sets or operators were left inside Sierra Leone after the NPFL withdrew, and that no RUF operators had been trained by the NPFL.<sup>8254</sup>

3621. The Defence also notes that the RUF was capable of training radio operators of its own without assistance from the Accused, for Sankoh was an expert in communications, and that the RUF used radio sets captured in combat.<sup>8255</sup> Finally, the Defence contends there is no evidence to prove that the Accused knew that RUF fighters were being trained on the radio by NPFL.<sup>8256</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Foday Lansana

3622. Witness Foday Lansana testified that he was born in Liberia and joined the NPFL in February or March 1990.<sup>8257</sup> Shortly thereafter, he underwent two months of training with the NPFL to become a radio operator, and was instructed by Emmanuel Zor and Roosevelt Nyameleyan.<sup>8258</sup> In September or October 1990, James Galakpalah, the deputy overall signal commander of the NPFL, requested that the witness undertake an advanced training on codes.<sup>8259</sup>

3623. While Lansana was working as a radio operator for the NPFL in Foya, Liberia, around July or August 1991, the operators received an instruction from the overall signal commander of the NPFL, Victor Gensei, through his deputy James Galakpalah, requesting that some of the communications operators in Foya be a part of the communications operations in Sierra Leone. Lansana, Nyameleyan and Moses Gargue, another operator in Foya, then travelled to Sierra Leone.<sup>8260</sup>

3624. They arrived in Koindu, Sierra Leone in July or August 1991.<sup>8261</sup> Sankoh instructed Lansana and the other radio operators to install a radio at his headquarters near Koidu Town in an area called Baidu. They installed the radio and tested it, calling various stations in Liberia.<sup>8262</sup> The witness testified that this was the very first radio station operated under Sankoh in Sierra Leone, and was the only radio station there at this time.<sup>8263</sup>

3625. In May 1992, Taylor gave an instruction for all NPFL forces to evacuate from Sierra Leone. Lansana testified that he left Sierra Leone and went to Vahun, Liberia, bringing with him the radio set which he had installed in Sierra Leone for Sankoh.<sup>8264</sup>

3626. Approximately two weeks later, Galakpalah sent a message to Lansana's commander in Vahun, stating that Sierra Leone did not have any radios, and requesting that Lansana go to Pendembu, Sierra Leone with a radio set for Sankoh.<sup>8265</sup> Galakpalah also communicated that Lansana had been promoted by the NPFL<sup>8266</sup> to be Overall Signal Commander for the RUF in Sierra Leone.<sup>8267</sup>

3627. Lansana moved to Sierra Leone immediately, and travelled to Pendembu with the radio set he had taken from Baidu. He installed the radio at Sankoh's residence there, and tested it by establishing radio contact with Taylor.<sup>8268</sup> Lansana remained in Pendembu for the rest of 1992 and 1993, where he was asked by Sankoh to train RUF fighters on how to conduct communications and encode and build radios.<sup>8269</sup>

3628. In 1992, a Guinean and Nigerian contingent of government troops under the NPRC attacked the RUF position in Bayama, Sierra Leone, and the RUF captured communications equipment. Because of this they set up radio stations in Kailahun, Bunumbu, Gandorhun, Koidu, and Quiva, which were installed by the operators Lansana had trained.<sup>8270</sup> A few of the fighters whom Lansana trained included Alfred Brown, Sam Lamboi, Sahr James, and King Perry Kamara, among others.<sup>8271</sup>

3629. Lansana continued his work as an overall commander in Kangari Hills, Sierra Leone from April 1994 until 1997.<sup>8272</sup>

Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara

3630. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8273</sup> was captured by the RUF in April 1991 in Zimmi, Sierra Leone, and taken to an RUF training base in Pujehun, Sierra Leone. Two months later Foday Sankoh came to the base and told them he needed people to be trained in radio operations.<sup>8274</sup> The witness and twelve others were trained by Sankoh.<sup>8275</sup> After one month of training, Sankoh told the witness and the other trainees that he was going to Liberia to meet with Taylor and ask for additional radios. While Sankoh was in Liberia, Sierra Leonean government forces attacked, and so the RUF fled to Liberia.<sup>8276</sup>

3631. In 1992, Kamara returned to Sierra Leone with the RUF and Sankoh requested his fighters to continue their communications training in Pendembu, Sierra Leone.<sup>8277</sup> Foday Lansana, an NPFL officer from Liberia, was introduced to the fighters and told them that Taylor sent him to provide training on the use of Liberian and Sierra Leonean code, as well as how to send and receive messages from Liberia.<sup>8278</sup> Lansana trained 15 men, including the witness.<sup>8279</sup> Kamara remained an RUF radio operator until at least 1998.<sup>8280</sup>

3632. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie (a.k.a. DAF)<sup>8281</sup> a Sierra Leonean, was captured by RUF rebels in April 1991 at the age of 16.<sup>8282</sup> He testified that late in the rainy season of 1991, he was taken for advanced military training in Bomi Hills, Liberia.<sup>8283</sup> At that time, Foday Sankoh arrived in Bomi Hills and told Bockarie to assign men to various units. joined the NPFL Signal Unit in Bomi Hills for training, which lasted until mid-1992.<sup>8284</sup> Joseph Demmy, who was also called “Bedcat”, or “Beckier”, was in charge of the NPFL Signal Unit at that time.<sup>8285</sup> The witness recalled that at this time the RUF had a radio station in the Kailahun area based in Pendembu at which Foday Lansana was the commander.<sup>8286</sup>

3633. During this time, the RUF did not have its own communications system and depended on the NPFL’s, and the two groups shared codes.<sup>8287</sup> In late 1992, the witness moved to Pendembu, where Sankoh taught the operators British voice procedures. The RUF operators then used different codes from the Liberian operators, more specifically, British codes, but used Liberian codes to communicate with the NPFL.<sup>8288</sup>

3634. After the training, the witness was assigned to Kuiva and then Mendekeima, Sierra Leone. At that time, at the end of 1992, the RUF had four radio stations in Sierra Leone which could contact stations in Liberia.<sup>8289</sup> Sankoh later assigned the witness to Kailahun town, Sierra Leone, where he became a control station commander, responsible for transmitting instructions between Sankoh and the frontlines, and between Sankoh and Taylor.<sup>8290</sup> The witness continued his work as a radio operator until 1999.<sup>8291</sup>

3635. Witness TF1-585, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8292</sup> was trained for three months in 1995 by Foday Lansana to be a radio operator in Sierra Leone. The witness was later sent to Zogoda, where she was trained for six months by Foday Sankoh.<sup>8293</sup> The witness worked as

Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

3636. Witness Mohamed Kabbah testified that he was born in Kailahun Town, Sierra Leone, and captured by “rebels” there in April 1991.<sup>8296</sup> In early 1992, Kabbah was sent to Gohun village, in Kailahun, Sierra Leone to train as a radio operator.<sup>8297</sup> He testified that he was trained by CO Moses, who was from Liberia, while Foday Lansana, also from Liberia, conducted an exercise with the trainees to check what they had learned.<sup>8298</sup> Kabbah completed his radio training in early 1992, and worked as a radio operator until at least 1999.<sup>8299</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-516

3637. Witness TF1-516 testified that in approximately 1994 he was trained to be a radio operator by Foday Lansana at Kangari Hills, Sierra Leone.<sup>8300</sup> Foday Sankoh later requested that all newly trained radio operators, including the witness, be transferred to his location at Zogoda, Sierra Leone. The witness spent six more months being trained by Sankoh in radio operations in Zogoda, and completed his training in late 1995 or early 1996.<sup>8301</sup> The witness remained a radio operator until at least 1999.<sup>8302</sup>

Prosecution Witness Alice Pyne

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

3639. Witness Isaac Mongor, a Liberian trader and RUF senior commander,<sup>8308</sup> was captured by NPFL rebels in December 1989.<sup>8309</sup> In March or April 1990, he was instructed by Taylor to help Foday Sankoh train people to fight in Sierra Leone, and the witness thereafter trained fighters at Camp Naama.<sup>8310</sup> Mongor testified that after they captured Pendembu in 1991, Sankoh brought them a radio operator named Foday Lansana, who brought a radio set with him. Sankoh said that Taylor had given him Lansana in order to establish radio communication and operate the radio for them.<sup>8311</sup>

The Accused

3640. The Accused denied knowing Foday Lansana, saying that he first saw him on the stand at trial, and denied sending Lansana to train RUF fighters in Sierra Leone.<sup>8312</sup> He also testified that Lansana was not NPFL,<sup>8313</sup> but stole an NPFL radio and went to Sierra Leone on his own initiative.<sup>8314</sup> The Accused stated that he gave direct orders to cease

The Defence challenges Lansana's testimony as to the fact that he was ordered to Sierra Leone because Sankoh had no radio by observing that Sankoh had communication with Liberia before May 1992. This is a misinterpretation of Lansana's testimony, as Lansana testified that he installed a radio in Sierra Leone July or August 1991, Sankoh used this radio until May 1992, at which point Taylor ordered the withdrawal of troops, and Lansana took the radio back with him to Liberia. Lansana contends that he was ordered to return this very same radio to Sankoh two weeks later.

communications with the RUF after May 1992, and did not believe that Galakpalah would have given orders to Lansana counter to this.<sup>8315</sup>

3641. The Accused also questioned why a young person such as Lansana, without significant experience, and of whom the Accused had not heard, would have received a special assignment to train radio operators in Sierra Leone with Sankoh.<sup>8316</sup> The Accused also suggested that Lansana could not have travelled from Liberia into Sierra Leone after Operation Top Final in May 1992 without encountering ULIMO.<sup>8317</sup>

3642. The Accused stated that “to the best of his knowledge”, Foday Sankoh captured most of the radios he used from Sierra Leonean government forces.<sup>8318</sup>

Defence Witness Martin George

3643. Witness Martin George, (a.k.a. Mao Mao), a lieutenant, captain, major, brigade commander, colonel, and area commander of the RUF,<sup>8319</sup> testified that while he was being trained at Crab Hole, a section of Camp Naama, in Liberia, from January to March 1991, he was trained in radio communications by Foday Sankoh.<sup>8320</sup>

3644. A few months later, when his RUF battalion was in Sierra Leone in 1991 to 1992, they captured a long-range Thompson radio in Zimmi before they reached Pujehun. They installed the radio station in Potoru, in Sierra Leone and from then on were in communication with Foday Sankoh and others in Kailahun so they could keep each other updated as to their positions. When the RUF moved towards Pujehun, they left the radio in Potoru. They were able to capture other radio sets along the way and installed one in Pujehun.<sup>8321</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3645. George testified that Alfred Brown, of the RUF, trained Dauda Aruna Fornie and King Perry, and he knew this was so because “[t]here was nobody to train signal men whom [he] knew because [Brown] was the most senior”.<sup>8322</sup>

Defence Witness Sam Kolleh

3646. Witness Sam Kolleh testified that Foday Sankoh was an expert on radio communications.<sup>8323</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

3647. Witness Issa Sesay, an RUF commander,<sup>8324</sup> was recruited into the RUF in approximately 1990 by Foday Sankoh.<sup>8325</sup> He testified that from 1991 to 1993, the RUF used field radios captured from government troops to communicate.<sup>8326</sup> Sankoh was a professional communications expert, and so he was the one who trained all of the RUF radio operators while he was head of the RUF.<sup>8327</sup>

Defence Witness John Vincent

3648. Witness John Vincent, a Liberian Vanguard commander,<sup>8328</sup> joined the RUF in 1990.<sup>8329</sup> He testified that while training at Camp Naama, in Liberia in 1991, Foday Sankoh taught the recruits how to use radio sets. He stated that Sankoh told them he had learned how to operate a radio during his time in the Sierra Leonean Army.<sup>8330</sup>

3649. Vincent also testified that when he was stationed in Pendembu, Sierra Leone, in 1991 Sankoh had a radio, and Sankoh’s radio operator was Foday Lansana. Vincent heard that Lansana was a former NPFL radio operator who had escaped a ULIMO attack in Liberia and had entered Sierra Leone with his radio. He heard that Lansana met some Liberians who took him to Sankoh, and Lansana joined the RUF. The witness believed that Lansana's radio was the one he encountered with Sankoh in Pendembu.<sup>8331</sup> The witness captured a long-range communication radio, at Lelehan, Sierra Leone, in December 1991, when he captured a ULIMO soldier.<sup>8332</sup>

3650. Witness DCT-292 was a member of the RUF from 1990 to 1995.<sup>8333</sup> He testified that the NPFL did not have communication with the RUF in 1991 to 1992, as the RUF did not have a radio in Koindu, Sierra Leone. The RUF only acquired radios when Kono, Sierra Leone was attacked around 1994.<sup>8334</sup>

Defence Witness Joseph Dehmie

3651. Witness Joseph Dehmie, (a.k.a. Bearcat), an NPFL radio operator,<sup>8335</sup> testified that he was born in Liberia and was a member of the NPFL from 1990 to 1997.<sup>8336</sup> After one month he was recruited by James Galakpalah to train with the Signal Unit as a radio operator.<sup>8337</sup> Dehmie worked as a radio operator known as Bearcat in Bomi Hills for two years, from September 1990 to October 1992.<sup>8338</sup>

3652. Dehmie knew Dauda Aruna Fornie, but denied that Fornie trained as a radio operator in Bomi Hills in 1991, claiming that Fornie was his cook.<sup>8339</sup> It was not possible that Fornie was an operator without Dehmie's knowledge, because had he been an operator there at that time, Dehmie would have known.<sup>8340</sup> He stated that at the time he was in Bomi Hills, non-radio operators were not allowed in the radio room, and Fornie never operated NPFL radios.<sup>8341</sup> He further denied that the NPFL sent radio operators to Sierra Leone.<sup>8342</sup> Dehmie also denied that Sankoh arrived at Moni Hills and instructed Bockarie to assign men to units, stating that Sankoh did not once come to Bomi Hills from October 1990 to September 1992.<sup>8343</sup>

3653. With regards to the evidence of Foday Lansana, Dehmie denied that Galakpalah ordered Roosevelt Nyameleyan and Lansana to travel from Foya, Liberia to Sierra Leone to set up radio communication there. First, there was no radio station in Foya between 1991 and 1992. Second, the witness knew Nyameleyan, and stated he was never assigned to a radio station in Foya between 1991 and 1992.<sup>8344</sup> Finally, Dehmie stated that throughout his entire career with the NPFL, he never heard of a person named CO Nya, Lansana's nickname.<sup>8345</sup>

3654. It is undisputed that one or more NPFL radios and radio operators entered Sierra Leone during the NPFL's cooperation with the RUF in their fight against ULIMO, from 1991 to 1992.<sup>8346</sup> The Prosecution contends that these NPFL operators, including Foday Lansana, trained RUF fighters in radio communication, and the RUF continued to benefit from this training throughout the conflict in Sierra Leone.<sup>8347</sup> The Prosecution also alleges that the Accused provided radio sets to the RUF, which the RUF later used to communicate with the Accused in Liberia and with the RUF in Côte d'Ivoire during the conflict in Sierra Leone.<sup>8348</sup>

3655. The Defence contends that all equipment and operators were evacuated in 1992,<sup>8349</sup> and denies that any of these NPFL operators, including Lansana, trained RUF fighters at this time.<sup>8350</sup> The Defence also argues that there is no evidence to prove that Taylor knew that RUF fighters were being trained on the radio by the NPFL.<sup>8351</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3656. The Prosecution has presented substantial evidence that Foday Lansana trained RUF fighters in Sierra Leone in radio communications from 1991 until as late as 1995. Lansana himself testified to this fact, and it was confirmed by several witnesses, including Perry Kamara, TF1-585, Mohamed Kabbah, TF1-516, Alice Pyne, and Isaac Mongor.<sup>8352</sup>

3657. The Defence contends that Lansana was not sent by the NPFL but entered Sierra Leone independently and of his own accord, citing the evidence of Defence Witness John Vincent.<sup>8353</sup> Vincent, however, only “heard” this information regarding Lansana, and did not specify his source. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that John Vincent’s testimony should be considered with caution and requires corroboration<sup>8354</sup> and does not find his testimony reliable. Lansana presented substantial evidence that he trained with the NPFL and answered to NPFL leaders before he left for Sierra Leone.<sup>8355</sup> Numerous witnesses, including Defence witnesses, testified to Lansana having been a member of the NPFL in Liberia before he joined the RUF in Sierra Leone in approximately 1991.<sup>8356</sup>

3658. The Accused testified that Lansana was not an NPFL member, that he, Taylor, did not send him to Sierra Leone, and that Lansana stole an NPFL radio and went to Sierra Leone on his own initiative.<sup>8357</sup> The Accused, however, provided no basis for his assertion that Lansana was not an NPFL member, nor for his assertion that Lansana stole an NPFL radio. Moreover, the Accused did not explain how Lansana could have stolen an NPFL radio if he was not an NPFL member. He testified that he did not know Lansana, from which it can be concluded that he could not have known whether Lansana was an NPFL member, nor whether he stole a radio. Defence counsel cross-examined Lansana on how he came to join the NPFL, his knowledge of the Accused’s orders for the NPFL to evacuate Sierra Leone,<sup>8358</sup> and whether he had been court martialled or disciplined for deserting the NPFL,<sup>8359</sup> thereby implying that Lansana was a member of the NPFL. Recalling that Lansana is a generally credible witness,<sup>8360</sup> the Trial Chamber accepts Lansana's evidence, which was corroborated by other witnesses, and finds that he was sent by the NPFL to train RUF fighters in Sierra Leone.

3659. In addition to evidence that Lansana, an NPFL operator, trained RUF members, the Prosecution presented evidence that Dauda Aruna Fornie, a Sierra Leonean RUF member, was trained by the NPFL Signal Unit in radio communication in 1992, in Bomi Hills, Liberia. Defence Witness Joseph Dehmie contradicted this testimony, denying that Fornie was trained as a radio operator, and stating that Fornie was his "cook". Dehmie's testimony, however, is uncorroborated, while Fornie provided substantial details as to his work as a radio operator. Further, several other witnesses, including Defence witnesses, contradicted Dehmie and identified Fornie as a radio operator for the RUF.<sup>8361</sup> The Trial Chamber did not find Dehmie's evidence credible. It accepts Fornie's testimony and finds that he was trained in radio communications by the NPFL in Liberia.

3660. Several witnesses testified as to whether the RUF continued to benefit from this training by the NPFL during the conflict in Sierra Leone. Lansana stated that he remained in Sierra Leone through at least 1997, TF1-516 attested to being trained by him in 1994<sup>8362</sup> and TF1-585 attested to being trained by him in 1995. Witnesses Kamara, TF1-585, Kabbah, TF1-516, Pyne and Mongor all testified that they were trained by Lansana. Kamara remained a radio operator with the RUF until at least 1998,<sup>8363</sup> Kabbah, TF1-516 and Pyne remained operators until at least 1999,<sup>8364</sup> and TF1-585 until at least 2001.<sup>8365</sup> Lansana himself also lists the names of other radio operators that he trained.<sup>8366</sup> Lansana testified that following an attack in 1992, RUF fighters captured a significant amount of communications equipment, which was installed by operators trained by Lansana.<sup>8367</sup> Additionally, Fornie testified that he was sent to Liberia for training with the NPFL signal unit; he remained a radio operator with the RUF until 1999.<sup>8368</sup>

3661. Though the Defence presents credible evidence that Sankoh trained many fighters in radio communications, and was himself an expert in communications,<sup>8369</sup> this evidence is not dispositive, for it does not exclude the possibility that Lansana, of the NPFL, also trained operators. Similarly, the Defence argument that Lansana was only an “assistant operator” and therefore not qualified to train RUF fighters does not negate the overwhelming evidence that he did provide this training.<sup>8370</sup>

3662. Lansana testified that upon an instruction from James Galakpalah, he brought a radio set for Sankoh to Sierra Leone in 1991.<sup>8371</sup> He then returned the radio to Liberia when Taylor withdrew NPFL troops in 1992, but brought it back upon instructions from James Galakpalah two weeks later. Mongor testified that Lansana brought a radio set with him when he came to train RUF fighters in 1991.<sup>8372</sup> Further, the Accused himself conceded that he may have provided radios during the NPFL cooperation period with the RUF. As there is no evidence that these radios were removed from Sierra Leone after 1992, the Trial Chamber can reasonably infer that the radios remained with and were used by the RUF. While several Defence witnesses, including the Accused, testified that they personally, or the RUF generally, used radios that they had captured in the conflict to communicate,<sup>8373</sup> this evidence is not dispositive of the fact that the NPFL provided radios in addition to those that might have been captured in combat.

3663. Considering all of the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that NPFL operators, including Lansana, trained RUF fighters in radio communication, and provided radio equipment to the RUF, from which the RUF continued to benefit during the indictment period.

3664. Mongor testified that Sankoh told him that Taylor had provided a radio and radio operator, Lansana, to help set up and operate RUF communications.<sup>8374</sup> Additionally, Kamara testified that Lansana was introduced to the RUF fighters and he stated that Taylor had sent him to provide communications training to them.<sup>8375</sup> In light of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds the proposition that the Accused would not have known that the NPFL had provided these operators to the RUF to be incredulous. The Trial Chamber further finds it incredulous that the Accused would not have known about the radio the NPFL provided to the RUF, particularly considering Sankoh used this radio to communicate with the Accused himself immediately after it was installed by Lansana.<sup>8376</sup> The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused knew that the NPFL provided these radio operators and equipment to the RUF.

Findings

3665. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the NPFL provided radio operators, including Foday Lansana, and equipment to the RUF, to train RUF fighters in radio communication. Lansana stayed in Sierra Leone following the break with the NPFL in Operation Top Final, and the RUF continued to benefit from the training and equipment provided by the NPFL throughout the conflict in Sierra Leone and during the indictment period.

3666. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused knew that the NPFL provided these operators and equipment to the RUF.

Satellite PhonesSubmissions of the Parties

3667. The Prosecution alleges that the Accused provided RUF leaders, including Foday Sankoh, Sam Bockarie, and Issa Sesay, with satellite phones which enabled the Accused to plan, facilitate and order RUF activities during which crimes were committed.<sup>8377</sup>

3668. The Defence concedes that the Accused provided Bockarie and Sesay each with a satellite phone, but stated that he did so in order to facilitate negotiations during the peace process between the RUF/AFRC and the Sierra Leonean government.<sup>8378</sup> The Accused denies that he provided Sankoh with a satellite phone. Further, the Defence contends, the RUF received satellite phones from sources other than the Accused and thus any provision of a phone from the Accused could not have had a substantial effect on the perpetration of any crime.<sup>8379</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie

3669. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie was an RUF radio operator.<sup>8380</sup> Fornie testified that in early 1998 while Fornie was working in Buedu, Johnny Paul Koroma gave Sam Bockarie his first satellite phone.<sup>8381</sup> A second phone was given to him by Taylor, also around early 1998.<sup>8382</sup> Fornie testified that he travelled with Bockarie to Monrovia, and on their return Bockarie handed Fornie a bag to carry, stating that inside was a satellite phone given to him by Taylor.<sup>8383</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3670. Bockarie used his satellite phones most often for direct communication with Benjamin Yeaten.<sup>8384</sup> Fornie knew that Bockarie was speaking to Yeaten on the satellite phone because he would stand close to Bockarie and hear Yeaten talking to Bockarie. Bockarie also asked Fornie to tell Yeaten to send phone credit to him so he could recharge his account.<sup>8385</sup>

3671. Fornie testified that Bockarie and Yeaten were in “constant contact” between the RUF’s attack on Kono in 1992, and when they entered Freetown, in 1997. When Kono fell to the RUF, Issa Sesay sent a message over the radio and Fornie transmitted this message to Bockarie. Bockarie then called Yeaten immediately on his satellite phone to inform him that Kono was under control.<sup>8386</sup>

3672. Bockarie was also in contact with Yeaten after the 6 January 1999 invasion, speaking with him two to three times a day on his satellite phone. Bockarie would ask him for advice, and provide reports regarding the situation on the ground.<sup>8387</sup> On 7 January, King Perry sent a radio message to Bockarie that RUF troops in Freetown had released political prisoners from Pademba Road Prison. Fornie was present in the room when Bockarie called Yeaten on his satellite phone to transmit this message and ask for more ammunition.<sup>8388</sup> After some time Yeaten called Bockarie back on his satellite phone and instructed him to bring the prisoners to Buedu, saying these were instructions from Taylor.<sup>8389</sup>

3673. In cross-examination, Fornie testified that Taylor gave Bockarie more than one satellite phone.<sup>8390</sup> Fornie also stated that the satellite phone could not have been used to facilitate peace negotiations because Taylor gave Bockarie the satellite phone when the RUF withdrew from Kenema after the intervention, and the RUF were very far off from the peace accord at the time.<sup>8391</sup>

Prosecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif

3674. Witness Varmuyan Sherif was a member of Taylor's Special Security Service (SSS) during the operative time period.<sup>8392</sup> Sherif testified that in early 1998, Taylor instructed him to travel to Sierra Leone and bring him Sam Bockarie, but did not explain his reasons for doing so.<sup>8393</sup> Sherif thereafter travelled to Sierra Leone, found Bockarie and brought him back to Liberia to meet with Taylor.<sup>8394</sup>

3675. Following his meeting with Taylor, Bockarie thanked Sherif for making it possible for him to meet Taylor, and said he would never forget him.<sup>8395</sup> He told Sherif that Taylor gave him money and a satellite phone, and showed Sherif the money and the satellite phone that Taylor had given him.<sup>8396</sup>

Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

3676. Witness Mohamed Kabbah was an RUF radio operator during the operative time period.<sup>8397</sup> Kabbah testified that the first time he saw an RUF member with a satellite phone was at the end of 1995 or beginning of 1996, when he saw Foday Sankoh with one just before Sankoh left for the Abidjan peace talks. Kabbah said that Sankoh received this phone from Dr Addai Sebo.<sup>8398</sup> The witness agreed that the satellite phone was given to Sankoh so that he could contact people while he was in Abidjan.<sup>8399</sup>

3677. Kabbah also testified that in approximately September 1999, Sam Bockarie returned from a trip to Monrovia with a satellite phone that Kabbah did not believe he had before he went.<sup>8400</sup> Kabbah did not know who gave the satellite phone to Bockarie.<sup>8401</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3678. During the Freetown Invasion, Bockarie would communicate with Taylor by satellite phone, and he did so in public.<sup>8402</sup> In one instance, Bockarie told the operator on duty, Tiger, to inform the operator Sunlight that he wanted to talk to Taylor. Bockarie then drove with the witness and others to the MP headquarters in Buedu where the satellite could get reception, and Bockarie spoke with Taylor on the phone.<sup>8403</sup> The witness heard Bockarie say that his men had entered Freetown, and were advancing.<sup>8404</sup>

Prosecution Witness Jabaty Jaward

3679. Witness Jabaty Jaward testified that he was a member of the RUF, and worked in Sam Bockarie's home in Buedu from approximately February or March 1998 to December 1999.<sup>8405</sup> At this time, he witnessed Bockarie comparing two satellite phones. Bockarie told Jaward he was collected by Varmuyan Sherif and brought to Monrovia, where Taylor gave him one of the satellite phones. Jaward did not know how Bockarie obtained the other satellite phone.<sup>8406</sup>

3680. Because of his position in Bockarie's house, Jaward overheard many of Bockarie's conversations on the satellite phone.<sup>8407</sup> Jaward was responsible for charging the batteries to the satellite phone. In approximately 1998 to 1999, Bockarie told Jaward that he had discussed the Guineans' attack on the RUF via satellite phone with Taylor.<sup>8408</sup>

3681. Witness TF1-585 testified that she was a radio operator for Sam Bockarie in Buedu at the end of 1997.<sup>8409</sup> The witness testified that while in Buedu, she saw Bockarie with a satellite phone, but she did not know who gave it to Bockarie.<sup>8410</sup>

3682. Benjamin Yeaten and Bockarie would often talk on the radio about Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) bringing arms, ammunition, food, clothing and other supplies to Buedu.<sup>8411</sup> If there was anything more important than that, Yeaten would instruct Bockarie to switch on the satellite phone.<sup>8412</sup> The witness knew the content of these conversations because he was present when Bockarie would discuss them with the senior officers after they happened.<sup>8413</sup>

3683. In the beginning of 1998, the witness saw Bockarie talking on his satellite phone and then was present when Bockarie related his phone conversation to Eddie Kanneh. Bockarie stated that he had spoken to Yeaten, who had instructed him to bring Johnny Paul Koroma to Buedu because “they [had] something for them”. Yeaten told Bockarie that this was an instruction from Taylor.<sup>8414</sup> Koroma was then brought to Buedu.<sup>8415</sup>

3684. Around 9 January 1999, during the attack on Freetown, Bockarie used his satellite phone to inform the BBC that Alex Tamba Brima (a.k.a. Gullit) and his men would be in Freetown within three days’ time.<sup>8416</sup> Just after this announcement, the witness heard the radio operator on duty receive a call from Yeaten’s operator Sunlight, asking them to find Bockarie so that he could speak with Yeaten.<sup>8417</sup>

3685. Bockarie came to the radio, and the witness heard Yeaten tell Bockarie that if what he heard on the BBC was true, Bockarie should expect Yeaten to come to Buedu in two days’ time. He told him to switch on his satellite phone because “my father”, whom the witness understood to be Taylor, “would want to talk to you”. Bockarie went directly to the veranda where the satellite phone was located and spoke on the phone. The witness was not present for this conversation. She also testified that she was present when Yeaten came to Buedu two days later.<sup>8418</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara

3686. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator during the operative period,<sup>8419</sup> testified that in approximately 1994 or 1995 Dr Addai Sebo brought a satellite phone to Foday Sankoh.<sup>8420</sup> Sankoh used this phone to communicate with Taylor, and then Sankoh would transmit messages concerning what he discussed with Taylor to RUF commanders at RUF field radio stations.<sup>8421</sup>

3687. Issa Sesay took over as acting leader of the RUF each time Bockarie visited Taylor in Liberia, and also when Sankoh was arrested in Freetown in May 2000.<sup>8422</sup> During these times, Sesay had a satellite phone on which he would communicate with Taylor, and would transmit messages concerning his talks with Taylor to all RUF commanders at RUF field stations.<sup>8423</sup>

3688. Kamara testified that Bockarie had a satellite phone in 1998 or 1999, in Buedu.<sup>8424</sup> Around April or May 1998, Bockarie requested Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) and Kamara to travel to Buedu for a meeting. Kamara participated in a meeting at Bockarie's house along with Mike Lamin, Isaac Mongor, Mingo and "Pa" or SYB Rogers. Bockarie showed those present a pile of arms and ammunition, commercial radios, and a satellite phone, and told them that Taylor had provided these materials in return for diamonds sent to him by the RUF. Bockarie then discussed with the men a plan to recapture Sierra Leone.<sup>8425</sup> Messages that Bockarie received on the phone would be transmitted to all RUF stations.<sup>8426</sup> meeting at Sankoh's house for an officers' meeting.<sup>8428</sup> Sankoh was present, along with Sam Bockarie, Issa Sesay, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), Abubakkarr, Francis Oscar Charles, Jackson Swaray and the witness. Sankoh gave Bockarie a satellite phone and told them he was going on a political tour, but they should take their orders from Bockarie.<sup>8429</sup>

3690. Kanneh also testified that in May 1997, he conducted a mission to capture Tongo Field. When he later reported to Bockarie, Bockarie thanked him for successfully completing the mission. Kanneh then heard Bockarie call Taylor on a satellite phone and inform him that they had captured Tongo Field. Kanneh could hear Bockarie's side of the conversation, and could hear Taylor on the other side of the phone thanking Bockarie "a lot".<sup>8430</sup>

3691. The witness also testified that around this time period, Bockarie called the witness, Jungle and Lion to his house in Tongo and thanked them for the diamonds that they had mined for him. Bockarie then called Taylor on a satellite phone and told him of the work that had been done. Kanneh could hear that Taylor thanked Bockarie, and told him to hand the diamonds over to Jungle, who would transport them to Liberia.<sup>8431</sup>

3692. Kanneh also testified that he attended a second meeting at Bockarie's house in December 1998, which occurred after Bockarie travelled to Burkina Faso and returned with materials and arms.<sup>8432</sup> Those present included Bockarie, Issa Sesay, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), Eddie Kanneh, Major Francis, Matthew Barbor, Junior Vandi, Gbessay Gbobah and the witness.<sup>8433</sup> At this meeting they discussed their plan to take power in Sierra Leone, by attacking Kono and Makeni and then capturing Freetown.<sup>8434</sup> If they met President Kabbah at the State House, they were to kill him.<sup>8435</sup> After this meeting, Bockarie and the others briefed President Taylor by calling him on Bockarie's satellite phone. were present as Bockarie told Taylor that he had implemented the plan Taylor had given to him in Monrovia. Kanneh knew that Bockarie was speaking to Taylor because he announced this to the group.<sup>8436</sup>

3693. Witness Abu Keita was a former ULIMO fighter who was asked by Benjamin Yeaten to join the RUF in Sierra Leone in September 1998.<sup>8437</sup> Keita testified that in September 1998, he went to a meeting at Yeaten's home with Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag),<sup>8438</sup> Sampson, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle,) Sam Bockarie, Eddie Kanneh, and others. During that meeting, the witness saw Bockarie with a satellite phone which he said had been given to him by Yeaten.<sup>8439</sup> The satellite phone calls were paid for by Yeaten, who would send "top up cards" to Bockarie.<sup>8440</sup>

3694. The witness also testified that during the attack on Freetown, the witness and Bockarie were in Buedu. Bockarie called the BBC on his satellite phone and stated that the RUF were approaching the State House.<sup>8441</sup> Bockarie then called Yeaten and Joseph Tuah on the satellite phone, and Bockarie told the witness he was reporting to them on the status of the operation.<sup>8442</sup>

3695. The witness also testified that in May 2000, "after Bockarie's regime", Sankoh ordered that Issa Sesay should be in charge of the RUF. Sesay travelled to Liberia and returned with a satellite phone, which Sesay said was given to him by Taylor.<sup>8443</sup>

Prosecution Witness Dennis Koker

3697. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>8446</sup> testified that in March 1997, Foday Sankoh had two satellite phones.<sup>8447</sup>

3698. The witness also testified that in late 1998 or early 1999, he was present at a senior officer’s meeting at Sam Bockarie’s residence in Buedu attended by most of the senior commanders of the RUF.<sup>8448</sup> Halfway through the meeting, a few senior leaders had lunch with Bockarie in his bedroom. Bockarie went outside and spoke on a satellite phone for ten to fifteen minutes. When he returned, he stated that he had been on the satellite phone with “the Pa”, whom the witness understood to be Taylor. Bockarie said that Taylor had given direct instructions for Operation No Living Thing, a mission to capture Freetown. Taylor instructed Bockarie to execute any fighter contesting his command or authority for this operation. In addition, no enemy forces should be captured, but only eliminated. He then informed the rest of the attendees at the meeting about the operation.<sup>8449</sup>

3699. While the witness and Bockarie were in Buedu, Bockarie communicated with Liberia primarily through his satellite phone, which he said Taylor had given him.<sup>8450</sup> During the Junta and in 1998 and 1999, Bockarie transmitted information on RUF actions to Taylor over satellite telephone.<sup>8451</sup>

3702. The witness first saw Sam Bockarie with a satellite phone in Kenema during the Junta period in 1997. Bockarie later told the witness that he had received a phone from his "chief" in Liberia. The one Bockarie had owned previously had been blocked because he was not paying his bills.<sup>8455</sup> Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten would speak over a satellite phone, and then Bockarie would transmit messages concerning these conversations via the radio to the frontlines.<sup>8456</sup> After speaking over the phone with Taylor, Bockarie would tell those around him, including the witness, about the conversation.<sup>8457</sup>

Flower, where they met with Benjamin Yeaten, Joseph Tuah and Peter Saikpedeh, who confirmed the arrival of the ammunition.<sup>8460</sup> The witness did not specify the date of this incident.

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

3705. Witness TF1-168, an RUF member,<sup>8461</sup> was arrested by Sam Bockarie in March 1997.<sup>8462</sup> The witness testified that while he was detained in Bunumbu, Bockarie came to visit and told the detainees that Amara Essy had expressed concern about their fate. Bockarie set up a satellite phone so that the External Delegates could speak to Essy over the phone.<sup>8463</sup>

The Accused

3706. The Accused acknowledged that he gave Sam Bockarie a satellite phone in October 1998.<sup>8464</sup> The Accused denied, however, giving Bockarie more than one phone.<sup>8465</sup>

3707. The Accused also acknowledged that he met with Bockarie in Liberia in September 1998, but denied that Varmuyan Sherif was present, or that he gave Bockarie a satellite phone at this time.<sup>8466</sup> The Accused testified that when Bockarie first came to Liberia, he already had a satellite phone that the Accused believed Sankoh had given him.<sup>8467</sup> It was on Bockarie's second trip to Liberia to meet with him, in October 1998, that he gave Bockarie a satellite phone, and only did so in order to facilitate the peace process, so that he and the other members of the Committee of Five could contact Bockarie.<sup>8468</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3708. The Accused denied that he spoke with Bockarie on a satellite phone on the night of the Freetown Invasion. The Accused stated that in 1999, he was very busy dealing with peace negotiations and so would not have had time to talk.<sup>8469</sup> The Accused also denied that senior members of his regime were in contact with Bockarie via satellite phone during the Freetown Invasion, because they would have no reason to be.<sup>8470</sup>

3709. The Accused testified that he gave Issa Sesay a satellite phone in 2000, after Sesay had been made acting commander of the RUF.<sup>8471</sup> The Accused denied, however, providing Foday Sankoh with a satellite phone, testifying that Sankoh received a satellite phone when he went to Abidjan.<sup>8472</sup> Finally, the Accused denied speaking with Bockarie when the RUF was under attack by Guinea, stating that he never spoke to Bockarie on his satellite phone.<sup>8473</sup>

3710. Witness John Vincent, an RUF member, testified that he did not understand much about the Lomé Peace Accords, but said that Dr Addai Sebo intervened to help bring about peace in Sierra Leone, and at one point, Dr Sebo gave Foday Sankoh a satellite phone.<sup>8474</sup>

3711. The witness heard that Sam Bockarie first went to Monrovia in August or September 1998 and then returned on a second trip, when Taylor gave him a Guesthouse and a satellite phone.<sup>8475</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Defence Witness Fayia Musa

3712. Witness Fayia Musa, a member of the External Delegation and an agricultural officer in the RUF,<sup>8476</sup> testified that during the peace talks in Abidjan in 1996, Foday Sankoh received a satellite phone as a gift from Omrie Golley, a Sierra Leonean lawyer based in London. Sankoh then sent the satellite phone with Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) to Sam Bockarie in Sierra Leone. As far as the witness was aware this was Bockarie's first satellite phone.<sup>8477</sup>

3713. Musa, as a member of the External Delegation, was arrested by Sam Bockarie in March 1997.<sup>8478</sup> While the witness was detained in Bunumbu, some time between May 1997 and February 1998, Amara Essy, the Foreign Minister from Côte d'Ivoire, sent Bockarie a satellite phone. Essy explained to Bockarie that the international community wanted him to ensure the prisoners' security, and Bockarie put each of the prisoners on the phone to speak with Essay.<sup>8479</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

3714. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>8480</sup> testified that Dr Sebo met with Foday Sankoh in Zogoda in March or April of 1995. Dr Sebo brought with him a satellite phone, and left the phone with Sankoh after the visit. This was the first time Sankoh had a satellite phone.<sup>8481</sup>

3715. Sesay also testified that Bockarie first received a satellite phone in October 1998 during his second visit to Taylor in Liberia. Bockarie obtained his second satellite phone in

3716. Sesay received a satellite phone from Sankoh in January 2000, after Bockarie resigned from the RUF. The Witness could only receive calls and not make them because the phone did not have any credit. Sankoh was the only person to call him on this phone.<sup>8483</sup>

3717. Sesay testified that he received a satellite phone from Taylor in October 2000, after he escorted the RUF delegation to the Abuja peace talks. Sesay was in a meeting with five heads of state, including Taylor, and told them that he was unable to make calls with his satellite phone. President Obasanjo, of Nigeria, stated that if Sesay was willing to work with them, they would provide him with a satellite phone.<sup>8484</sup> Sesay returned to Monrovia in October 2000. On that trip Sesay visited Taylor at White Flower and received the satellite phone promised to him.<sup>8485</sup>

3718. Sesay testified that he never spoke with Taylor on either of his satellite phones.<sup>8486</sup> When he started working with UNAMSIL, he used the phone Taylor gave him to call "General Opande and the others" and discuss Abuja II meetings. He also used this phone for personal phone calls to the RUF Guesthouse in Monrovia, Gibril Massaquoi, or Ibrahim Bah.<sup>8487</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-205

3720. Defence Exhibit D-205 is a commercial invoice for a satellite phone. The document lists the “consignee” as “Chairman Foday Sankoh” and his address as care of Paulo Bangura at the Cape Sierra Hotel in Freetown. The date reads “10/7/1999”, and there is no sender listed.<sup>8490</sup> When shown this document, Taylor stated several times that he did not provide Sankoh with a satellite phone, and does not know the document’s origin.<sup>8491</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-467

3721. Defence Exhibit D-467 is a letter, on RUF letterhead, from Gibril Massaquoi,<sup>8492</sup> RUF spokesman, to President Olusegun Obasanjo, of Nigeria, dated “4/10/2000”. Massaquoi reminds President Obasanjo, “as per our last discussion in Monrovia”, to send him and Issa Sesay each a satellite phone to facilitate daily communication with the President and other ECOWAS leaders. Massaquoi asks that the phones be sent to him and Sesay through Taylor, stating that there were many issues they want to communicate to the President directly but could not do so because they had no satellite phones.<sup>8493</sup> negotiations during the peace process. The Prosecution proffered several witnesses who testified that Bockarie used a satellite phone to communicate with the Accused, Benjamin Yeaten, the international press and others with regard to RUF/AFRC actions.

3723. TF1-371 testified that at an RUF officers' meeting in late 1998 or early 1999, he witnessed Bockarie speaking on a satellite phone, telling those present afterwards that he had been speaking to the Accused, and relaying instructions from the Accused for the Freetown Invasion.<sup>8495</sup> Mohamed Kabbah testified that during the Freetown Invasion he witnessed Bockarie call Taylor on a satellite phone and tell him that the RUF had advanced to Freetown.<sup>8496</sup> TF1-516 testified that he heard Bockarie use his satellite phone to call the Executive Mansion, at 020, during the Freetown Invasion.<sup>8497</sup> Abu Keita similarly testified that during the Freetown Invasion he witnessed Bockarie use his satellite phone to inform the BBC that his men were at the State House, and to give Benjamin Yeaten and Joseph Tuah an update on the operation.<sup>8498</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls that it had no general reservations concerning the testimonies of TF1-371, Mohamed Kabbah, TF1-516 or Abu Keita.<sup>8499</sup>

3724. Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that after the invasion of Freetown, he witnessed Bockarie call Yeaten on his satellite phone to inform him that the RUF had released prisoners from the Pademba Road Prison, and to ask for more ammunition. Yeaten later called Bockarie back on the satellite phone and instructed him to bring the prisoners to Buedu, on the orders of Taylor.<sup>8500</sup> TF1-585 testified that on 9 January 1999, she saw Bockarie use his satellite phone to inform both the BBC and Yeaten that his men would be in Freetown within three days' time.<sup>8501</sup> And finally, Karmoh Kanneh testified that he attended a meeting in December 1998 at which Bockarie used his satellite phone to inform Taylor of his plan to capture Freetown.<sup>8502</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Fornie, TF1-585 and Karmoh Kanneh are all generally credible witnesses.<sup>8503</sup>

3725. While maintaining that the Accused gave the phone to Bockarie in order to facilitate peace negotiations, the Defence has not provided any evidence, besides the Accused's assertions, that he used a satellite phone for this purpose. In light of the overwhelming evidence that Bockarie used satellite phone communications to speak with the Accused and others in furtherance of RUF/AFRC military activities, the Defence submission is not convincing in the view of the Trial Chamber.

3726. The Defence contends that the evidence shows that the RUF received satellite phones from sources other than the Accused.<sup>8504</sup> Prosecution Witnesses Dauda Aruna Fornie, Jabaty Jaward and TF1-168 and Defence Witnesses Fayia Musa and Issa Sesay testified to the fact that Bockarie had more than one phone during the conflict in Sierra Leone.<sup>8505</sup> In addition, Prosecution Witnesses TF1-585, Perry Kamara, TF1-516 and Abu Keita and Defence Witness Fayia Musa testified to having seen Bockarie with a satellite phone before he received one from the Accused in October 1998.<sup>8506</sup> The evidence clearly establishes that Bockarie had at least two satellite phones, and the Trial Chamber is unable to ascertain from the evidence whether any of the calls made by Bockarie to the Accused and others in relation to RUF/AFRC activities were made on the satellite phone that the Accused gave Bockarie. Given the fact that Bockarie had two satellite phones, one of which was given to him by the Accused, the Trial Chamber considers that the provision of this satellite phone to Bockarie enhanced his communications infrastructure. The Trial Chamber further notes the evidence that the satellite phone calls were paid for by Yeaten, who sent “top up cards” to Bockarie, indicating ongoing support for satellite phone communications. In contrast, Issa Sesay testified that he was unable to make calls on the satellite phone he got from Sankoh because the phone did not have any credit.

3727. The Prosecution’s allegation that the Accused provided a satellite phone to Issa Sesay in 2000 is also undisputed.<sup>8507</sup> Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara testified that Sesay would send messages concerning his satellite phone conversations to all RUF commanders, but he did not testify as to the content of these messages.<sup>8508</sup> Prosecution Witness Dennis Koker testified that he saw Sesay in Koidu, reporting on a satellite phone to his “Master”, whom Koker believed to be Bockarie, that “Kono is under our control”.<sup>8509</sup> The Defence submitted a contemporaneous memorandum that indicates the satellite phone was given to Sesay with full knowledge of ECOWAS leaders, thereby implying it was used in the peace process.<sup>8510</sup> Sesay also testified that he had more than one phone during the conflict in Sierra Leone.<sup>8511</sup> The Trial Chamber is unable to ascertain from the evidence whether the call referred to by Kamara was made in furtherance of AFRC/RUF activities, or whether either this call or the call referred to by Koker was made on the satellite phone provided to Sesay by the Accused. Nevertheless, noting in particular his testimony that he was unable to use the other phone he had received from Sankoh because it had no credits, the Trial Chamber considers that the provision of this satellite phone to Sesay facilitated his communications capability.

3728. Finally, concerning the allegation that the Accused provided Sankoh with a satellite phone, which is contested by the Defence, the Trial Chamber notes that in its Final Trial Brief the Prosecution alleges that Sankoh received a satellite phone both from Dr Addai

RUF and NPFL Radio Codes and Communications

Submission of the Parties

3732. The Prosecution contends that RUF and NPFL radio operators monitored and utilised each others’ communication networks and that they shared radio communication codes.<sup>8520</sup>

3733. The Defence denies that the RUF and NPFL shared radio communication codes, and alleges that the RUF and NPFL could not have communicated because they did not have access to each others’ codes.<sup>8521</sup>

3734. The Prosecution further alleges that during the Intervention in February 1998, the RUF received a message from Base 1, Benjamin Yeaten’s radio station, asking why the RUF was pulling out of Kono.<sup>8522</sup> The Defence challenges this allegation by claiming that Base 1 had not been established at that time.<sup>8523</sup>

Prosecution Witness Foday Lansana

3735. Witness Foday Lansana, (a.k.a. Co Nya) an RUF radio operator,<sup>8524</sup> testified that during the early stages of the invasion of Sierra Leone, he and two other NPFL radio operators installed the first RUF radio station operated under Sankoh in Sierra Leone.<sup>8525</sup> He spent from 1992 to 1996 in Sierra Leone, training RUF radio operators by teaching them “code”, which would allow their communications to remain confidential to anyone that might be listening on the RUF network. He also taught them “nicknames”, grid references for towns and villages, frequency codes that were used in order to communicate from one station to another and use of frequency to communicate both to RUF stations and nationally.<sup>8526</sup>

3736. Radio operators would use codes in order to make communications secret. For example, the code name for Freetown might be Foxtrot Tango, or “FT” for short, or Sankoh’s code would be “Smile”. Grid references were code names for strategic locations, such as town, or equipment, like weapons.<sup>8527</sup>

3737. The RUF network consisted of the national frequency and private frequencies. The national frequency was one that every station was required to monitor in order to intercept messages sent to the entire network. Private frequencies were used when individuals wanted to talk: their radio operators would agree beforehand to connect on a specific frequency at a specific time, and at the appointed time the operators would change from the national frequency to that specific frequency so that the individuals could talk. These communications would not be encoded.<sup>8528</sup> In general, the RUF radio operators communicated in English.<sup>8529</sup>

3738. In addition, any station outside of Sierra Leone that wanted to communicate with the RUF would call the national frequency first, and would then connect to a specific station.<sup>8530</sup> Lansana knew that, for example, Yeaten and Sam Bockarie were communicating because he would hear them on the national frequency using the RUF code.<sup>8531</sup>

3739. Lansana testified that the codes were originally brought to the RUF from the NPFL, but as time went on the RUF manipulated and changed them.<sup>8532</sup> The code names would change depending on the situation or the area of operation, and the radio operators’ code book would determine what code they would use at a particular time.<sup>8533</sup> When the codes changed, a copy of the new codes would be sent to every substation.<sup>8534</sup>

3740. Only radio operators had access to these codes, including RUF operators Osman Tolo and Memunatu Deen, who were at the Guesthouse in Monrovia, and many others who were assigned with Benjamin Yeaten in Vahun and Foya.<sup>8535</sup> Deen and Tolo would also receive the new codes if they changed.<sup>8536</sup>

3741. “Back up” or “emergency” codes were those that were used by substations for a short period in emergency situations, when an operator wanted to ensure the security of the communication. This code was not accessible to any other stations that might be monitoring communications.<sup>8537</sup>

3742. Lansana testified that only the station which was with Sankoh or, when Sankoh was not there, with Sam Bockarie, had “every access” to communicate outside Sierra Leone.<sup>8538</sup>

Prosecution Witness Alice Pyne

3743. Witness Alice Pyne, who was a radio operator at PC Ground for around five months from around March 1998,<sup>8539</sup> testified that during that time, she used to hear Liberian radio stations coming on the RUF national frequency calling Buedu station. The witness never spoke to the radio operators in Liberia herself because she did not have permission to speak to them; they only had dealings with Buedu. Only the Buedu station, being the overall headquarters station, had permission to speak to the Liberian stations.<sup>8540</sup>

around the 1st Battalion area did not have a communications “net” (network) of its own, but used the NPFL net. All of the radio stations operated on the same frequency.<sup>8542</sup>

3745. When he returned to Sierra Leone in approximately December 1992, Fornie remained in Pendembu, where Foday Sankoh told him and the other operators that he wanted them to establish a communications network independent from that of the NPFL.<sup>8543</sup> They did this by creating an RUF code separate from the Liberian code they were using, and establishing their RUF national network.<sup>8544</sup> The RUF and NPFL could still communicate, however, just by coming onto each other’s networks and making an inquiry.<sup>8545</sup>

3746. The RUF code was prepared by Foday Lansana (a.k.a. CO Nya) and sent to Gbarnga and other radio stations in late 1992, when the RUF first set up their communications system.<sup>8546</sup> Lansana also sent the RUF code to designated radio stations in Liberia, and the RUF received Liberian codes as well.<sup>8547</sup> The RUF codes were changed every two to three months, and were delivered to each radio station by hand.<sup>8548</sup>

3747. A radio net was a group of radio stations that worked together on the same set of frequencies, and for the RUF and NPFL this was called the national network.<sup>8549</sup> When one person wanted to talk to another they would have their operator send a message on the national network to the other person’s operator, stating that they wanted to meet on a private frequency. Because they knew that their enemies were monitoring the network, they had code names for the private frequencies. By the time the enemy found the private frequency they were using, they would be finished with their conversation. These private frequency code names would also change.<sup>8550</sup>

3748. Commanders would also send coded messages to each other. If one person wanted to send a message pertaining to, for example, the reinforcement of troops, their operator would be given a message, which the operator would write down, encode, and transmit to the receiving station. The receiving station would then decode the message and give it to the recipient.<sup>8551</sup>

3749. Following the ECOMOG Intervention, and as the RUF retreated from Kenema, Fornie was personally communicating with Sunlight, the radio operator at Base 1, which was Benjamin Yeaten's radio station.<sup>8552</sup> Fornie also testified that he visited Monrovia with Sam Bockarie within a week of reaching Buedu, during which trip he stayed at Yeaten's house and visited Base 1 where he met Yeaten's radio operator, Sunlight and used the equipment at Base 1 to communicate with the front lines. He testified that Base 1 was located "in one of the rooms at Benjamin Yeaten's back yard".<sup>8553</sup> Fornie also testified that there were restrictions on which operators had authority to call Base 1 directly. The witness testified that he, Alfred Brown, the late Sellay and "every operator that was assigned to Mosquito's radio station" had that authority.<sup>8554</sup>

3750. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8555</sup> was trained by Foday Sankoh and Foday Lansana (a.k.a. CO Nya) in Liberian and Sierra Leonean code in 1991 and 1992.<sup>8556</sup> Lansana told the trainees that he had been sent by Taylor to be with Foday Sankoh.<sup>8557</sup>

3751. RUF radio operators worked on one net with a general frequency number, called the "national frequency", and all operators would monitor this frequency. If one RUF member wanted to speak to another, their radio operator would call on the national frequency and tell the second member's operator to meet him on a particular private frequency where the two members could talk.<sup>8558</sup> When these private conversations occurred, however, it was possible for other operators to switch onto that frequency and listen to the discussion; it was difficult to have a private conversation without it being monitored by other radio operators.<sup>8559</sup> Each radio station had code names, but they changed their code names and the codes approximately every one or two months.<sup>8560</sup>

3752. RUF members could also send coded messages through the radio. The commander would give his operator a message in English, the operator would encode it, and send it to the second operator, who would decode it.<sup>8561</sup> A record of the commanders' messages was recorded by the transmitting and receiving stations in log books which were kept forever.<sup>8562</sup>

3753. Kamara testified that the RUF communications system was not only located in Sierra Leone, and the operators also communicated with Liberia and with Côte d'Ivoire.<sup>8563</sup> The operators in Liberia knew the national frequency number as well.<sup>8564</sup> From approximately 1991 or 1992 up until disarmament, there was a direct link from the RUF's control station, which was the main operator station, and Taylor's radio station that was effective "every day".<sup>8565</sup> Sometimes Foday Sankoh would talk to Taylor directly on the radio, in English with some coded language and on occasions in code.<sup>8566</sup> Other times, Sankoh would write an encoded message and his operator would transmit it to Taylor's operator.<sup>8567</sup> The witness also stated that up until 1994, the RUF and the NPFL would communicate frequently, because both groups knew each others' codes.<sup>8568</sup>

3754. Witness TF1-516 testified that he was a radio operator for the RUF working on Sam Bockarie's radio<sup>8569</sup> in Sierra Leone until mid-1999, when he was sent to Liberia to work as an operator for Benjamin Yeaten.<sup>8570</sup> At the time the witness was trained to be an operator in 1994, there had already been communication between the RUF and the NPFL because there were operators who knew and used the Liberian Code.<sup>8571</sup> Foday Lansana (a.k.a. CO Nya) had brought the Liberian code to Sierra Leone from Liberia before the witness was trained in 1994, and this code did not change until 1998.<sup>8572</sup>

3755. The witness testified that RUF radio communications were controlled by the senior commander of radio operations, who was based at the “control station”.<sup>8573</sup> All other stations were called “substations”.<sup>8574</sup> At 7.30am, all stations were required to be on the air. The control station would make what was called a “net call” on the national network, and all substations would respond giving a “sit-rep” that was “reporting on the situation”.<sup>8575</sup>

3756. The control and substations would establish contact with each other by making a call on the national frequency and agreeing to meet at a pre-designated frequency, which was assigned a code name.<sup>8576</sup> The frequencies were not completely secure, however, so even if two operators were on a private frequency they would use code.<sup>8577</sup>

3757. When a commander wanted to transmit a message to a person at another radio station, they would hand a message to the operator, who would encode the message and then transmit it. Then the recipient operator would decode the message and give it to the recipient.<sup>8578</sup> Military terminology – such as attack, ambush, weapons – and persons’ names also had codes.<sup>8579</sup>

3758. Whenever there was a change in the code, the station commanders would report to the control station in person as the code was “very much secretive”, and would be given the new code. They would then take the new code to their respective stations.<sup>8580</sup> The code would change when there was fear that it was no longer confidential, for example, when there was an attack and an operator was forced to move without his materials, or if an operator was captured or killed on the frontlines.<sup>8581</sup>

3760. The witness also stated that when he crossed into Liberia he was given a special code, which was distributed to Sunlight, Sky 1 and the radio operator who was in Foya, and this was the code that they all used to communicate. He testified that he himself gave the code to Sunlight.<sup>8584</sup> Only the stations named Marvel and Planet 1 had the authority from either Sam Bockarie or Issa Sesay, to communicate with Base 1, 20 and Foxtrot Yankee in Liberia,<sup>8585</sup> and only operators such as Dauda Aruna Fornie, Ebony Prince, Osman Tolo, Zedman, Perry Kamara and other senior radio operators knew the common code between the RUF and the NPFL. There was also an NPFL radio operator sent to work with Bockarie, named Sallay Duwor, who knew NPFL code.<sup>8586</sup>

Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

frequencies, however, were not guaranteed to be private, because they were not owned by one person, and anyone world-wide could monitor them; this is why they spoke in code.<sup>8591</sup>

3763. The two stations in Monrovia, Sunlight’s station and Memunatu Deen’s station at Pa Musa’s house were “restricted frequencies”, which meant that only certain stations were allowed to contact them. Kabbah explained that a “restricted station” was one that was “forbidden to somebody” and that only the headquarters station or a station belonging to the “high command” should communicate with them. The only stations that were allowed to speak to Monrovia were Sam Bockarie’s, Issa Sesay’s and Foday Sankoh’s stations (when Sankoh was in Sierra Leone).<sup>8595</sup>

3764. Witness TF1-585 was an RUF radio operator from 1995 until approximately 1999.<sup>8596</sup> The witness testified that in late 1997 through all of 1998 there were many radio operators under the command of Sam Bockarie.<sup>8597</sup> During this time, there were communications between where the witness was posted and Base 1, in Monrovia. It was only CO Sella, however, who was authorised to have conversations with Base 1 over the radio. The operators would insist on speaking with either Bockarie or Sella before they divulged any information.<sup>8598</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3765. TF1-585 testified that during the time Bockarie was based in Kenema, the calls between Sellay and Liberia were restricted from "the other RUF fighters" and that only Sam Bockarie, Issa Sesay and Jungle had access to them.<sup>8599</sup> She also testified to there being a secret frequency between Sam Bockarie's operators and Base 1 operators.<sup>8600</sup>

3766. The witness testified that all RUF stations used the same code and when a new code was created it was sent by hand with an operator who collected it in Buedu for each radio substation.<sup>8601</sup> The codes were "not changed frequently", however; for example from early 1998 to December 1999, the witness believed they were changed once or twice.<sup>8602</sup> Memunatu Deen, a radio operator stationed in Liberia, received these codes when they were changed.<sup>8603</sup>

3767. The Accused denied that the NPFL shared radio frequencies with the RUF, and stated that the two could not enter onto each other's frequencies. He said there were many frequencies that the RUF had but that they, the NPFL, did not know or could not get into their frequencies. He conceded, however, that there was a dedicated line meaning a frequency set up for exchange of security information between the NPFL and the RUF, but only from approximately August 1991 to the end of May 1992.<sup>8604</sup>

3768. The Accused confirmed that Base 1 was the radio station at Yeaten's compound.<sup>8605</sup>

Defence Witness DCT-008

3769. Witness DCT-008 testified that he was trained as an NPFL radio operator in 1994,<sup>8606</sup> and remained a radio operator with the NPFL until 2003.<sup>8607</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3770. The Government of Liberia had a general frequency, on which every radio operator worked. If a Liberian operator wanted to connect to another operator they would connect on the general frequency and then switch to another frequency to communicate.<sup>8608</sup> The witness stated that it was possible for operators outside of Liberia to monitor the frequency on which the Government of Liberia operated.<sup>8609</sup>

3771. DCT-008 testified that Sunlight, the primary operator at Base 1, the radio station located at Benjamin Yeaten's home, would receive coded messages on Base 1, decode them for Yeaten and record them in a log book.<sup>8610</sup> These codes were created by and for the Government of Liberia and distributed to all radio operators, but were not distributed to anyone outside of the government.<sup>8611</sup>

3772. DCT-008 testified to an incident in September 1998, in which Sampson Wehyee (a.k.a. Sampson), a bodyguard for Benjamin Yeaten, arrived at Base 1 and introduced Sunlight to Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle).<sup>8612</sup> Wehyee told Sunlight that Yeaten had ordered him to allow Tamba to use Base 1 to contact the RUF.<sup>8613</sup> Tamba had a piece of paper with the RUF frequency, RUF 35B, which was the same frequency the NPFL used in 1991 and 1992 to contact the RUF. Sunlight entered onto the RUF frequency, operator Sella answered the call, and spoke to Tamba.<sup>8614</sup> The witness believed that Sampson and Tamba had previously communicated with the RUF in Buedu from the Executive Mansion through a Liberian operator Mission 5.<sup>8615</sup>

3773. DCT-008 testified that Sunlight met TF1-516 for the first time on Bockarie's second trip to Monrovia in 1998.<sup>8616</sup> The day after Sunlight met TF1-516, Tamba brought him to Base 1 to send a coded message to Sella in Buedu. Sunlight did not understand the message

Perry Kamara also testified to RUF and NPFL operators using the "35B" frequency for calls between the two groups. For example, Kamara stated, Sierra Leonean operators would say "35B to Butterfly" in order to call Taylor's operator, Butterfly, in Liberia; if Butterfly called "35B", the Sierra Leonean operators would know the Liberian stations were calling the RUF. ## OPERATIONAL SUPPORT because the operators at Base 1 did not have access to RUF code.<sup>8617</sup> DCT-008 denied that Sunlight received a copy of the RUF code from TF1-516 or that TF1-516 worked for Benjamin Yeaten, and stated that he would have known if either of these things had occurred.<sup>8618</sup> The witness also stated that in neither 1997 nor February 1998, was there a radio call sign named Base 1. It was not established at Benjamin Yeaten's house until after the Camp Johnson Road incident in mid-September 1998 when Sunlight became the radio operator there.<sup>8619</sup> When Sunlight did commence communications with the RUF, he was instructed that communications should only be made with Sam Bockarie in Buedu.<sup>8620</sup>

3774. In November or December 1998, Sampson and Tamba brought Memunatu Deen to Base 1 so that she could use the radio to communicate with the RUF and General Ibrahim.<sup>8621</sup> DCT-008 testified that the messages that Deen sent could not be understood because they were in code.<sup>8622</sup> After one month, around December 1998 or January 1999, she gave the code to Sunlight so that he could take down messages while she was away.<sup>8623</sup> Deen did not have access to Liberian code during the time she was using Base 1, and she did not use any other Liberian radios to communicate with the RUF.<sup>8624</sup> These communications from Deen at Base 1 to the RUF were not intercepted by others, because the communications were made in RUF code.<sup>8625</sup> These were special codes created especially for communications between Base 1 and Buedu, not generic RUF codes, and they did not change.<sup>8626</sup> Base 1 never had access to the general RUF code.<sup>8627</sup>

3775. Finally, DCT-008 denied that Fornie had access to the Liberian radio codes, stating that Fornie could call on the general Liberian frequency, which is how he contacted Base 1.<sup>8628</sup>

Defence Witness Joseph Dehmie

3776. Witness Joseph Dehmie, an NPFL radio operator,<sup>8629</sup> testified that he was trained as an NPFL radio operator in 1990.<sup>8630</sup> When he was assigned to Bomi Hills, Dehmie had the code name Bearcat.<sup>8631</sup> Dehmie learned that the “net” was the communications system on which the NPFL operated, and a frequency was an assigned channel on the net.<sup>8632</sup> There was a broad frequency that every operator used, and if one operator wanted to talk to another operator they could meet each other on another frequency. These private frequencies were open, however, so other operators could hear this conversation if they were on the same frequency.<sup>8633</sup> The NPFL operators could therefore either speak in dialect or use code to keep their communications private,<sup>8634</sup> and frequencies also had code names, which were distributed and then destroyed to preserve their confidentiality.<sup>8635</sup>

3777. From approximately 1990 to 1994, the code that the NPFL used was not sophisticated; the operators would speak dialect to each other in order to keep messages confidential.<sup>8636</sup> In 1994 the NPFL developed a more complicated code system, which was distributed to all NPFL radio operators by the NPFL Chief of Signal.<sup>8637</sup>

3778. In this new code, every word in the communication would be encoded, with letters being represented by numbers.<sup>8638</sup> A commander would bring a message that he wanted to transmit to a radio operator, who would encode that message. The operators then spoke to each other on coded frequencies, and the operator at the other end would receive the encoded message and decode it.<sup>8639</sup> The witness testified that before he was stationed in Bomi radio operators would record all messages in a book, but they stopped when they were fighting with enemy forces for security reasons.<sup>8640</sup>

3779. Dehmie stated that NPFL radio codes were not distributed to anyone outside of NPFL members.<sup>8641</sup> In addition, NPFL codes were not written down, but memorised by the operators.<sup>8642</sup> Dehmie ceased being a member of the NPFL in 1997.<sup>8643</sup>

3780. Witness Yanks Smythe worked as a radio operator and operations manager for Taylor from 1990 until Taylor became president.<sup>8644</sup> If two NPFL operators wanted to speak to each other they would meet on a private frequency that had a code, and the messages could also be coded or be “send”.<sup>8645</sup>

3781. The witness denied that the NPFL and RUF were communicating after May 1992 through 1994. Between 1990 and 1994 the RUF and the NPFL did not operate on the same frequency, and he monitored the NPFL frequency. Thus, if they were communicating he would have heard the radio call from the RUF.<sup>8646</sup> The witness stated that he was “not aware” of whether the NPFL possessed RUF code from 1990 to 1994.<sup>8647</sup> Smythe testified that he worked with Taylor from 1990 to the end of his presidency, and he never had any communications with Sierra Leone.<sup>8648</sup>

3782. Yanks Smythe testified that he never saw radio equipment at Benjamin Yeaten’s house between 1998 and July 2000.<sup>8649</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Deliberations

3783. It is clear from both Prosecution and Defence witnesses' testimony that in approximately 1991 or 1992, the NPFL assisted the RUF in establishing its own radio communications system.<sup>8650</sup> All RUF radio operators monitored the RUF network for messages. If one RUF member wanted to reach another RUF member, they would order their operator to make a call on the national network requesting the second member's operator to meet at a specific frequency to talk. The two operators would then meet on the specific frequency, and the members would speak on this frequency.<sup>8651</sup>

3784. The frequency numbers on which operators would meet, of which there were many, would be coded, so as to deter any other persons from being able to hear what was being relayed.<sup>8652</sup> These conversations would not be absolutely secure, however; if another person knew the frequency code, or happened upon that frequency, they could hear the conversation between the two speakers. To increase confidentiality, the two speakers could speak in code on the private frequencies. For example, the speakers could use code names to indicate places, names, materials, or the movement of troops.<sup>8653</sup>

3785. Members could also communicate by sending coded messages from one operator to another. One member would relay a message in plain English to an operator, who would translate this message into code. The sending operator would then transmit it to the receiving operator, who would decode it for the recipient member.<sup>8654</sup> The NPFL communications network functioned similarly in all of these respects to the RUF network.<sup>8655</sup>

3786. The question at issue is whether the RUF could communicate in code with the NPFL or understand its coded messages, and vice versa. The Prosecution submits that the codes were shared and that the RUF and NPFL used each others' networks, while the Defence contends that the RUF and NPFL could not communicate because they did not share codes.<sup>8656</sup>

3787. Radio operators Foday Lansana and Dauda Aruna Fornie, whom the Trial Chamber has found to be generally credible,<sup>8657</sup> both testified that in 1991 or 1992 the RUF did not have their own code, but used that which was given to them by the NPFL. At a certain point, however, the RUF code changed, and the two codes were separate and different.<sup>8658</sup>

3788. Both Prosecution and Defence witnesses testified that RUF code changed intermittently throughout the conflict so as to guard the confidentiality of messages, although witness testimony varied as to how often this would happen.<sup>8659</sup> Several Prosecution witnesses also testified that RUF code was shared with operators in Liberia at various time periods.<sup>8660</sup> For example, Fornie testified that he brought RUF codes to Sunlight in Monrovia in mid-1998.<sup>8661</sup> TF1-516 testified that Lansana brought Liberian codes to Sierra Leone before 1994, and this code did not change until 1998.<sup>8662</sup> Once the codes changed, TF1-516 stated, the new RUF codes were brought to Liberia by himself in mid-1999,<sup>8663</sup> and by Tiger<sup>8664</sup> during Operation Vulture just prior to this.<sup>8665</sup> Finally,

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Witnesses TF1-585 and Lansana testified that Memunatu Deen, the RUF radio operator stationed in Liberia, received RUF codes whenever they changed.<sup>8666</sup>

3789. Defence witnesses including the Accused, Joseph Dehmie, Yanks Smythe and DCT-008 denied that the RUF and NPFL shared codes or communications.<sup>8667</sup> DCT-008 denied that NPFL code was given to anyone other than NPFL operators;<sup>8668</sup> that Base 1 had access to the RUF code;<sup>8669</sup> and that TF1-516 provided RUF codes to the NPFL.<sup>8670</sup> The witness contended that when Deen and TF1-516 first came to Base 1 in 1998, they sent messages that could not be understood because the Base 1 radio operators did not have RUF code.<sup>8671</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the testimony of DCT-008 must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>8672</sup>

3790. Defence Witness Joseph Dehmie testified that NPFL radio codes were not distributed to anyone other than NPFL members. The Trial Chamber notes that the testimony of Prosecution witnesses cited above concerns the distribution of RUF codes to NPFL members, not NPFL codes to RUF members. For this reason, the testimony of Dehmie is not inconsistent with the testimony of the Prosecution witnesses and it does not corroborate the testimony of DCT-008.

3791. Similarly, while Defence witness Yanks Smythe denied that the NPFL and RUF were communicating, more specifically, he testified that the two did not operate on the same frequency. He said he monitored the NPFL frequency and that if there were communications he would have heard the RUF radio calls. However, the Trial Chamber notes that the communications to which the Prosecution witnesses testified were communications largely if not exclusively on the RUF network, not the NPFL network. Monitoring the NPFL network, Smythe presumably would not have heard these communications, which in no way precludes the possibility that they took place.

3792. The Trial Chamber further notes that Smythe testified that he was “not aware” of whether the NPFL possessed RUF code during the period from 1990 to 1994, which is the time period about which he was questioned.<sup>8673</sup> In the Trial Chamber’s view, this testimony does not corroborate the testimony of DCT-008 that the NPFL did not have the RUF code. Moreover, the Trial Chamber notes that Smythe testified in cross-examination that the RUF and NPFL were not communicating via radio between 1991 and 1992,<sup>8674</sup> which is inconsistent with the testimony of the Accused, who testified that there were communications during this time period.<sup>8675</sup>

3793. The Trial Chamber notes that while DCT-008 said that Sunlight did not have the code, TF1-516 testified that he himself gave the code to Sunlight.<sup>8676</sup> Mohamed Kabbah testified that the RUF had secret frequencies that only Sunlight knew about.<sup>8677</sup> Moreover, Lansana testified that he heard Benjamin Yeaten and Sam Bockarie on the national frequency using the RUF code. In light of the substantial evidence adduced to the contrary, and the lack of evidence corroborating his testimony, the Trial Chamber does not find the testimony of DCT-008, that the NPFL did not have RUF codes, to be credible.

3794. The Trial Chamber notes the denial of the Accused that the NPFL shared radio frequencies with the RUF, and his testimony that the NPFL did not know and could not get into these frequencies. As indicated, the testimony of both Prosecution and Defence witnesses establishes that the radio frequencies were accessible to all. The code added a level of security by allowing the parties communicating to switch to a different frequency, but it is the understanding of the Trial Chamber that no code was required to access any particular frequency. For this reason, and in light of the substantial and credible evidence that the RUF code was shared with the NPFL, the Trial Chamber does not find the denial of the Accused to be credible.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3795. The Defence highlights Prosecution evidence that new RUF codes would be delivered by hand to all operators, and questions how this delivery could have occurred when the borders were closed at various time periods.<sup>8678</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that it is uncontested by the parties that Memunatu Deen, an RUF radio operator, was stationed at the RUF Guesthouse in Monrovia.<sup>8679</sup> Deen would have needed the RUF codes in order to effectively communicate between Liberia and Sierra Leone during the time she was at the Guesthouse. Therefore, the Trial Chamber considers that the RUF codes must have been delivered to her in Liberia or she would not have been able to perform her function as a radio operator for the RUF. Further, TF1-585 and Foday Lansana testified that Deen had access to these codes, and Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that she brought RUF codes to Sunlight.<sup>8680</sup> For this reason, and in light of the evidence cited above that codes were delivered to Monrovia, the Trial Chamber does not consider this argument compelling.<sup>8681</sup>

3797. Regarding the Defence contention that Base 1 had not been established by the time of the Intervention, the Trial Chamber notes that Mohamed Kabbah, TF1-585 and Dauda Aruna Fornie all testified to the existence and operation of Base 1 at the time of the Intervention or shortly thereafter.<sup>8683</sup> Only DCT-008 testified that Base 1 was not yet established, and while the Accused testified that Base 1 was the radio station at Benjamin Yeaten's compound, he did not provide a date when it was installed.<sup>8684</sup>

3798. The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Kabbah, TF1-585 and Fornie are generally credible<sup>8685</sup> and that DCT-008 is a witness whose testimony must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>8686</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that, in her testimony, TF1-585 generally had difficulty placing events in their correct time period.<sup>8687</sup> Further, the Defence notes that in a previous statement to the Prosecution, TF1-585 stated that Lima Bravo, 35 Bravo and 35B were the call signs at Yeaten's residence. The witness explained this inconsistency by stating that in the interim period she had second thoughts, and realised she had mixed up RUF call signs with Base 1; she also noted that one week before trial she corrected the first statement to read that Yeaten's call signs were Lima Bravo and Base 1. This was the first time that she had identified Base 1 as Yeaten's radio station.<sup>8688</sup>

3799. The Trial Chamber also notes that Kabbah incorrectly identified Base 1 as the station "where Tolo and others were ... at Pa Musa's place",<sup>8689</sup> and not the station at Yeaten's residence. Kabbah also testified that Sunlight worked from Charles Taylor's Mansion Ground.

3800. The Trial Chamber considers the discrepancies in both TF1-585 and Kabbah's testimonies to be minor, particularly given the passage of time, and does not therefore find that they impact upon either witness's general credibility. In Kabbah's case, the Trial Chamber considers that, because Kabbah did not visit Monrovia, and his knowledge of Sunlight's location was therefore based solely on information given to him by other operators who went to Liberia with Sam Bockarie,<sup>8690</sup> and because Kabbah did not use the term “Executive Mansion” but rather spoke of “Charles Taylor’s Mansion Ground”, Kabbah may have conflated the Defendant’s White Flower residence with the Executive Mansion.<sup>8691</sup> In view of the issues raised, however, the Trial Chamber does not rely on their testimonies in ascertaining the date upon which Base 1 was established.

3801. However, the testimony of Fornie, who testified that he visited Base 1 shortly after the Intervention, supports its existence at this time. The Defence challenges Fornie’s evidence that he visited Base 1 at this time on the basis that the radio room was originally set up inside Yeaten’s house and only later moved to the outhouse where Fornie testified that he saw it.<sup>8692</sup> Fornie testified that Base 1 was located “in one of the rooms at Benjamin Yeaten’s backyard”<sup>8693</sup> which, in the Trial Chamber’s view, could mean that it was located in a room inside the house overlooking the back yard, not necessarily in the yard itself.

3802. Defence Witness Yanks Smythe testified that he never saw radio equipment at Benjamin Yeaten’s house between 1998 and July 2000,<sup>8694</sup> but this evidence contradicts that of DCT-008 and the Accused, who both testified that Base 1 was installed at Yeaten’s residence.<sup>8695</sup> In light of these considerations the Trial Chamber rejects the testimony of DCT-008 and Yanks Smythe that Base 1 was not operational at the time of the Intervention.

3803. The Trial Chamber notes that there is some evidence that communications were restricted between Liberian and Sierra Leonean radio stations at this time.<sup>8696</sup> However, the evidence demonstrates that this was a matter of protocol rather than a technical barrier.<sup>8697</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORTFindings

3804. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that RUF radio codes were shared with the NPFL and that the RUF and NPFL were able to communicate via radio.

3805. The Trial Chamber also finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Base 1 existed and was in operation at the time of the Intervention.

Use of Liberian Communications by the RUF/AFRCIntroduction

3806. The Prosecution submits several allegations concerning the RUF/AFRC's use of Taylor's radio communications equipment in Liberia. The circumstances of these allegations have been discussed in other sections of the judgement. The Trial Chamber will consider each allegation in turn, with regard to whether Taylor provided communications capabilities to the RUF/AFRC.

(i) Sankoh's Communication While Detained

3807. The Prosecution alleges that during Sankoh's detention in Nigeria, he used the NPFL radio network to communicate with the RUF in Sierra Leone.<sup>8698</sup>

3808. The Defence denies that Sankoh used the NPFL radio network to communicate with the RUF during his detention. The Defence contends that there was no need for Sankoh to rely on the NPFL network because he had his own communications system in place at that time. Furthermore, the Defence argues, Sankoh's messages were communicated by other means.<sup>8699</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

EvidenceProsecution Witness Foday Lansana

3809. Witness Foday Lansana testified that while Foday Sankoh was detained in Nigeria, he would transmit messages to the RUF through Taylor and his subordinates in Liberia. At the time, Bockarie told Lansana and others in the RUF that Moinama and Massaquoi visited Sankoh in detention and received a message, and transmitted this message via telephone to Taylor or Yeaten in Liberia. Taylor or Yeaten then sent the message on the radio to Sam Bockarie, who issued orders to the RUF accordingly.<sup>8700</sup> Bockarie stated that he along with Isaac Mongor, Morris Kallon, Issa Sesay, Peter Vandi, and others, were promoted using this message system.<sup>8701</sup> The RUF also received the order to join the AFRC in this way.<sup>8702</sup>

3810. When Bockarie entered Freetown, Lansana added, he invited Moinama and Massaquoi to a meeting of the High Command, at which the witness was present. Moinama and Massaquoi “made it very clear” that the messages they had transmitted from Sankoh in detention were from Sankoh.<sup>8703</sup>

3811. Witness Augustine Mallah, an RUF security officer for Mike Lamin, testified that after Lamin was arrested Mallah escaped to Danané, Côte d’Ivoire. Musa Cissé, Taylor’s protocol officer, lived in Danané, and had a radio operator named Action Man. The day after Mallah arrived in Côte d’Ivoire, which was two days after Sankoh was arrested in Nigeria, Action Man invited Mallah to Cissé’s house and told him that he had contact with Sankoh in detention in Nigeria. Sankoh told Action Man to connect him with Bockarie so he could give him some orders.<sup>8704</sup>

3812. The next night, Mallah, Action Man and Joseph Brown (a.k.a. Co Brown) were at Cissé’s house. Mallah was sitting two feet away when he saw Action Man contact Bockarie and Sankoh. Sankoh told Bockarie that he should not take any instructions from Fayah

Musa, but should take instructions directly from Taylor in Liberia. Bockarie stated that he would adhere to Sankoh's instructions, and that he would support Sankoh as the leader of the RUF.<sup>8705</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-338

3813. Witness TF1-338, an RUF member, testified that after Foday Sankoh was arrested in Nigeria in 1997, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) called on the radio and stated that Taylor had instructed him to give a message to Bockarie from the Accused, which had been passed on to him by Sankoh. Tamba said that Sankoh instructed Bockarie to be promoted, and that he should take all direct orders from Taylor until Sankoh returned from Nigeria.<sup>8706</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

3814. Witness TF1-371 testified that in March 1997, he was in Foday Sankoh's residence in Abidjan waiting for him to return from Nigeria when he heard on the BBC that Sankoh had been arrested. He called Memunatu Deen, who was Sankoh's "communications lady", and who was at Sankoh's residence in Abidjan and had Sankoh's satellite phone. He asked Deen to put him in touch with Sankoh at his hotel in Abuja and she connected the two via the satellite phone. Sankoh told the witness not to worry, that he was not actually arrested but was at his hotel in Abuja, but that he would return soon.<sup>8707</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

3815. Witness TF1-168 testified that after Sankoh was arrested in Nigeria, he had a satellite phone. The Nigerian authorities confiscated it at a certain point, but, TF1-168 testified, Sankoh found other ways to communicate with the RUF in the field. For example, Sankoh called Mike Lamin, who was in Abidjan, and instructed him to "disarm" the witness. The witness heard about this and sought protection from the local police.<sup>8708</sup> Sankoh also, while detained in Nigeria, promoted seven RUF commanders.<sup>8709</sup>

3816. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that in mid-1997 he heard Foday Sankoh on Sierra Leone Broadcasting Service, the Sierra Leonean radio station, instructing the RUF to leave the bush and join the AFRC.<sup>8710</sup>

Prosecution Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay

3817. Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that following the AFRC coup, he heard Foday Sankoh on BBC radio ordering the commanders and members of the RUF to go immediately to Freetown and take orders from Johnny Paul Koroma.<sup>8711</sup>

The Accused

3818. The Accused denied that he transmitted any messages from Sankoh to Bockarie while Sankoh was detained in Nigeria, including a message that the RUF should join the AFRC junta or that Bockarie should take advice from Taylor while Sankoh was in prison.<sup>8712</sup> The Accused testified that the process by which the RUF joined the AFRC is well documented: a recorded conversation between Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma was played on Sierra Leonean radio and the BBC.<sup>8713</sup> In addition, Sankoh at that time had his own radio and operator in Côte d'Ivoire, and so did not need to transmit messages through Taylor.<sup>8714</sup> The Accused also denied the allegation that he sent a message to Sam Bockarie through Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle). The Accused testified that he had never known Tamba, and that he heard this name for the first time in court.<sup>8715</sup> The Accused asserted that he was not in communication with Sankoh or Bockarie after Sankoh's arrest in Nigeria, and that he was not involved in any RUF promotions.<sup>8716</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3819. Witness Charles Ngebeh testified that in May 1997 he was in Giema when he heard, on the Sierra Leone Broadcasting Service, a recorded message from Foday Sankoh stating that the war was over and instructing the RUF to come out of the bush and join the AFRC in Freetown.<sup>8717</sup>

Defence Witness Fayia Musa

3820. Witness Fayia Musa denied that Foday Sankoh transmitted messages through NPFL radio networks, saying that he had other ways of communicating with RUF members. Musa testified that when Foday Sankoh was arrested in Nigeria, he was detained in a hotel.<sup>8718</sup> Following Sankoh's arrest, Musa and other RUF colleagues held a press conference, in which they revoked their support for Foday Sankoh as leader of the RUF.<sup>8719</sup> Sankoh immediately called the witness on the telephone and told him that he was "playing with fire". Sankoh also, the witness testified, telephoned the radio operator at his house in Abidjan, Juliet James, and told her to order Mike Lamin, who was also in Abidjan, to beat Philip Palmer and his wife to death. Juliet James then told Musa of this message.<sup>8720</sup> Finally, he told the operator to give Sam Bockarie and Issa Sesay a message that his arrest had been orchestrated by the External Delegation.<sup>8721</sup>

3821. Musa also denied the veracity of Augustine Mallah's claim that he was present when Action Man connected Sankoh and Bockarie on the radio at Cissé's house in Côte d'Ivoire. First, Musa denied that Musa Cissé had a radio operator named "Action Man", stating that instead his operator was named "Cassell".<sup>8722</sup> Second, Musa stated that at the time of Sankoh's arrest, he had several other ways of communicating and did not need to use Cissé's radio. When Foday Sankoh arrived in Côte d'Ivoire in March 1996, he brought with him two radios and several radio operators, including Juliet Gbessy James, Martin Moinama, Memunatu Deen, Eddie Murphy, and Dauda Aruna Fornie (a.k.a. "DAF"). One radio was set up at Phillip Palmer's house in Danané, and the other was in Abidjan at Sankoh's

“Cocody house”.<sup>8723</sup> The witness and other members of the External Delegation had good relationships with the RUF operators in Abidjan, and none of them told him of a message from Sankoh to Bockarie that he should take orders from Taylor.<sup>8724</sup>

3822. Witness Issa Sesay testified that when Foday Sankoh was arrested in Nigeria in March 1997, he had two operators living at his house in Abidjan: Memunatu Deen and another woman whose name Sesay could not recall. Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) was also living at Sankoh’s house in Abidjan. While detained, if Sankoh wanted to contact Bockarie he would call Tamba on the telephone, who would then give the message to Memunatu Deen, who would then code the message and send it to Bockarie. This line of communication continued from the time Sankoh was arrested until the Nigerian authorities cut his telephone line. The Nigerian authorities did so after Sankoh’s instruction that the RUF and Bockarie should take orders from Johnny Paul Koroma was played on Sierra Leonean radio, and Sankoh gave an interview with the BBC urging the RUF to join the AFRC.<sup>8725</sup>

3823. Sesay testified that Sankoh promoted several RUF members through a message sent in this way: Bockarie was promoted Field Commander, Mike Lamin became a Colonel, Denis Mingo became a Colonel, Isaac Mongor a Colonel, and Issa Sesay a Lieutenant Colonel. Sankoh made no mention of Taylor in this message, nor did he direct that Bockarie should take instructions from Taylor, but told Bockarie to take instructions from Johnny Paul Koroma.<sup>8726</sup> Sesay was inconsistent on the time period in which Sankoh made these promotions, stating first that he sent the message after he was arrested in Nigeria, and then that he sent the message while he was still in Abidjan, before he was arrested.<sup>8727</sup>

3824. Sesay testified that Tamba was a close friend of his, and was not a member of Taylor’s special security forces in Liberia, nor did he work for Taylor. Tamba was a member of the RUF, and worked at Foday Sankoh's house in Abidjan in 1996.<sup>8728</sup> Sesay also testified that following his arrest, Sankoh used to communicate with Bockarie in Abidjan through telephone lines.<sup>8729</sup>

3825. Sesay denied Augustine Mallah's claim that Sankoh ordered Bockarie to take advice from Taylor over the radio at Musa Cissé's home in Danané. Sesay contended that in October 1996, Mallah was in Liberia with Mike Lamin, and therefore could not have been in Danané to hear that conversation.<sup>8730</sup>

Deliberations

3826. The Trial Chamber must determine whether, while in detention, Foday Sankoh used the NPFL's communications network in order to transmit orders to the RUF, an allegation the Defence denies.

3827. The Prosecution has adduced evidence that Sankoh passed messages through the NPFL network, including one or more in which Sankoh promoted Bockarie and others, as Lansana testified, and one in which Sankoh instructed Bockarie to take orders from the Accused, as TF1-338 and Augustine Mallah testified. Lansana testified that Gibril Massaquoi or Martin Moinama would carry messages away from Sankoh and telephone the Accused or Yeaten in Liberia, who then radioed the messages to Sam Bockarie.<sup>8731</sup> Foday Lansana first heard that this occurred from Bockarie, but then Massaquoi and Moinama confirmed the same; thus, it is hearsay evidence, but originating from two different sources.

3828. TF1-338 testified that Sankoh called Taylor with the message that Bockarie was promoted and should take instruction from Taylor, which Taylor passed on to Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), and Tamba then passed the message via radio to Bockarie.<sup>8732</sup> It is unclear from TF1-338's testimony whether he was in the room when the radio message between Tamba and Bockarie transpired, and the Trial Chamber notes that his evidence that Sankoh gave these instructions to Bockarie came from Tamba, who received it from Taylor. ## OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Trial Chamber finds that the contention of the Accused that he only heard of Tamba for the first time at his trial to be lacking in credibility.

3829. Finally, Issa Sesay testified that Sankoh passed the message of Bockarie's promotion to Tamba, who then sent the message over the radio to Bockarie. Though Sesay was, at this particular time, stationed in Buedu with Bockarie, Sesay did not indicate the source of his knowledge on this line of communication, or specify as to whether it was Bockarie who informed him. Furthermore, upon cross-examination Sesay's testimony was inconsistent concerning the date Sankoh's message promoting several RUF commanders occurred: before or after Sankoh's arrest in Nigeria. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Sesay's testimony must be treated with caution.<sup>8733</sup>

3830. The Trial Chamber recalls that it had no general reservations regarding the credibility of TF1-338, Mallah or Lansana.<sup>8734</sup> Though these witnesses' accounts differ in details and are in some instances hearsay, they corroborate each other in that Sankoh used either the Accused or Tamba to pass messages on to Bockarie. Though Lansana contends that the communication between Sankoh in detention and the Accused in Liberia occurred through two intermediaries, Moinama and Massaquoi, this may have been an extra detail that was not passed on to the other witnesses through Tamba or Bockarie. In addition, though Sesay does not mention the involvement of the Accused, the Trial Chamber notes its finding that at various times Tamba was an agent of the Accused.<sup>8735</sup>

3831. Regarding Sankoh's instruction to Bockarie to follow the Accused's orders, Augustine Mallah provided a first-hand account of Sankoh using the NPFL network to communicate with Bockarie: Mallah testified that he was present when "Action Man", a radio operator for Musa Cissé, connected Sankoh to Bockarie over the radio.<sup>8736</sup> The Trial Chamber has considered this allegation elsewhere in the Judgement, and accepted Mallah's testimony.<sup>8737</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that Musa Cissé was an NPFL representative.<sup>8738</sup> His radio, in the Trial Chamber's view, was part of the NPFL communications network

3832. In addition to challenging these witnesses' testimonies directly, the Defence contends that Sankoh did not need the NPFL radio network to communicate with the RUF during his detention because he had other ways of transmitting messages. For example, several Defence witnesses testified that Sankoh's order for the RUF to join the AFRC was transmitted via radio.<sup>8739</sup> TF1-371 testified that Memunatu Deen, the radio operator who was living at Sankoh's house in Abidjan, connected him to Sankoh during his detention.<sup>8740</sup> TF1-168 and Samuel Kargbo testified that while Sankoh was arrested he used a telephone,<sup>8741</sup> and Fayia Musa described several incidents when Sankoh used his satellite phone to communicate with RUF members in Abidjan.<sup>8742</sup> The Trial Chamber also notes, upon careful examination of Isaac Mongor's testimony, that he does not corroborate the Prosecution allegation that Sankoh used the NPFL network in order to promote him, Mongor, and others, after his arrest.

3833. Sankoh's use of these alternate forms of communication, however, does not exclude the possibility that he also used the NPFL radio network to pass messages on to Bockarie. The NPFL radio network may have reached longer distances than Sankoh's communications options, or Sankoh may have believed the NPFL network was more confidential than any other. Notably, Issa Sesay testified that the message instructing the RUF to join the AFRC occurred both in a private message from Sankoh to Bockarie and a radio address transmitting the news.<sup>8743</sup>

Findings

3834. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that while in detention in Nigeria, Sankoh used the NPFL communications network to communicate to the RUF, and sent messages to Bockarie via the Accused.

Submissions of the Parties

3835. The Trial Chamber has discussed in another section of this Judgement whether a shipment of ammunition brought by Memunatu Deen and Fonti Kanu to Sierra Leone in 1997 was sent by the Accused.<sup>8744</sup> The Prosecution alleges that Deen, an RUF radio operator based in Liberia, used radio equipment at the home of Musa Cissé, to facilitate this arms shipment.<sup>8745</sup>

3836. The Defence does not answer this specific allegation concerning whether Memunatu Deen used Liberian equipment to communicate with the RUF in Sierra Leone, but denies that this shipment occurred and contends that Dauda Aruna Fornie is not a credible witness.<sup>8746</sup>

Prosecution Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie

3837. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8747</sup> testified that in or about late 1997, three months after arriving in Kenema, he was assigned to work as a radio operator with Sam Bockarie in Kenema Town.<sup>8748</sup> Memunatu Deen, a radio operator who worked in Monrovia at Musa Cissé's house, contacted the witness via radio from Monrovia and told him that she and Fonti Kanu were going to bring materials given to them by Taylor. They then travelled to Daru, where she called to tell him that she had arrived, and Fornie and Bockarie travelled to Daru to receive the shipment.<sup>8749</sup>

See Prosecution Final Trial Brief, para. 310, citing TF1-371, Transcript 31 January 2008, pp. 2689-2700 (CS). Upon careful examination of the testimony cited, however, the Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371 does not testify that Memunatu Deen, an RUF radio operator, used Liberian radio equipment to facilitate this arms deal, but only that Bockarie contacted Taylor from Kenema requesting materiel. This testimony was given in closed session.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3838. Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8750</sup> testified that junior radio operators would not know of arms orders as “that area is a very sensitive one”.<sup>8751</sup> However he stated that he was in Kailahun, not Kenema, during the AFRC regime, did not operate with Sam Bockarie directly,<sup>8752</sup> and was not always on the radio.<sup>8753</sup> In addition, Foday Lansana, TF1-585, Dauda Aruna Fornie, TF1-567, TF1-539, Alice Pyne, Jabaty Jaward, and TF1-516 confirmed that Memunatu Deen, an RUF radio operator, lived and worked in Monrovia.<sup>8754</sup>

The Accused

3839. The Accused denied knowing Memunatu Deen or Fonti Kanu. He stated that a man named Musa Cissé was his Chief of Protocol, but he did not know whom Cissé hosted at his house.<sup>8755</sup>

Deliberations

3840. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Dauda Aruna Fornie, who provided the central testimony for this allegation, is a generally credible witness.<sup>8756</sup> The Trial Chamber also notes that TF1-516 testified that Fornie was one of the senior radio operators authorised to contact Liberian radio stations, and several witnesses testified to Fornie being a radio operator for Sam Bockarie during this time period.<sup>8757</sup> In addition, the fact that Memunatu Deen was an RUF radio operator stationed in Liberia during this time period is corroborated by several witnesses.<sup>8758</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3841. Although Mohamed Kabbah testified that junior operators would not know of arms shipments, he also stated that he was in Kailahun, not Kenema, during the AFRC regime, did not operate with Sam Bockarie directly<sup>8759</sup> and was not always on the radio<sup>8760</sup>. Thus, the Trial Chamber finds that Kabbah's testimony does not raise a doubt as to this allegation.

Findings

3842. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Dauda Aruna Fornie, a radio operator for Sam Bockarie, communicated by radio with Memunatu Deen, an RUF radio operator based in Liberia, regarding a shipment of ammunition that the Accused allegedly sent to Bockarie.

(iii) Communications relating to Eddie Kanneh in Liberia in 1998

Submissions of the Parties

3843. The Trial Chamber has, in another section of the Judgement, considered Taylor's involvement in the facilitation of the diamond trade between Sierra Leone and Liberia. The Prosecution alleges that Eddie Kanneh used Liberian radio communications equipment to conduct diamond transactions. More specifically, the Prosecution contends that radio communications were sent from Sam Bockarie to Base 1 to report that Kanneh was travelling to Liberia, and Kanneh would confirm his arrival in Liberia by calling Sierra Leone from Base 1 or Base 020.<sup>8761</sup> The Prosecution further alleges that the RUF's mining activity was monitored through either Base 1 or 020.<sup>8762</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3844. Apart from challenges to the credibility of TF1-516,<sup>8763</sup> and challenges to the legal significance of the Accused's alleged provision of radio and communications equipment,<sup>8764</sup> the Defence does not make specific challenges to this allegation.<sup>8765</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness TF1-516

3845. Witness TF1-516 testified that in late 1998, he was a radio operator in Buedu, working for Sam Bockarie.<sup>8766</sup> During this time, the RUF brought civilians from Kailahun to mine diamonds for the RUF in Kono.<sup>8767</sup> The mining commander brought diamonds from Kono to Bockarie in Buedu. Prior to his departure, the mining commander would inform Bockarie of his impending arrival in Buedu.<sup>8768</sup> The witness did not see the diamonds, but because the mining commander radioed prior to his arrival that he was bringing diamonds, the witness deduced that when he saw the mining commander, the mining commander had brought diamonds. Upon the arrival of the mining commander in Buedu with the diamonds, Bockarie would inform Benjamin Yeaten (a.k.a. 50) at Base 1, or he would inform 020, that Eddie Kanneh was coming with a parcel of diamonds for Taylor.<sup>8769</sup> After arriving in Monrovia, Kanneh would call from Base 1 or 020 to inform of his arrival.<sup>8770</sup> The witness personally transmitted and received messages regarding these movements over the radio. These trips took place frequently, every two weeks or a month, at least until the witness left Buedu in mid-1999.<sup>8771</sup>

3846. Once the witness relocated to Liberia in mid-1999 and was assigned to Benjamin Yeaten, he continued to receive information about mining from Issa Sesay's operator

Elevation, who told the witness that they were mining “big, big” diamonds.<sup>8772</sup> Sesay was in charge of mining in Kono after Bockarie left Sierra Leone.<sup>8773</sup> Eddie Kanneh still brought diamonds to Monrovia during that time. The witness received radio messages informing him that Kanneh was coming to Monrovia with parcels of diamonds for Taylor, and when he arrived in Monrovia, he would instruct the witness to inform Sesay that he had arrived.<sup>8774</sup> These messages continued until the witness left in late 2001.<sup>8775</sup>

Deliberations

3847. TF1-516 provided direct evidence of Eddie Kanneh’s movements between Buedu and Monrovia with diamonds, as he sent and received some of those messages while he was stationed in Kono and later from Monrovia. The Trial Chamber notes that the witness’s account of mining activity is based on what he was told by Elevation, but considers that Elevation’s statements regarding mining have been corroborated by numerous witnesses who testified about mining in Kono during that time,<sup>8776</sup> and are conceded by the Defence. In this context, the Trial Chamber has considered whether the conversations about mining with Elevation from Monrovia actually occurred rather than the details of their content. In the Trial Chamber’s view, TF1-516’s testimony on this point was consistent and detailed. The Trial Chamber further notes that this testimony was not effectively challenged on cross-examination. Moreover, the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-516 is generally credible<sup>8777</sup> and considers his testimony in this context as credible.

Findings

3848. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that radio communications were sent back and forth from Bockarie to Base 1 or Base 020 in Monrovia, and later from Issa Sesay, to report the movements of Eddie Kanneh between

(iv) Communications between Dauda Aruna Fornie and Sierra Leone in 1998

3849. The Trial Chamber has considered in another section of this Judgement whether Sam Bockarie made regular trips to Liberia in 1998 for arms, ammunition, and other assistance from the Accused. The Prosecution further alleges that on one of Bockarie's first trips to Monrovia for this purpose, Dauda Aruna Fornie accompanied Bockarie and used Base 1, the radio station at Benjamin Yeaten's home in Monrovia, to keep Bockarie apprised of what was happening in Sierra Leone.<sup>8778</sup>

3850. The Defence does not directly address this allegation of Fornie using Base 1, but submits that the Prosecution's allegation that Fornie travelled with Bockarie is contradicted by another account of Bockarie's first trip to Monrovia, testified to by Varmuyan Sherif. The Defence also contends that though Fornie claimed to have stayed at Base 1 on this trip, DCT-008 testified that it was not set up at this time. Finally, the Defence challenges the very existence of this first trip in February 1998, stating that the Accused first met Bockarie in September 1998.<sup>8779</sup>

Prosecution Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie

3851. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie, Sam Bockarie's radio operator, testified that in early 1998,<sup>8780</sup> he travelled with Bockarie to Monrovia to meet Taylor.<sup>8781</sup> According to Fornie, he did so in order to monitor the radio and give Bockarie updates on the front lines in Sierra Leone. He and Bockarie arrived in Monrovia late at night, and the witness was taken to Benjamin Yeaten's residence in Congo Town, where he stayed with Sunlight. Fornie awoke early in the morning and went to the radio room in Yeaten's residence, called Base 1, and used it to contact the radio stations at various front lines in Sierra Leone, including Issa Sesay's, Denis Mingo's and Eagle's stations, among others. When Bockarie came in the morning to Yeaten's house to meet with Yeaten, Fornie gave him updates from the front lines. Bockarie, Yeaten, Rashid and Sellay then went out and said they were going to meet with Taylor, and left Fornie at Yeaten's.<sup>8782</sup> When Bockarie returned that evening, he told Fornie to pack up his things, and they returned to Sierra Leone.<sup>8783</sup>

Prosecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif

3852. Witness Varmuyan Sherif, a former ULIMO-K fighter who became an officer in the SSS,<sup>8784</sup> contradicted Dauda Aruna Fornie's testimony as to Sam Bockarie's first trip to Monrovia, stating that he was instructed by Taylor to travel to Sierra Leone to bring Bockarie to Monrovia. Sherif did not testify to Fornie being present for Bockarie's first trip to Monrovia.<sup>8785</sup>

The Accused

3853. The Accused testified that his first meeting with Bockarie was in September 1998.<sup>8786</sup> The Accused also denied that he would involve Sherif, a security officer in the SSS, in matters relating to the RUF and ECOWAS.<sup>8787</sup>

Deliberations

3854. The Prosecution relies on the testimony of Dauda Aruna Fornie to support the allegation that Fornie used Base 1, in Monrovia, in order to keep Sam Bockarie informed as to the situation on the front lines in Sierra Leone while he visited Monrovia. The Accused, however, contends that his first meeting with Bockarie was in September 1998, and that he would not have involved Varmuyan Sherif in this matter. Further, the Defence contends that this description of Bockarie's trip to Monrovia cannot be reconciled with the testimony of Sherif, and that Base 1 was not in existence at this time.

3855. The Trial Chamber has considered Fornie, Sherif and the Accused's testimony concerning this incident in other sections of the Judgement, and has accepted Fornie's testimony as credible, finding that the first meeting between Bockarie and the Accused occurred around February 1998.<sup>8788</sup> The Trial Chamber has also found that the Defence contention that Base 1 was not in existence at this time is without merit.<sup>8789</sup> In considering the above, therefore, the Trial Chamber finds that Fornie's description of this incident is credible, and the Prosecution has proved this allegation that Fornie used Base 1 to communicate with the RUF in Sierra Leone on this trip to Monrovia.

Findings

3856. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that on one of Sam Bockarie's first trips to Monrovia after the Intervention, radio operator Dauda Aruna Fornie, who accompanied Bockarie on this trip, kept Bockarie apprised of events in Sierra Leone by using Base 1, a radio station at Benjamin Yeaten's home in Monrovia.

(v) Communications during the Freetown InvasionSubmissions of the Parties

3857. The Trial Chamber has considered in another section of this Judgement allegations that the Accused directed the Freetown Invasion, and more specifically, that there was contact between Sam Bockarie and Benjamin Yeaten during the Invasion. The Prosecution more specifically alleges that the Accused and Yeaten received reports and updates on the Freetown Invasion via RUF operators based in Monrovia.<sup>8790</sup> The Defence denies generally that the Accused had any involvement in the Freetown Invasion in January 1999,<sup>8791</sup> and that the Accused communicated with Bockarie either directly or through Yeaten concerning the Invasion.<sup>8792</sup>

3858. Witness Mohamed Kabbah, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8793</sup> testified that from just after the Intervention in February 1998 until December 1999, he was a radio operator based in Buedu and was made overall signal commander of the RUF.<sup>8794</sup> The witness, who was in Buedu on 6 January 1999,<sup>8795</sup> testified that soon after Gullit's troops entered Freetown, Benjamin Yeaten's radio operator, TF1-516, contacted Bockarie over the radio from Foya.<sup>8796</sup>

3859. Prosecution Witness TF1-516, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8797</sup> testified that he only worked as a radio operator for Benjamin Yeaten after June or July 1999.<sup>8798</sup> The witness gave further evidence to the effect that he was stationed in Buedu, and not Monrovia, during the Invasion of Freetown in January 1999.<sup>8799</sup>

3860. Defence Witness DCT-008, a Liberian radio operator,<sup>8800</sup> testified that during Bockarie's second visit to Monrovia in 1998, Sunlight met radio operator TF1-516. During this visit, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) brought the radio operator to Base 1, located at Yeaten's house, so that he could send a coded message to Buedu. DCT-008 testified that Sunlight told him that TF1-516 never used the radio at Base 1 outside of this one instance.<sup>8801</sup> The witness denied that TF1-516 was ever a radio operator for Yeaten.<sup>8802</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

DCT-008 said he would have known if this was the case.<sup>8803</sup> However, Witnesses TF1-567, TF1-375 and TF1-585 all testified that TF1-516 worked for Yeaten in Liberia.<sup>8804</sup>

3861. Witness DCT-008 also testified that in November or December 1998, Sampson and Tamba brought Memunatu Deen, an RUF radio operator, to Base 1 so that she could use the radio to communicate with the RUF.<sup>8805</sup> The witness also gave evidence to the effect that Deen would come and send messages from Base 1 to RUF controlled territory on “a regular basis”<sup>8806</sup> and that it was around mid-1999 that Memunatu Deen’s visits to Base 1 became less frequent.<sup>8807</sup>

3862. Witness DCT-008 also testified, however, that during the Freetown Invasion Memunatu Deen did not use Base 1 to transmit messages to the RUF and that he heard that she was not in Monrovia.<sup>8808</sup> The witness gave evidence that Memunatu Deen’s operation in Liberia was in fact kept secret from the Liberian Government and the President.<sup>8809</sup>

3863. Prosecution Witness TF1-371 testified that toward the end of 1998 and beginning of 1999, Sam Bockarie had a radio operator named Memunatu Deen, who was located in Monrovia and operated the RUF radio there.<sup>8810</sup> In addition, Foday Lansana, TF1-585, Dauda Aruna Fornie, TF1-567, TF1-539, Jabaty Jaward, TF1-516 and TF1-371 all testified that Deen, an RUF radio operator, lived and worked in Monrovia.<sup>8811</sup>

3864. The Accused testified that neither he nor his government were involved in the Freetown Invasion on 6 January 1999.<sup>8812</sup> He had no prior knowledge, never instructed anyone, nor encouraged anyone to invade Freetown.<sup>8813</sup> The Accused also denied receiving any information about the Freetown Invasion from Benjamin Yeaten and stated that Lewis Brown, his Security Advisor, informed him of the occurrence of the event.<sup>8814</sup> The Accused further denied knowing TF1-516.<sup>8815</sup>

Deliberations

3866. Defence Witness DCT-008 offered blanket denials that TF1-516 ever worked for Yeaten in Monrovia.<sup>8817</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the testimony of DCT-008 must be treated with caution, and requires corroboration.<sup>8818</sup> Moreover, the fact that TF1-516 worked in Monrovia for Yeaten at some point during the indictment period is corroborated by several witnesses,<sup>8819</sup> and so DCT-008's testimony to the contrary undermines his credibility.

<sup>8816</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that Mohamed Kabbah was initially confused about whether Pascal or TF1-516 was Yeaten's radio operator at this time. Kabbah corrected himself to state that TF1-516 was assigned to Yeaten and Pascal was assigned to Bockarie. The Trial Chamber has found that this discrepancy was minor and did not affect his credibility. See Military Operations: Allegation that the Accused Directed the Freetown Invasion.

3868. The Trial Chamber notes that there is substantial evidence that at a certain point another RUF operator, Memunatu Deen, was stationed in Liberia. Apart from DCT-008, who testified that Deen used Base 1 between November 1998 and mid-1999, no other witness confirmed that Deen was stationed in Monrovia during the Freetown Invasion. DCT-008 also testified that Deen never used Base 1 during the Freetown Invasion. Furthermore, all other witnesses testified that Deen was stationed at either the RUF Guesthouse or the home of Musa Cissé, and not at Benjamin Yeaten's house.<sup>8821</sup>

3869. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that during the Freetown Invasion, Bockarie was in frequent contact with the Accused, either directly or through Yeaten, in relation to the progress of the Freetown operation. The evidence shows, however, that these communications were made via satellite phone or through Sunlight, a Liberian radio operator based in Monrovia at Yeaten's house.<sup>8822</sup> In addition, several witnesses testified to the fact that Sunlight was Yeaten's radio operator in Monrovia.<sup>8823</sup>

3870. In consideration of the above, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt the allegation that an RUF operator gave updates to the Accused and Yeaten during the Freetown Invasion.

Findings

3871. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused and Benjamin Yeaten received updates from an RUF operator stationed in Liberia during the Freetown Invasion.

Submissions of the Parties

3872. The Trial Chamber has considered in another section of this Judgement whether the Accused used RUF/AFRC forces to assist him in his fight against Mosquito Spray and LURD forces. The Prosecution also alleges that around the time of the Mosquito Spray incident, the RUF sent a radio operator to work directly with Benjamin Yeaten, in order to coordinate and ensure smooth communications between the Government of Liberia and the RUF/AFRC.<sup>8824</sup>

3873. The Defence submits that the Prosecution's evidence is highly suspect and contested,<sup>8825</sup> and that TF1-516 was not interested in telling the truth, but in providing an inculpatory testimony.<sup>8826</sup>

Evidence

3874. Witness TF1-516, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8827</sup> testified that in June or July 1999, Issa Sesay ordered him to move to Liberia to work for Benjamin Yeaten, (a.k.a. 50 or Unit 50). Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag) provided accommodation to the witness until Yeaten's arrival, three days later.<sup>8828</sup>

3875. While he was working under Benjamin Yeaten, TF1-516's task was to transmit messages between RUF leaders Bockarie and Sesay and Yeaten in order to ensure smooth operations to keep the supply route between Liberia and the RUF open. TF1-516 testified that he remained in Liberia until late 2001 when the witness fled Liberia because he had reason to believe he would be accused of collaborating with the Kamajors.<sup>8829</sup>

3876. Witness TF1-567 an RUF member,<sup>8830</sup> testified that upon meeting Varmuyan Sherif in Monrovia in late 2000, Sherif told him that RUF members were working with him on the front lines, fighting in Foya and in Guinea. Yeaten, who was based in Foya, was coordinating the fighting with the RUF troops coming from Sierra Leone and the other militias who combined their forces to attack Guinea. TF1-567 heard also that, at that time, an RUF radio operator was brought from Sierra Leone to ensure the communications between RUF and Yeaten via long range radios. TF1-567 met this operator on various occasions in Monrovia.<sup>8831</sup>

3877. Witness TF1-375, an RUF fighter,<sup>8832</sup> testified that, in 2000, he was assigned by Benjamin Yeaten to return to Sierra Leone in order to investigate the hostage-taking of Zambian peace-keepers. While there, TF1-375 saw Issa Sesay addressing the peacekeepers. TF1-375 testified that after this, he called an RUF radio operator to talk to Yeaten and confirmed the capture of the peacekeepers. Yeaten answered that he would call Sesay on his satellite phone, and asked TF1-375 to return to Liberia.<sup>8833</sup>

3878. Mohamed Kabbah, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8834</sup> was appointed in 1999 by Sam Bockarie as overall signal commander of the RUF in Sierra Leone.<sup>8835</sup> Kabbah testified that at the time Benjamin Yeaten was in Foya, the RUF sent a radio operator in order to assist Yeaten was in radio communications.<sup>8836</sup>

3879. Witness Karmoh Kanneh, a senior commander in the RUF,<sup>8837</sup> testified that after fighting LURD forces in Liberia and Guinea, he reported the success of the operation by radio to Benjamin Yeaten who was in Voinjama. Kanneh testified that at that time, he had a radio operator who had been assigned to him for that operation.<sup>8838</sup> joint operations.<sup>8839</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-516 is a generally credible witness.<sup>8840</sup> Moreover, TF1-516's account is corroborated by Mohamed Kabbah, who testified that at the time Yeaten was in Foya, the RUF sent a radio operator in order to assist Yeaten in radio communications.<sup>8841</sup> TF1-567 and TF1-375, who contacted Benjamin Yeaten by radio in 2000, confirmed that this same RUF operator was assigned to Yeaten.<sup>8842</sup>

3881. The Trial Chamber notes that Joseph Marzah who, according to TF1-516, provided TF1-516 with accommodation until Yeaten's arrival,<sup>8843</sup> did not testify about this event. However, neither the Prosecution nor the Defence questioned him on it. Similarly, Varmuyan Sherif was not asked to confirm TF1-567's statement that Sherif told him that a RUF radio operator was sent by RUF to ensure communication between the RUF and Yeaten.<sup>8844</sup>

3882. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that in April 1999 and onwards, AFRC/RUF forces fought alongside Liberian troops against LURD and their allies.<sup>8845</sup> The Trial Chamber also recalls its finding that during the fighting against Mosquito Spray's LURD between April 1999 and July 2000, RUF members operated under the overall command of Yeaten.<sup>8846</sup>

3883. In this particular context, and considering the strong corroboration of TF1-516's account, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that, around the time of the Mosquito Spray incident in August 1999, the RUF sent a radio operator who worked directly with Yeaten, in order to coordinate communications between Yeaten and the RUF.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3884. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that around the time of the Mosquito Spray incident in 1999, the RUF sent a radio operator to Liberia who worked directly with Benjamin Yeaten, in order to coordinate communications between Yeaten and the RUF.

(vii) Communications Capability to Johnny Paul Koroma

Submissions of the Parties, Evidence and Deliberation

3885. The Trial Chamber has considered in another section of this Judgement the Accused's role in facilitating a meeting between Foday Sankoh and Johnny Paul Koroma in order to facilitate the release of UN officials taken captive by the West Side Boys. The Prosecution alleges that Taylor provided communications capability to Koroma when he travelled to Monrovia for this meeting.<sup>8847</sup> The Defence concedes that the Accused provided Koroma with a long-range radio when he travelled to Monrovia, and insists that this was done in order for him to contact the West Side Boys and ensure them that he was free, and to give them instructions to release the hostages that were detained.<sup>8848</sup> Because the parties do not dispute that the communications capabilities were provided to Koroma, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved this allegation beyond reasonable doubt.

Findings

3886. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that a Liberian radio was provided to Johnny Paul Koroma. However, this radio was provided specifically for the purpose of enabling Koroma to communicate with the West Side Boys about the UN peacekeepers that they had taken hostage.

3887. The Prosecution alleges that communications between the RUF and Taylor's subordinates in Liberia included "448 messages", used to warn the RUF when ECOMOG jets left Monrovia to attack the AFRC/RUF forces in Sierra Leone.<sup>8849</sup> These warnings, the Prosecution contends, came from, among others, NPFL radio operators Sky 1 and Sunlight in Liberia, or radio stations in Vahun and Foya, Liberia. They were then passed to Buedu, Sierra Leone and on to AFRC/RUF units throughout the country.<sup>8850</sup>

3888. The Defence denies that Taylor's subordinates in Liberia sent "448 messages" to the RUF, and submits that the RUF had its own operators stationed in Buedu, Sierra Leone who would monitor ECOMOG communications and alert fighters to the movement of ECOMOG jets. The Defence further contends that it is "highly doubtful" that a person stationed in Monrovia could ascertain the intended destination of a jet merely from observing its departure.<sup>8851</sup>

Evidence

Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

3889. Witness Mohamed Kabbah, an RUF radio operator,<sup>8852</sup> was the Overall Signal Commander for the RUF in Buedu between early 1998 and December 1999. Kabbah testified that during this period the station in Buedu would receive radio messages from Sunlight<sup>8853</sup> in Monrovia, Liberia, telling the RUF when ECOMOG jets were moving from Monrovia. Sunlight would "tell us that the Four-Four-Eight or the iron bird is moving from Monrovia" and then the station in Buedu would pass on the message to all RUF stations in the frontlines so that they could take cover.<sup>8854</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3890. Witness TF1-585 worked as a radio operator for the RUF from approximately 1995 until at least 2001.<sup>8855</sup> In 1998, when the witness was an operator in Buedu, the radio station in Buedu was used for “448 messages”.<sup>8856</sup> Whenever an ECOMOG jet took off from Roberts International Airport in Monrovia, the NPFL operator Sky 1 in Liberia<sup>8857</sup> would send a message to the central RUF control station in Buedu that a “448” had left its location. The Buedu station would then tell the commanders in Buedu to “ring the bell”, telling any RUF in Buedu or its surroundings to go into hiding. The RUF would receive such messages not only from Sky 1 but also from Foxtrot Yankee station, at Foya airfield in Liberia; Lima Bravo station in Benjamin Yeaten’s compound in Monrovia, Liberia; and Victor 1 station, in Vahun, Liberia.<sup>8858</sup>

<sup>8862</sup> Several witnesses testified that Memunatu was operating the radio at the Guesthouse in Liberia during this time period. Issa Sesay, Transcript 12 July 2010, pp. 44239-44241; TF1-371, Transcript 28 January 2008, pp. 2434-2435 (CS); DCT-008 first testified that Memunatu would use the radio at Base One in Liberia every day in November or late December 1998, and she continued to do so in 1999. these operators would call 448 and “the radio operator would ring a bell and everybody would escape”.<sup>8864</sup>

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

3892. Witness Isaac Mongor was a senior member of the RUF hierarchy.<sup>8865</sup> Mongor testified that as a field commander on the front lines in 1998, he would monitor the radio for “448 messages”. These warnings were sent to all stations alerting them to the movements of ECOMOG Alpha Jets, so that those on the front lines could take cover.<sup>8866</sup>

3893. Mongor stated that 448 messages originated from operators in Buedu, and also from operators in Liberia. Most of these operators were former operators with the SLA, who were trained with the Nigerians and so knew the code that the Nigerian ECOMOG operators were using. Some of the monitors in Liberia included Memunatu Deen, Osman Tolo and Ebony.<sup>8867</sup> Mongor also testified that he heard “448 messages” over the radio he was monitoring on 6 January 1999 when Gullit entered Freetown.<sup>8868</sup>

3894. Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay, an AFRC member<sup>8869</sup> and officer<sup>8870</sup>, testified that while in Koidu in 1998, Superman told him that Mosquito called and warned them that an ECOMOG “jet 448” was en route to Koidu.<sup>8871</sup> The witness stated that “Mosquito said that he had got information from President Taylor that the 448 had left and it was coming to attack positions in Koidu Town”.<sup>8872</sup> Before the RUF went to Koidu Town there were no ECOMOG air raids; after they started, however, radios were monitored, and when Superman received word that ECOMOG jets were coming he would pass this information to all RUF bases and everyone would take cover.<sup>8873</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-516

3895. Witness TF1-516 was an RUF radio operator from 1994 to 1999.<sup>8874</sup> The witness testified that during the Freetown Invasion the RUF had a team of former SLA radio operators based in Buedu named Gbamayagi, Atati, Ache and Sheku. They were responsible for monitoring and decoding ECOMOG messages. This included transmitting “448 messages” to the front line that an ECOMOG jet was in the air and the fighters should take cover. These operators were familiar with Morse code and could therefore understand ECOMOG communications, most of which were transmitted in Morse code.<sup>8875</sup>

Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara

3896. Witness Perry Kamara was an RUF radio operator from approximately 1991 to 1998.<sup>8876</sup> Kamara testified that in 1998, ECOMOG fighter jets from Lungi airport, in Sierra Leone, would attack RUF positions in Kailahun, Koinadugu, and Koidu. The RUF had a radio in Buedu, where Sam Bockarie was located, that was monitored by AFRC members who were formerly in the SLA. These operators would monitor ECOMOG radio activities, and then send a “448” coded message informing AFRC and RUF combatants that ECOMOG jets were on their way to attack. Kamara would pass this information along to other radio stations.<sup>8877</sup>

3897. Kamara also testified that while the RUF occupied State House, ECOMOG would attack from the air and he would receive a “448 message” from Buedu about every two hours.<sup>8878</sup>

Prosecution Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie

3898. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie was a radio operator in Buedu at the time of the 6 January 1999 Freetown attack.<sup>8879</sup> On that day, Fornie was monitoring the radio by listening to ECOMOG communications, decoding them, and then taking them to Mosquito's transmitting station.<sup>8880</sup>

3899. When Fornie heard air mission requests for ECOMOG Alpha Jets to bomb RUF zones, he took these communications to the transmitting station, where they were sent to the particular target station.<sup>8881</sup> Each target station had a bell, and any time a station heard a "448", that is, that an enemy aircraft was coming, the operator in that station would ring the bell in order to alarm everyone.<sup>8882</sup> One specific example of this occurred when Fornie took an intercepted message to Bravo Zulu 4, and the operator on duty transmitted the message to Freetown. Two RUF stations in the area to be attacked received the message and by the time the jets arrived the fighters had changed their location.<sup>8883</sup>

3900. The Accused denied informing Bockarie that ECOMOG jets were en route to Koudi, as Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified. He stated that as President, it would have been impossible for him to be on the radio or telephone in order to warn anyone of a possible attack.<sup>8884</sup> He also denied being familiar with the term "448" in reference to this type of warning.<sup>8885</sup>

3901. The Accused also denied knowing that, as TF1-585 testified, an operator named Sky 1 would warn fighters when "448" jets took off from the airport in Monrovia. He testified that there may have been a radio station at the airport, but that the RUF could not have installed a radio inside Liberia, except for the radio that was installed at the RUF Guesthouse in Monrovia in late 1998.<sup>8886</sup>

3902. The Accused also stated that a person operating from the airport in Monrovia would not be able to tell where a jet was flying to when it took off from the airport.<sup>8887</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

3903. Witness Issa Sesay was a high level leader in the RUF during the operative period.<sup>8888</sup> The witness testified that there was a strategy of monitoring ECOMOG radios, but denied that Zedman, Memunatu and Sita were doing so. Neither Zedman nor Memunatu knew Morse code, which was necessary in order to monitor these communications. Only the SLA knew Morse code, and it was former SLA operators in Buedu who would monitor ECOMOG communications. Sesay testified that Zedman was not in Buedu, and Sita was not a radio operator. Sesay also stated that from March to December 1998, ECOMOG Alpha jets assaulting RUF positions flew from Lungi airport, in Sierra Leone, and not from Monrovia, in Liberia. It was from 1997 to January or February 1998 that these jets came from Monrovia.<sup>8889</sup>

Defence Witness DCT-008

3904. Witness DCT-008 was an NFPL radio operator in Liberia in 1998. He testified that he had never heard of the code “448”, and stated that the operators never had a specific code for the movement of ECOMOG jets.<sup>8890</sup> They had a different signal for the movement of any enemy jet, which was 15-2.<sup>8891</sup>

Deliberations

3905. The key issue over which the Prosecution and Defence differ is whether NPFL operators in Liberia transmitted 448 messages to RUF forces in order to warn them of impending ECOMOG jet attacks, or whether these messages were transmitted only by RUF and formerly SLA operators in Sierra Leone

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3906. Five out of eight Prosecution witnesses gave evidence that Taylor's radio operators in Liberia sent "448 messages" to RUF operators in Sierra Leone, which were then passed on to RUF combatants. Mohamed Kabbah testified that operators in Buedu received this information from an operator named Sunlight; TF1-585 claimed that Buedu received the messages from Sky 1; and Abu Keita testified that Buedu received these messages from Memunatu and Sita. Isaac Mongor simply stated that these messages came from "operators in Liberia", while Alimamy Bobson Sesay heard from Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) that Sam Bockarie received this information from Taylor.

3908. The Defence also highlights that Kabbah's testimony that "Sunlight was at the Mansion Ground in Monrovia"<sup>8892</sup> contradicts witnesses TF1-371,<sup>8893</sup> Issa Sesay<sup>8894</sup> and TF1-516,<sup>8895</sup> who testified that Sunlight was actually based in Benjamin Yeaten's house behind White Flower. In the Trial Chamber's view, because Kabbah did not visit Monrovia, and his knowledge of Sunlight's location was therefore based solely on information given to him by other operators who went to Liberia with Sam Bockarie,<sup>8896</sup> and because Kabbah did not use the term "Executive Mansion" but rather spoke of "Charles Taylor's Mansion Ground", Kabbah may have conflated the Defendant's White Flower residence with the Executive Mansion.<sup>8897</sup> The Trial Chamber does not find Kabbah's testimony on this point to be detrimental to his credibility.

3909. The Defence contends that it was former SLA operators in Buedu, Sierra Leone who sent these "448 messages" to RUF fighters. Prosecution Witnesses TF1-516, Perry Kamara, and Dauda Aruna Fornie, as well as Defence witness Issa Sesay, attested to this. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that the fact that '448 messages' were sent from Buedu does not exclude the possibility that 448 messages were also sent from Liberia. None of the five Prosecution witnesses attesting to the fact that 448 messages were sent from Sierra Leone indicated whether or not messages were also sent from Liberia. Moreover, witnesses Abu Keita and Isaac Mongor both testified that these messages originated in both Sierra Leone and Liberia. The Trial Chamber considers that DCT-008's assertion that he had never heard of 448 messages does not raise doubt as to the overwhelming evidence that these messages existed and recalls its finding that his testimony must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>8898</sup>

3910. The Defence also asserts that Liberian operators could not have transmitted 448 messages because they did not know Morse code, which was the format in which ECOMOG messages were transmitted. Only former SLA operators working with the RUF who were trained in Morse code, Issa Sesay contended, could have monitored and transmitted ECOMOG messages. However, Sesay, who was not a radio operator, did not provide any basis for his assertion that all ECOMOG messages were in Morse code, or that Liberian operators did not know Morse code, which was the context in which he said that Zedman and Deen did not know Morse code. Mongor testified that "most" operators were from the SLA, and TF1-516 testified that "most" ECOMOG messages were in Morse code. In light of this evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Defence arguments regarding Morse code do not cast any doubt on the overwhelming evidence that the messages were transmitted by NPFL operators.

3911. Considering all of the above evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that Taylor's subordinates in Liberia sent 448 messages warning the RUF of ECOMOG attacks on RUF positions in Sierra Leone.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3912. With regard to the Accused, Prosecution Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that when he was in Koidu in 1998, Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) told him that Bockarie had called to warn them that an ECOMOG jet was en route to Koidu and that Bockarie said that he had received this information from President Taylor.<sup>8899</sup> This is the only evidence that specifically mentions the Accused as having sent a warning to Sierra Leone that an ECOMOG jet was en route. It is uncorroborated, and it is hearsay. The Accused denied sending a warning, saying that it would have been impossible for him, as President, to have sent a warning on the radio or by telephone. The sense of the evidence given by Alimamy Bobson Sesay, in the view of the Trial Chamber, was not that the Accused necessarily transmitted a message personally but that he had caused a message to be sent to Bockarie. Nevertheless, it cannot find, on the basis of the evidence, that the Accused personally sent a message to Bockarie warning him that an ECOMOG jet was en route.

3913. However, the Trial Chamber considers that Alimamy Bobson Sesay's evidence linking Taylor to the transmission of 448 messages, corroborates the overwhelming evidence that these 448 messages were regularly and consistently transmitted by his subordinates, which leads the Trial Chamber to find that the Accused must have been aware of the transmission of these warnings.

Findings

3914. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that "448 messages" were sent by subordinates of the Accused in Liberia alerting the RUF when ECOMOG jets left Monrovia to attack AFRC/RUF forces in Sierra Leone. The Trial Chamber further finds that the Accused knew that his subordinates were sending these messages.

logistical support provided by the Accused in the transportation of such materiel. The Trial Chamber found that materiel was regularly escorted across the border by security personnel working for the Accused, including Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag), and Sampson Weah from 1998 onwards.<sup>8900</sup> These individuals would transport the materiel using trucks ranging from land cruisers and pick up trucks<sup>8901</sup> to ten-tyre,<sup>8902</sup> or eight-tyre trucks.<sup>8903</sup> Although there is no specific evidence to this effect, the Trial Chamber considers it reasonable to infer, given that they were used by the Accused's subordinates, that the Accused also made available the vehicles in which the materiel was transported. Security personnel also escorted Bockarie and Issa Sesay when they picked up arms and ammunition from Monrovia, and also when they took diamonds to the Accused.<sup>8904</sup> Where necessary, these security escorts also facilitated the crossing of border checkpoints into or from Liberia.<sup>8905</sup>

3916. The Trial Chamber has found that occasionally in 1998, and regularly from mid-1999, when insurgents began attacks on Lofa County, ammunition was flown to Foya via helicopter and taken to Buedu by road.<sup>8906</sup> The Trial Chamber has also accepted that from at least 1999, the Liberian Government had helicopters which were used by the Accused for the purposes of delivering arms and/or ammunition to the RUF.<sup>8907</sup> The evidence also indicates that the Accused also sent helicopters to transport Bockarie and Issa Sesay to Liberia on their trips to obtain materiel.<sup>8908</sup>

3917. The Trial Chamber is satisfied that during the Indictment period, the Accused provided road and air transportation to the RUF and RUF/AFRC of arms and ammunition into Sierra Leone and security personnel to escort that materiel, as well as facilitated the travel of Bockarie and Issa Sesay to Monrovia for arms and ammunition deals. Having regard to the fact that from August 1997, Sierra Leone was subject to a total arms embargo imposed by ECOWAS,<sup>8909</sup> and from October 1997, by the United Nations Security Council,<sup>8910</sup> the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the facilitation of road and air transportation of materiel, as well as security escorts, played an important role in the operations of the RUF and the RUF/AFRC.

Findings

3918. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that during the Indictment period, the Accused provided much needed road and air transportation to the RUF of arms and ammunition into RUF territory, as well as security personnel to escort materiel across military checkpoints, which played a vital role in the operations of the RUF/AFRC during a period when an international arms embargo was in force.

Financial Support

Introduction

3919. The Prosecution alleges that the Accused provided financial assistance to the RUF and later to the AFRC/RUF. In doing so, the Prosecution makes a number of discrete allegations which the Chamber will consider consecutively.

(i) Alleged Payment to Foday Sankoh and the External Delegation in Côte d'Ivoire.

Submissions of the Parties

3920. The parties do not dispute that Taylor gave 10 million CFA francs to Foday Sankoh and the External Delegation in Côte d'Ivoire. The Prosecution submits that this money from Taylor was used for, among other things, travel to Belgium and France, countries that supported Taylor, which gave the External Delegation the opportunity to advance diamond sales in Europe and to arrange arms shipments on behalf of Taylor and the RUF.<sup>8911</sup> The Defence, on the other hand, submits that this money was intended to cover the External Delegation's expenses in pursuing the peace process.<sup>8912</sup>

Defence Witness Fayia Musa

3921. Witness Fayia Musa, a member of the External Delegation,<sup>8913</sup> testified that in December 1996, Taylor was present in Abidjan, Côte d'Ivoire on the same day that the RUF launched "Footpaths to Democracy" at the Ivorian Foreign Ministry.<sup>8914</sup> When they finished the launch Dr Addai Sebo said he was going to inform Taylor that the Delegation was in

Abidjan launching the book, and later that day Dr Sebo returned to say that Taylor wanted to see them.<sup>8915</sup>

3922. The witness and Deen Jalloh met Taylor in his room at the Hotel Ivoire, where Taylor was very busy and the room was crowded. Taylor congratulated them on achieving the first leg of the peace process, and said that marketing themselves and making their views and objectives known was an important start to this. Taylor told his bodyguard, General Jackson, to give to Deen Jalloh 10 million CFA francs for their maintenance in Côte d'Ivoire and to support them during the peace process.<sup>8916</sup> Every month Deen Jalloh would take 45,000 francs CFA from this money and give it to the family of each delegate.<sup>8917</sup>

3923. The witness said that the money was also used to buy air tickets for himself and Jonathan Kposowa to go to Belgium and The Netherlands in July 1996. They were given an 'ordre de mission' by Ambassador Traore of Côte d'Ivoire after the witness told him that it was necessary that they get the backing of the European Union for their political activities.<sup>8918</sup> Foday Sankoh instructed them to meet with his friend "Mr Monguya", who lived in Belgium, so that Monguya could arrange meetings with European leaders to establish a diplomatic front in Europe before the peace process. Before they arrived, Monguya contacted businessmen because he assumed the witness and Kposowa would have diamonds, but the businessmen ended up disappointed because they were not carrying diamonds.<sup>8919</sup>

3924. Monguya took them to Ludo Martens, the former President of the Belgian Workers' Party, who in turn introduced them to leaders in the European Parliament.<sup>8920</sup> Martens introduced them to Dr De Belder, the Executive Director of an NGO called Medical Aid for the Third World.<sup>8921</sup> Musa also travelled to France and met the Foreign Minister for African Affairs, to Germany to look at a Mercedes-Benz factory to see if he could acquire buses,<sup>8922</sup>

and to Holland to meet with the Foreign Minister in charge of African Affairs, “Mr Schaapveld”.<sup>8923</sup> The witness testified that he had asked Foday Sankoh to pay for the trip but Sankoh said that he did not have the money.<sup>8924</sup> The witness stayed in Europe until late September 1996.<sup>8925</sup>

Deliberations

3925. The parties do not contest that Taylor gave 10 million CFA francs to the RUF External Delegation when they met in Abidjan, but they disagree as to the purpose of Taylor’s gift to the RUF. The Prosecution claims that Taylor provided these funds to the External Delegation for nefarious purposes, contending that the External Delegation used the funds that Taylor provided to travel to Belgium and France, “a country that also provided support for Taylor”,<sup>8926</sup> and that “these travels gave the external delegates the opportunity to advance diamond sales in Europe and to arrange arms shipments on behalf of Taylor and the RUF”.<sup>8927</sup> However, the Prosecution cites no evidence to support the proposition that the delegation’s trip to Europe facilitated diamonds or weapons sales.<sup>8928</sup> Conversely, Defence Witness Fayia Musa provided a detailed testimony on his journey to Europe and his meetings with officials there.<sup>8929</sup> Moreover, Musa testified that he did not carry diamonds with him, as had been expected by businessmen in Europe.<sup>8930</sup> In the absence of evidence, the Prosecution has not proved that Taylor’s provision of these funds to the RUF was used for the facilitation of diamonds and arms sales.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3926. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused's provision of 10 million CFA francs to the RUF in Côte d'Ivoire funded an RUF trip to Europe that enabled them to facilitate arms and diamonds deals.

(ii) Allegation that the Accused provided funds to RUF personnel stranded in Côte d'Ivoire after Foday Sankoh was detained in Nigeria

Submissions of the Parties

3927. The Prosecution alleges that Taylor provided funds to RUF personnel stranded in Côte d'Ivoire after Foday Sankoh was detained in Nigeria.<sup>8931</sup>

3928. The Defence contends that the evidence will show that such incidents involved specific amounts of money provided in discrete payments on a sporadic basis. Many of these transactions simply asserted that money was provided with no explanation as to how it was relevant to the war or the purpose of the gift or exchange. The Defence claims that many of the exchanges were trivial and no context was provided for the purpose of the exchange.<sup>8932</sup>

Prosecution Witness Augustine Mallah

3929. Augustine Mallah, a security officer to Mike Lamin from 1996 to disarmament,<sup>8933</sup> testified that following Foday Sankoh's arrest in early 1997, he travelled from Abidjan to Danané, Côte d'Ivoire and stayed there for about a week.<sup>8934</sup> He stayed at a house just 15 yards from a house where Musa Cissé, a protocol officer for Taylor, and Cissé's radio operator Action Man were staying.<sup>8935</sup> The following night after he arrived, Action Man invited him and CO Brown, a Liberian who was a Vanguard in the RUF, to Musa Cissé's house. Musa Cissé was there. Action Man made radio contact with Sam Bockarie (a.k.a. Mosquito) and he heard Sankoh speaking to Bockarie. He heard Sankoh say that even before he was arrested in Nigeria he had spoken to Taylor asking that his Sierra Leonean fighters who had crossed into Liberia with Mike Lamin be given transport back to Sierra Leone to continue the fight. Sankoh told Bockarie that he should therefore take advice from Taylor.<sup>8936</sup> A few days later, CO Brown informed the witness that Musa Cissé had given him some money which Cissé said had been sent by Taylor to sustain those who were in Danané. The witness saw the money. However, shortly afterwards, the witness learned from a lady who was at the house that CO Brown had escaped with the money and gone to Liberia. Action Man confirmed to the witness that the money had been taken.<sup>8937</sup>

3930. The Accused denied providing money to RUF members in Côte d'Ivoire through Musa Cissé after the arrest of Foday Sankoh. He testified that he did not know either Augustine Mallah or CO Brown.<sup>8938</sup>

Defence Witness DCT-025

3931. Witness DCT-025, an RUF member<sup>8939</sup> and a Liberian Vanguard, stated that Brown was in Danané from 1996 or 1997 to 2000. He had been ill while in Abidjan and moved to Danané. DCT-025 stated that Brown did not know "Action Man" or Augustine Mallah, or Musa Cissé nor did Brown meet any members of the RUF and did not try to find any.<sup>8940</sup> When Augustine Mallah's evidence was put to DCT-025 on cross-examination, he denied that Brown received any money from Musa Cissé.<sup>8941</sup>

Deliberations

3932. Augustine Mallah's evidence was that CO Brown told him that he had been given money by Musa Cissé, Taylor's protocol officer, who said that the Accused had sent the money for the stranded RUF personnel. Such explanation was plausible in the circumstances described by the witness. Moreover, Mallah testified that he actually saw the money.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Clearly, the money did not belong to CO Brown, because Brown stole the money rather than hand it over to the stranded RUF personnel. The money therefore had to have come from Musa Cissé, but had it been his own money, there would have been no motivation for him to tell CO Brown that the money had been sent by Taylor.

3933. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Augustine Mallah is a generally credible witness.<sup>8942</sup> DCT-025 was evasive concerning CO Brown's stay in Danané, stating several times that Brown was with his church members and had no interest in the RUF or contacting any of his family or of events in Liberia. He stated that Brown went to Liberia when there was an elected government there in 2000. Whilst Mallah was cross-examined about his stay and departure from Danané, Defence Counsel did not put to Mallah that CO Brown had not met him or any other RUF members in Danané, or that Brown did not have money intended for the RUF.<sup>8943</sup> The Defence instead challenged Mallah on the basis of a 2003 statement in which he had omitted to mention the incident with CO Brown. The Trial Chamber notes that Mallah was candid about the omission but not given an opportunity by Defence Counsel to provide any explanation.<sup>8944</sup> Moreover when DCT-025 gave evidence for the Defence, Defence Counsel did not ask him any questions during his examination-in-chief regarding Mallah's testimony and in particular did not ask if Brown had been sent money for those members of the RUF in Danané even though the witness was in a position to know about that matter. In cross-examination DCT-025 denied that CO Brown received money from Cissé. However, the Trial Chamber does not accept his testimony, noting that Mallah saw CO Brown with the money and that another person at the house told him that CO Brown had run away with the money. Although Mallah's evidence as to the provenance of the money is hearsay and must be treated with caution, the Trial Chamber, having considered its context and the circumstances under which it arose, the fact that it emanated from identified sources, CO Brown and Musa Cissé, and Musa Cissé's undisputed connection with the Accused, finds that such evidence is nonetheless credible.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3934. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the Accused provided funds to RUF personnel stranded in Côte d'Ivoire after Sankoh was detained in Nigeria.

(iii) Allegation that the Accused provided funds to the RUF to buy arms and ammunition from ULIMO

Submissions of the Parties

3935. The Prosecution submits that after he became President, the Accused provided Sam Bockarie with money to purchase materiel from former ULIMO members, and made his subordinate commanders available to assist the AFRC/RUF to obtain the materiel from Lofa County.<sup>8945</sup> The Trial Chamber has considered this allegation in the context of the Prosecution allegation that the Accused facilitated the trade of weapons between the RUF and ULIMO.<sup>8946</sup>

Deliberations

3936. The Trial Chamber notes its finding that there were several sources for the money used to make the purchases from ULIMO, and that one of these sources was the Accused.<sup>8947</sup> Regarding the sum of money that was allegedly given by Taylor to Sam Bockarie, Dauda Aruna Fornie testified that Taylor “sometimes” gave Bockarie $USD 10,000 to 20,000. However, he was not sure that Bockarie gave him accurate figures and he did not specify how many times Taylor gave Bockarie these amounts. The Trial Chambers considers that a conservative estimate of the amount would be in the tens of thousands of dollars.

Findings

3937. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused provided an unspecified amount of funds to the RUF in the tens of thousands of US dollars to buy arms and ammunition from ULIMO.

(iv) Allegation that the Accused instructed Joseph Marzah to take money to Sam Bockarie

3938. The Prosecution alleges that before the Freetown Invasion, the Accused gave Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag) money to take to Sam Bockarie.<sup>8948</sup>

3939. Although the Defence does not address this allegation specifically, the Defence contends that Marzah's statements concerning his actions and payments made to him by Taylor are self-serving and unreliable.<sup>8949</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif

3940. Witness Varmuyan Sherif, a former ULIMO-K fighter who became an officer in the SSS,<sup>8950</sup> testified that from approximately 1998 to 1999,<sup>8951</sup> he was on temporary assignment in Lofa. During this time, he travelled to Foya and met with Benjamin Yeaten and Sam Bockarie, and on his return met with Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag). Marzah told him that he had arms, ammunition and money in his vehicle, all of which Sherif saw, and which he had been instructed by Taylor to bring to Bockarie.<sup>8952</sup>

why Varmuyan Sherif, the assistant director of the SSS, would have to leave Monrovia in order to meet Benjamin Yeaten in Foya.<sup>8953</sup>

Deliberations

3942. Prosecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif is the only witness who testified to the allegation that before the Freetown Invasion, Taylor instructed Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag) to bring money to Sam Bockarie. His evidence is not first-hand evidence, but rather second-hand evidence from Marzah. Marzah did not testify to this allegation. The Trial Chamber has found, moreover, that Marzah's evidence must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>8954</sup> The Trial will not, therefore, rely on hearsay evidence from Marzah, and finds that the Prosecution failed to prove this allegation.

Findings

3943. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that before the Freetown Invasion, the Accused instructed Joseph Marzah to take money to Bockarie.

Prosecution Witness Karmoh Kanneh

3946. Witness Karmoh Kanneh, an RUF commander,<sup>8957</sup> testified that after ULIMO and LURD forces invaded Lofa, he received instructions from Sam Bockarie to prepare manpower to “clear the enemy from that place”. The mission was successful, and as a result the Accused invited Bockarie, his bodyguard Magazine, and the witness to Monrovia.<sup>8958</sup>

3947. When they arrived in Monrovia, Bockarie went with Benjamin Yeaten to meet with Taylor. The witness did not meet Taylor during this trip but was told by Bockarie when he returned that he had been to the Executive Mansion, and that “Pa” Taylor had told him to wait because he would give them morale boosters and ammunition. The next day, the witness saw ammunition, and Bockarie told him that Taylor had given him $USD 10,000.<sup>8959</sup>

3948. They returned in the helicopter to Foya, where they met with Issa Sesay and others, and they counted the money. Bockarie then loaded the money and ammunition into the same helicopter, and travelled to Foya, where he held a meeting with Sesay, Morris Kallon and other officers. He explained to them that Taylor had given them ammunition and $USD 10,000. The commanders knew that the money would not be sufficient to distribute amongst all of them, so they decided to use the funds to buy medicine to treat wounded soldiers.<sup>8960</sup>

3949. The Accused denied that he had a meeting with Sam Bockarie after which Bockarie returned from Liberia with $USD 10,000 and ammunition from him (Taylor).<sup>8961</sup> He conceded, however, that between September 1998 and November 1999 he gave approximately $USD 4,000 to $USD 5,000 to Bockarie, which he described as traditional gifts from an African leader.<sup>8962</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3950. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>8963</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>8964</sup> denied that he had a meeting with Sam Bockarie when Bockarie returned from Monrovia with $USD 10,000 allegedly given to him by Taylor.<sup>8965</sup>

Deliberations

3951. Karmoh Kanneh is the only Prosecution witness to testify as to the fact that during a trip taken by Sam Bockarie to Monrovia, the Accused provided Bockarie with $USD 10,000. The Trial Chamber notes that Kanneh's knowledge that Taylor provided these funds to Bockarie was based upon second-hand knowledge from Bockarie himself, but that Kanneh was with Bockarie when he left with Benjamin Yeaten for the Executive Mansion, and he saw the ammunition that Bockarie told him came from Taylor along with the $USD 10,000. The Trial Chamber has found, in relation to the ammunition that Taylor provided in this incident, that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that there was a shipment of arms and ammunition sent by the Accused to the RUF.<sup>8966</sup> Recalling its finding that Karmoh Kanneh is a generally credible witness,<sup>8967</sup> the Trial Chamber accepts his testimony regarding the provision of $USD 10,000 by Taylor to Bockarie. The Trial Chamber also notes that Taylor conceded to having provided funds to Bockarie between September 1998 and November 1999. For these reasons, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved this allegation beyond reasonable doubt.

Findings

3952. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that after ULIMO and LURD forces invaded Lofa, Taylor provided Bockarie with $USD 10,000.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

(vi) Allegation that the Accused Provided $USD 20,000 to Foday Sankoh in Lomé before negotiations began

Submissions of the Parties

3953. The Prosecution alleges that at an unspecified time during the Lomé Peace negotiations, the Accused sent Memunatu Deen and Ibrahim Bah with $USD 20,000 for Foday Sankoh's personal use.<sup>8968</sup>

3954. The Defence contends that this alleged transaction falls outside the scope of assistance to facilitate a war.<sup>8969</sup> In addition, Taylor denied sending $USD 20,000 to Foday Sankoh during the negotiations at Lomé, stating that even if he had, it would have been for non-criminal purposes.<sup>8970</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness TF1-371

3955. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>8971</sup> testified that the day after he and other RUF members arrived in Lomé for peace negotiations, they met with Foday Sankoh at his hotel, and Sankoh was briefed on what had occurred while he was detained. At this time, Ibrahim Bah left Lomé for Monrovia with the intention of asking Taylor for money for Sankoh. When Bah returned with Memunatu Deen and Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), the witness met him in Sankoh's suite and they presented $USD 20,000 to Sankoh. TF1-371 testified that Sankoh was unhappy with what he called "peanuts" in the light of the volume of diamonds Sam Bockarie had been taking to Taylor while Sankoh was in prison.<sup>8972</sup> The witness portrayed the gift as an attempt by Taylor to rekindle the relationship between the two men and confirmed that this money was given before and in addition to the ‘Consolidated Fund’ agreed to at Lomé. Indeed, it was given before negotiations began.<sup>8973</sup>

<sup>8969</sup> Defence Final Trial Brief, para. 1185. In its Final Trial Brief, the Defence characterises this allegation as a contribution to "a consolidated fund for the peace process as agreed on at Lomé", but this is, in fact, a mischaracterisation of TF1-371's evidence, as he specifically denied that the funds provided by Taylor to Sankoh were in conjunction with the consolidated fund. See TF1-371, Transcript 1 February 2008, p. 2815.

The Accused

3956. The Accused denied sending $USD 20,000 to Foday Sankoh during the negotiations at Lomé. He said that if he had, it would have been a ‘good gesture’, like Presidents Obasanjo and Eyadema<sup>8974</sup> had previously made. In any event, he would have sent the money to Sankoh via the “former Foreign Minister”<sup>8975</sup> who was on the ground in Lomé rather than waiting for Ibrahim Bah to pick it up from him.<sup>8976</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-264

3958. Exhibit P-264 documents a radio message dated 17 May 1999 to “Lion” (Foday Sankoh<sup>8980</sup>) from Concord (Sam Bockarie<sup>8981</sup>) reporting that “General Ibrahim” had been dispatched to Lion’s location with $USD 20,000 for him. The message tells Sankoh that he will send him a “sample of quality” which Issa Sesay testifies is a reference to diamonds.<sup>8982</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3959. TF1-371 testified that during the Lomé negotiations, Taylor sent Memunatu Deen and Ibrahim Bah to Foday Sankoh with $USD 20,000, and that the witness was present when Bah, Deen and Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) brought back and gave the $USD 20,000 from the Accused to Sankoh. The Accused denied this allegation, stating also that even if he had provided these funds, it would have been an innocent gesture along the lines of funds provided by other African Heads of State. Defence Witness Issa Sesay testified that Sam Bockarie gave Ibrahim Bah $USD 20,000 to take to Sankoh during the Lomé negotiations.

3960. Exhibit P-264 is a radio message from Bockarie to Sankoh, reporting that Bah had been sent to Sankoh with $USD 20,000 for him. The radio message from Bockarie is consistent with Sesay's testimony that Bockarie sent $USD 20,000 to Sankoh. Sesay indicated in his testimony that Bah came from Buedu, but TF1-371 testified that Bah went and came back from Monrovia.

3961. The Trial Chamber considers that the evidence that Bockarie sent $USD 20,000 to Sankoh does not contradict TF1-371's evidence that Taylor also sent $USD 20,000 to Sankoh in Lomé, where there was presumably an ongoing need for support during the extended period of the negotiations. While the radio message from Bockarie is dated 17 May 1999, well after the Lomé negotiations had begun, TF1-371 testified that the funds from Taylor were given at the start of the negotiations. The fact that Ibrahim Bah delivered the funds from both Bockarie and Taylor is consistent with the finding of the Trial Chamber that Bah frequently served as an intermediary for various individuals, including Sankoh, Bockarie and Taylor.<sup>8983</sup>

3962. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-371 is a generally credible witness<sup>8984</sup> and notes that his evidence was based on first-hand knowledge. The Trial Chamber finds the denial of the Accused to be less than credible, and notes that the fact that other Heads of State might have given similar funds at the same time does not negate the fact of or responsibility for his own provision of funds. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber finds unconvincing Taylor's assertion that he would not give Bah funds but would do so through a "Foreign Minister".

3963. For the above reasons, the Trial Chamber finds beyond reasonable doubt that Taylor provided funds to Sankoh during the Lomé peace negotiations. However, the Trial Chamber finds no conclusive evidence of the intended use for these funds. TF1-371 testified that the money was a gift intended to rekindle the relationship between Sankoh and Taylor, without specifying any particular use of the funds.

Findings

(vii) Allegation that in August/September 1999, the Accused gave Sam Bockarie $USD 15,000 for the RUF commanders

Submissions of the Parties

3965. The Prosecution alleges that at a meeting in Monrovia in August or September 1999 attended by Taylor, Foday Sankoh and Sam Bockarie, Taylor gave Bockarie $USD 15,000 for RUF commanders.<sup>8985</sup>

3966. The Defence cites this event as an example of instances in which the Prosecution has simply asserted that money was provided with no explanation as to how it was relevant to war or the purpose of the gift or exchange.<sup>8986</sup>

3967. Witness TF1-338, an RUF member,<sup>8987</sup> testified that when Foday Sankoh travelled to Monrovia after the Lomé Peace Accords in 1999, Sam Bockarie told the witness that Sankoh wanted him to come to Monrovia to explain the infighting that had occurred in his absence between Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) and Gibril Massaquoi on the one hand, and Bockarie, Issa Sesay, and Boston Flomo on the other.

3968. While in Monrovia the witness and Sankoh met with Bockarie and Taylor on the sixth floor of the Executive Mansion, where Taylor thanked Bockarie for “maintaining the RUF” in Sankoh’s absence, and securing Foya and Voinjama against the LURD rebels. Taylor told them not to encourage in-fighting between factions, and gave Bockarie $USD 15,000 for the “guys who had come”.<sup>8988</sup>

The Accused

3969. The Accused accepted that Sam Bockarie was in Liberia with Foday Sankoh in September 1999 but denied that the meeting in September 1999 described by TF1-338 took place and stated that it would in any event be impossible for a person like TF1-338 to be present in a meeting between himself, Bockarie and Sankoh.<sup>8989</sup> He testified that he met with Sankoh about six times during this period but said the Bockarie was not at any of those meetings. He subsequently said that Bockarie was in meetings with Sankoh and other senior people. Further, the office in question was on the fourth, and not the sixth, floor of the Executive Mansion.<sup>8990</sup> The Accused conceded, however, to providing Bockarie with approximately $USD 4,000 to $USD 5,000 between 1998 and 1999.<sup>8991</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

3970. Witness Issa Sesay, senior RUF commander,<sup>8992</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>8993</sup> testified that after meeting with Foday Sankoh in Monrovia, Sam Bockarie returned to Sierra Leone to discuss with Sesay what had occurred while he was in Monrovia, and to give Sesay various instructions. Bockarie did not pass on any message from Taylor that the RUF should not fight amongst themselves. Bockarie also did not report that he had met with Taylor in the company of Sankoh, and did not tell Sesay that he was thanked or given $USD 15,000 by Taylor. Sesay also testified that the RUF did not fight in Foya or Voinjama in 1999, before this incident occurred.<sup>8994</sup>

Deliberations

3971. TF1-338 is the only Prosecution witness to testify to this allegation, that Taylor congratulated Sam Bockarie on his achievements within the RUF while Foday Sankoh was detained, and gave Bockarie $USD 15,000 for those that had come to Monrovia to meet with him. The witness provided first-hand evidence, and the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-338 is a generally credible witness,<sup>8995</sup> and its findings that he was present when various diamond transactions occurred.<sup>8996</sup> In light of this evidence, the Trial Chamber rejects the blanket denials of the Accused and Issa Sesay. The Trial Chamber notes that the Accused changed his evidence about who was present at meetings between him and Sankoh and that he conceded that he provided Bockarie with between $USD 4,000 and $USD 5,000 from September 1998 to November 1999. The Trial Chamber also notes that Sesay is incorrect as to the time period when the RUF was fighting in Foya and Voinjama; the Trial Chamber has confirmed that in April 1999, dissidents known as the LURD attacked Voinjama, Liberia, and following this attack, Bockarie gave orders to the RUF and AFRC forces to support the Liberian Government forces in Liberia against the LURD.<sup>8997</sup> As this meeting was said to have occurred after the Lomé Peace Accords, which were signed in July 1999,<sup>8998</sup> the meeting could have taken place after the fighting in Foya and Voinjama. For the above reasons, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved this allegation beyond reasonable doubt.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3972. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that following the Lomé Accords, the Accused met with Bockarie, and gave him $USD 15,000 for those that had met with him.

(viii) Allegation that after the Lomé Accord, the Accused provided $USD 15,000 to Johnny Paul Koroma.

Submissions of the Parties

3973. The Prosecution alleges that following the Lomé Agreement, the Accused gave Johnny Paul Koroma $USD 15,000 for his delegation. The Prosecution alleges one instance of Taylor giving Johnny Paul Koroma $USD 15,000, supported by the evidence of Alimamy Bobson Sesay, and a second instance of the Accused giving Johnny Paul Koroma $USD 15,000, supported by the evidence of TF1-567.<sup>8999</sup>

3974. The Defence concedes that the Accused gave some funds to Johnny Paul Koroma for the purchase of clothing. It submits that the provision of these funds was not for a criminal purpose, and that this type of gift was not uncommon from an African leader to visiting delegates.<sup>9000</sup>

Evidence

Prosecution Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay

3975. Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay, an AFRC member<sup>9001</sup> and officer,<sup>9002</sup> testified that he was present at a meeting in early August 1999 in the Accused's office in the Executive Mansion between the Accused, Johnny Paul Koroma, "Junior Lion", Ibrahim 'Bazzy' Kamara and Hassan Papa Bangura (a.k.a. Bomb Blast) after the signing of the Lomé Accord. Taylor gave Johnny Paul Koroma $USD 15,000 to be distributed between his men "so that [they] could refresh [themselves] and buy things...in Monrovia" such as clothing until

Prosecution Witness TF1-567

3976. Witness TF1-567, an RUF member,<sup>9004</sup> testified that he was in Monrovia when Sam Bockarie was there waiting for Foday Sankoh to return from Lomé. When Johnny Paul Koroma came to Monrovia, he met the witness and Bockarie at the RUF Guesthouse. Koroma was subsequently moved to the Hotel Africa because “they” said that “they didn’t want them to stay together”.<sup>9005</sup> The witness saw Joe Tuah at the RUF Guesthouse give a parcel to Koroma, and Koroma then told the witness that Taylor had sent the parcel to him, and it contained $USD 15,000 to take care of him and his family.<sup>9006</sup> This evidence was not challenged in cross-examination.

Prosecution Witness Samuel Kargbo

3977. Witness Samuel Kargbo, an AFRC Supreme Council member,<sup>9007</sup> testified that in approximately August 1999 he, Ibrahim Bazy Kamara, Brima Kamara, Hassan Papa Bangura, Jumu Jalloh and Johnny Paul Koroma were present at a meeting with Taylor at the Executive Mansion in Liberia. Taylor gave Johnny Paul Koroma a brown envelope. The witness did not describe its contents. He stated that Taylor also gave ‘Bazzy’ a second one containing $USD 5,000 to be distributed between the group; the witness himself received $USD 700.<sup>9008</sup>

<sup>9008</sup> Samuel Kargbo, Transcript 22 May 2008, pp. 10577-10581. The witness starts his description of the events in question by stating that they began approximately one month prior to the signing of the Lomé Peace Accord (Samuel Kargbo, Transcript 22 May 2008, pp. 10564-10568), which was signed on 7 July 1999 (Agreed Facts and Law, Fact 32).

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

3978. The Accused testified that in approximately August to October 1999, he met with Johnny Paul Koroma and the West Side Boys in his office in the Executive Mansion but he could not specifically remember the individuals with whom he met. During that meeting he gave them an envelope with between $USD 5,000 and $USD 10,000. He thought the men looked dishevelled so he gave them the money to get something better to wear. This money was not given to buy arms and ammunition; it was simply an African tradition and any African leader would have done the same. He denied sending Joe Tuah to the RUF Guesthouse with $USD 15,000.<sup>9009</sup>

Deliberations

3979. The parties do not dispute that when the Accused met with Johnny Paul Koroma in the Executive Mansion following the Lomé Peace Accords, he gave Koroma a certain amount of money so that they could buy clothes and other items in Monrovia. The Prosecution contends that the Accused gave Koroma $USD 15,000 in two instances, one in a meeting described by Alimamy Bobson Sesay and Samuel Kargbo, and one described by TF1-567, at the RUF Guesthouse where he sent Joe Tuah on his behalf.

3980. The Trial Chamber notes that Bobson Sesay first mentioned the $USD 15,000 gift in an interview with the Prosecution on 6 April 2008. When asked why he had not mentioned this $USD 15,000 in any of his many prior interviews with the Prosecution, he responded that this was the first time he had been asked about it.<sup>9010</sup> The Trial Chamber accepts this explanation, noting that his testimony of the meeting is corroborated in its key elements by Kargbo, as well as the Accused. While Bobson Sesay mentions the amount given by Taylor to be $USD 15,000, Kargbo was less clear about the amounts, saying also that there were two envelopes and that some of the money was distributed to the group. The Accused testified that he gave Koroma an envelope with between $USD 5,000 and $USD 10,000. The Trial Chamber cannot ascertain with certainty the amount of the funds given to Johnny Paul Koroma at the meeting. However, on the basis of the evidence of Bobson Sesay and Kargbo, as well as the Accused, the Trial Chamber can conclude that Taylor gave funds to Koroma, in the amount of at least $USD 5,000 to $USD 10,000.

3981. Regarding the second incident, TF1-567's evidence that the Accused sent $USD 15,000 to Koroma at the RUF Guesthouse is hearsay, based on what Koroma told TF1-567 about the envelope he received from Joe Tuah. While he conceded giving Koroma $USD 5,000 to $USD 10,000 at the meeting, the Accused denied sending Joe Tuah to the RUF Guesthouse with $USD 15,000 for Koroma. Although the Trial Chamber has found TF1-567 to be a generally credible witness,<sup>9011</sup> the Trial Chamber cannot in this context make a finding beyond reasonable doubt based on his hearsay evidence.

Findings

3982. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that following the Lomé Peace Accords the Accused gave Johnny Paul Koroma some funds, in the amount of at least $USD 5,000 to $USD 10,000, for clothing and other personal items at a meeting in the Executive Mansion.

3983. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused sent $USD 15,000 to Johnny Paul Koroma at the RUF Guesthouse.

(ix) Allegation that the Accused gave Issa Sesay $USD 85,000Submissions of the Parties

3984. The Prosecution alleges that between 2000 and 2001, the Accused gave Issa Sesay large amounts of cash, including $USD 85,000.<sup>9012</sup>

3985. The Accused denied that this incident occurred, contending that he would never have this large amount of money on hand.<sup>9013</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORTProsecution Witness TF1-375

3986. Witness TF1-375, an AFRC fighter,<sup>9014</sup> testified that during the disarmament process and before the 2002 election in Sierra Leone, Benjamin Yeaten called him and Calvin Yeaten (a.k.a. Bus Boy), Yeaten's younger brother, and told them to bring him to White Flower and wait for him. Yeaten entered White Flower and came outside approximately 10 to 15 minutes later with a parcel. Yeaten told the witness and Calvin Yeaten to give the parcel to Issa Sesay at the Royal Hotel. When they reached Sesay's hotel room and gave him the package, he called Francis Oscar Charles (a.k.a. FOC), Eddie Kanneh and one of Sesay's bodyguards and they opened the package and began counting the money that was inside. The total came to $USD 85,000. Sesay became very angry because he had been expecting $USD 500,000 in exchange for the diamonds he had brought Taylor. Sesay was going to send the money back, but Charles convinced him to contact Yeaten and complain, and to keep the money.<sup>9015</sup>

The Accused

3987. The Accused did not deny that Issa Sesay might have visited White Flower, but he denied that this incident concerning the $USD 85,000 occurred. He stated that he was never in touch with diamond dealers, that he never had more than $USD 25,000 on hand, and that a sum of money this large would have been accounted for by the Finance Ministry. Taylor also denied knowing Calvin Yeaten.<sup>9016</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Sesay testified that after 2000 he stayed at the RUF Guesthouse when he visited Monrovia.<sup>9019</sup> He also testified that he did not know anyone by the name of Busy Boy.<sup>9020</sup>

Deliberations

3989. Prosecution Witness TF1-375 is the only Prosecution witness to testify to this allegation. The Trial Chamber recalls its previous finding that the testimony of TF1-375 must be treated with caution and requires corroboration,<sup>9021</sup> which is lacking with regard to his testimony on this incident. In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not proved this allegation beyond reasonable doubt.

Findings

3990. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that between 2000 and 2001, the Accused gave $USD 85,000 to Issa Sesay.

(x) Allegation that the Accused gave Issa Sesay $USD 15,000Submissions of the Parties

3991. The Prosecution alleges that during a meeting between Issa Sesay and the Accused, the Accused instructed Sesay to resist disarmament, and told Sesay that if he did so he (Taylor) would continue to assist the RUF as he had done before; he also provided Sesay with $USD 15,000.<sup>9022</sup>

3992. The Defence does not, in its submissions, address this incident directly, but counters the Prosecution's allegation by claiming that the Accused played a significant role in promoting peace in Sierra Leone. The Defence denies that the Accused was promoting peace while at the same time prolonging the conflict by encouraging Sesay to resist disarmament.<sup>9023</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORTEvidenceProsecution Witness TF1-338

3993. Witness TF1-338, an RUF member,<sup>9024</sup> testified that in July 2000 he was present at a late-night meeting between Taylor and Issa Sesay in Monrovia, during which Taylor urged Sesay not to listen to the Sierra Leonean Government; to agree to the disarmament if asked but not to “do it in reality”. For that, Taylor promised the RUF his continuing assistance and gave Sesay $USD 15,000.<sup>9025</sup> Sesay left Taylor and two days later returned to Sierra Leone. Sesay then convened a meeting in Koindu Town and briefed his colleagues on what Taylor had told him concerning disarmament.<sup>9026</sup>

The Accused

3994. The Accused conceded that he had spoken to Issa Sesay concerning disarmament, but did not remember who was present when he did so.<sup>9027</sup> He also testified that he had been active in ensuring that disarmament took place.<sup>9028</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

3995. Witness Issa Sesay, senior RUF commander,<sup>9029</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>9030</sup> testified that TF1-338’s account of a late night meeting with the Accused is false. Benjamin Yeaten never took Sesay at night to see the Accused and the Accused did not tell Sesay in private to agree openly to disarmament with the ECOWAS leaders but not actually to do so, nor did Taylor give him $USD 15,000.<sup>9031</sup>

Deliberations

recalls its determination that TF1-338 is a generally credible witness,<sup>9032</sup> and recalls its previous determinations finding that TF1-338 was present during diamond transactions made by Sesay. There is also considerable evidence that Taylor discouraged the RUF/AFRC from disarming, despite public statements to the contrary.<sup>9033</sup> For this reason, the Trial Chamber does not consider his denial credible. Issa Sesay also denied that this meeting occurred and that he received $USD 15,000. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Sesay's evidence must be treated with caution and requires corroboration.<sup>9034</sup> 3997. The Trial Chamber finds TF1-338's statement to be credible, and notes that he was present and witnessed the transaction. For this reason, the Trial Chamber accepts his testimony, and finds that the Prosecution has established, beyond reasonable doubt, that the Accused gave Sesay $USD 15,000 to support the RUF.

Findings

3998. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt, that the Accused gave Issa Sesay $USD 15,000 to support the RUF.

Submissions of the Parties

3999. The Prosecution alleges that in 2002, Issa Sesay sent Mike Lamin to Monrovia to collect money that the Accused had held for Sesay. The Prosecution further submits that this money was not a part of the payment required by the Lomé Agreement.<sup>9035</sup>

4000. The Defence states that the Prosecution's evidence relates only to monetary transactions, but does not discuss the actual provision of arms, and therefore falls outside the scope of assistance to facilitate a war.<sup>9036</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

EvidenceProsecution Witness TF1-371

4001. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>9037</sup> testified that at some point in 2001, Issa Sesay informed Mike Lamin of an amount of money that he was expecting from Taylor, because he had been depositing diamonds with Taylor while he and Lamin were detained. Lamin accompanied Sesay on a trip to Monrovia to collect these funds. They went on board Taylor's military helicopter from Foya to Monrovia, and Lamin, Sesay and Morris Kallon met with Taylor at midnight at White Flower. Taylor asked Sesay about the disarmament process, to which Sesay responded that approximately 40 percent of the RUF had disarmed.<sup>9038</sup> Taylor asked Sesay whether he trusted the UN disarmament process, and asked Lamin whether he had seen Foday Sankoh while he was detained.<sup>9039</sup>

4002. Sesay then told Taylor that he needed $USD 100,000 for food and supplies for his men, and Taylor told Yeaten to give Sesay $USD 50,000.<sup>9040</sup> The next morning, Yeaten gave Sesay the $USD 50,000, and they were escorted to the airport and returned to Foya in Taylor's helicopter, and on to Sierra Leone. Sesay told Lamin that he was disillusioned with Taylor and that this was the last time he would go to see him.<sup>9041</sup>

4003. In 2002, Sesay told Lamin that the RUF still had funds deposited with Taylor and they needed these funds for the coming election. When Lamin went to Senegal to meet with President Abdulai Wade, he stopped in Monrovia to see Taylor in order to ask him for their remaining $USD 50,000. When Lamin arrived in Monrovia he went to see Yeaten, and happened to see Francis Oscar Charles (a.k.a. FOC) and so Lamin asked Yeaten why Charles was in Monrovia. Yeaten told Lamin that Charles was there on Sesay's instruction, in order to ask Taylor for funds. Lamin tried to meet with Taylor but he was very busy, and he knew that the RUF delegation was still in Monrovia so he left the next day.<sup>9042</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-338

4004. Witness TF1-338, an RUF member,<sup>9043</sup> testified that in April 2002 Francis Oscar Charles was instructed by Sesay to take a letter to Taylor. He was not told the purpose of the letter but knew from Sesay's briefing of senior officers that the letter asked for money.<sup>9044</sup>

The Accused

4005. The Accused conceded to speaking with Issa Sesay about disarmament, but denied that Mike Lamin was present when he did so. He denied having any knowledge of a meeting at midnight at the Executive Mansion between himself, Lamin and Sesay in which he spoke to Sesay about disarmament. The Accused also denied that Sesay had requested $USD 100,000 and stated that he never provided these funds. Finally, he contended that he was active in trying to ensure that disarmament took place.<sup>9045</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

4006. Witness Issa Sesay, senior RUF commander<sup>9046</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>9047</sup> denied that Mike Lamin met with him, Morris Kallon and Taylor at White Flower in 2001, because Sesay and Kallon did not travel to Monrovia together in 2001. The last time that Sesay and Kallon went to Monrovia was in October 2000, when Lamin was detained. Sesay also denied having a discussion in Lamin's presence concerning disarmament, and denied asking Taylor for $USD 100,000 for food for the RUF, following which Taylor gave him $USD 50,000. He also denied sending Francis Oscar Charles to collect $USD 50,000 from Taylor or to go anywhere.<sup>9048</sup>

4007. Sesay further denied that he instructed Lamin to travel to Monrovia in 2002 to ask Taylor for $USD 50,000 from Taylor, stating that he was not aware of Lamin going to Monrovia.<sup>9049</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORTDeliberations

4008. Witness TF1-371 is the only Prosecution witness proffered to support the allegation that in 2002, Issa Sesay sent Mike Lamin to Monrovia to get money that Taylor had held for Sesay. TF1-371 testified to more than the allegation that Sesay sent Lamin to collect money from Taylor in 2002; TF1-371 also testified that Taylor gave Sesay $USD 50,000 in 2001, and Lamin was sent back to Liberia to collect another $USD 50,000 in 2002.

4009. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that TF1-371 is a generally credible witness.<sup>9050</sup> Although the Accused and Issa Sesay denied that these events occurred, the Trial Chamber finds their denials to be self-serving. In that regard, the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Issa Sesay's evidence should be considered with caution.<sup>9051</sup> TF1-371 provided detailed and coherent testimony on these events, and the Trial Chamber finds his testimony credible. The Trial Chamber notes that the $USD 50,000 from Taylor, as described by TF1-371 in his testimony, was money related to diamonds that was held by Taylor for the RUF.

Findings

4010. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused gave $USD 50,000 to Issa Sesay in 2001, and that Sesay sent Mike Lamin in 2002 to retrieve a further $USD 50,000 that Taylor held for the RUF.

4012. The Defence did not address the allegation that Issa Sesay sent a delegation to Monrovia to receive money from the Accused, but denies that the Accused received money from Sesay for safe keeping.<sup>9053</sup>

4013. Witness TF1-338 an RUF member,<sup>9054</sup> testified that in 2001, Francis Oscar Charles (a.k.a. FOC) and Issa Sesay travelled from Koindu Town to Foya where they met Benjamin Yeaten, and they all travelled on to Monrovia. Alpha Bravo met them at the RUF Guesthouse,<sup>9055</sup> and they handed him a packet of diamonds. In the presence of Charles, Alpha Bravo gave Sesay $USD 300,000. Sesay divided this amount into two: he gave $USD 150,000 to Taylor for safe keeping, and he took the remaining $USD 150,000 back to Sierra Leone.<sup>9056</sup>

4014. In early 2002, Sesay sent Charles and Fatmata Sankoh, one of Sankoh's wives, to Monrovia to give a letter concerning the collection of this $USD 150,000 to Taylor.<sup>9057</sup> Charles went first to meet with Yeaten so that he would take him to Taylor, but he was told at White Flower that Yeaten was at the front lines. Sesay then communicated with Dopoe Menkarzon, who took Charles, Rashid Foday and Fatmata Sankoh to Taylor.<sup>9058</sup> While they were waiting to see Taylor at White Flower Yeaten's bodyguard, Salami, arrested them, saying that this was done on orders from Yeaten, although Charles did not know why he was arrested. At the police station, Charles said that he worked with Sankoh, and was in Liberia to see Taylor. They spent two nights in detention at Saw Beach, after which a woman get money that Taylor had held in safe keeping, but that they were imprisoned on Taylor's orders. TF1-371 testified that Mike Lamin saw Francis Oscar Charles in Monrovia and was told that he was there to collect funds from Taylor. The Trial Chamber considers that this testimony corroborates the testimony of TF1-338 that Charles travelled to Monrovia to collect funds from Taylor. The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that both TF1-371 and TF1-338 are generally credible witnesses.<sup>9067</sup>

4019. The Defence highlighted in cross-examination several inconsistencies between TF1-338's prior statements and his testimony. For example, in his prior statement the witness told investigators that Francis Oscar Charles was taken to see the Accused when he first arrived, at which point the Accused arrested him; in his trial testimony, the witness stated that Charles only met Taylor after he was arrested. The witness also in his prior statement did not refer to Sankoh's wife or Rashid Foday accompanying Charles to meet Taylor, and in a prior statement said that after Charles was released from detention he was brought to the RUF Guesthouse, but not back to a jail cell, as TF1-338 testified at trial.<sup>9068</sup> TF1-338 explained these inconsistencies as a misunderstanding of chronology and an administrative error of the Prosecution, respectively.<sup>9069</sup> In his prior statement, TF1-338 also said that Mike Lamin travelled to Monrovia from Senegal and pleaded for Charles' release, which TF1-338 did not mention in his testimony at trial.<sup>9070</sup> TF1-338 testified at trial, however, that he had said this in his interview with investigators, but they had not written this down.<sup>9071</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-371 testified that Mike Lamin saw Charles in Monrovia at this time but did not mention Charles's imprisonment.<sup>9072</sup> The Trial Chamber accepts the explanations of TF1-338 with regard to his prior statement and does not consider his failure to mention Mike Lamin in his testimony to be significant.

4020. The Trial Chamber does not accept Issa Sesay's assertion that Charles was based in Makeni, and therefore did not travel to Monrovia; the fact that Charles may have been based in Makeni does not exclude the possibility that he travelled to Monrovia.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4021. In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that Sesay sent a “second delegation” to Monrovia to collect money from the Accused. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that the money from the Accused, as described by TF1-338 in his testimony, was money held by the Accused, relating to diamonds. According to the evidence, no funds were given to Francis Oscar Charles, except for $USD 200 from Yeaten to return to Sierra Leone.

Findings

4022. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Issa Sesay sent a “second delegation” to Monrovia to get money from the Accused, and they were imprisoned on his orders, but no funds were given by the Accused to Sesay.

Conclusion

4023. The Trial Chamber has found that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that Taylor provided financial support to the RUF/AFRC, in the following amounts:

- (i) 10 million CFA francs to the RUF in Côte d’Ivoire; however the Prosecution failed to prove that the funds were used to facilitate arms and diamond deals for the RUF.
- (ii) an unspecified amount of funds to RUF personnel stranded in Côte d’Ivoire;
- (iii) an unspecified amount of funds to the RUF, in the tens of thousands of dollars, to buy arms and ammunition from ULIMO;
- (iv) $USD 10,000 to Sam Bockarie after ULIMO and LURD invaded Lofa;
- (v) $USD 20,000 to Foday Sankoh in Lomé before the negotiations began;
- (vi) $USD 15,000 to Sam Bockarie following the Lomé Accords;
- (vii) $USD 5,000 to 10,000 to Johnny Paul Koroma following the Lomé Accords;
- (viii) $USD 15,000 to Issa Sesay to support the RUF; and
- (ix) $USD 50,000 to Issa Sesay in 2001.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4024. The Trial Chamber notes that the Accused conceded to having provided some of these funds, including the 10 million CFA francs given to the RUF in the Côte d'Ivoire, and the money given to Johnny Paul Koroma following the Lomé Accords. The Accused also testified that he provided $USD 4,000 to 5,000 to Sam Bockarie between September 1998 to November 1999. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that with the exception of its finding that the Accused provided funds to Bockarie in order to buy arms and ammunition from ULIMO and the allegation that the 10 million CFA francs given to the RUF in Côte d'Ivoire, the use of these funds was unspecified or for personal use. In several instances, the Prosecution alleges that these funds were used for clothes or travel for RUF members. For example, Taylor provided $USD 20,000 to Foday Sankoh before the Lomé negotiations began for Sankoh's "personal use" and he provided $USD 15,000 to Johnny Paul Koroma for his delegation to buy personal items in Monrovia. The $USD 15,000 provided to Bockarie by the Accused for commanders who had travelled to Monrovia was for unspecified use. In addition, the unspecified amount of money given to RUF members in Côte d'Ivoire after Sankoh was arrested was to "sustain them" in Danané. Moreover, the Prosecution failed to prove that the 10 million CFA francs given by the Accused to the RUF in Côte d'Ivoire was used to facilitate arms and diamond deals.

4025. The Trial Chamber notes the Defence contention that the RUF received financial support from sources other than Taylor. For example, TF1-168 testified that in February 1996, Sankoh told him that he had received $USD 50,000 from Nigerian President Sani Abacha, although Sankoh did not tell the witness the purpose of this gift.<sup>9073</sup> TF1-168 and Fayia Musa testified that in May 1996, $USD 500,000 was provided to Foday Sankoh by Libya, which is corroborated by a contemporaneous document indicating that the funds were specifically for the purchase of arms and ammunition.<sup>9074</sup> Finally, Issa Sesay testified that in November 1998, $USD 50,000 was provided to Bockarie, Bah, Rogers and Kanneh by Gaddafi in Libya, which Bockarie used partially to buy ammunition and medicine.<sup>9075</sup> The Trial Chamber considers that there is no evidence that these payments are in any way linked or relevant to the payments by the Accused.

4026. In light of the relatively few and small amounts of funding provided to the RUF or AFRC by the Accused, and considering that most of this funding was for personal or unspecified uses, the Trial Chamber is unable to find that the financial support provided by the Accused, in itself, had a direct impact on the operations of the AFRC/RUF.

Medical and Other SupportSubmissions of the Parties

4027. The Prosecution alleges that throughout the armed conflict in Sierra Leone, the Accused provided medicine, medical treatment, as well as food, military uniforms, fuel, vehicles, and “morale boosters”, such as cigarettes, drugs and alcohol to the RUF, Junta and AFRC/RUF.<sup>9076</sup>

4028. The Defence concedes that there is “a considerable amount of evidence citing Taylor as the provider of a variety of goods and money for the RUF effort” but submits this evidence involves “often low ranking” subordinates who witnessed events in Sierra Leone, not in Liberia or anywhere in the proximity of the Accused.<sup>9077</sup> The Accused also conceded that he gave some support to the RUF for humanitarian reasons or gifts not related to the war effort.<sup>9078</sup> The Defence denies, however, that the Accused provided a majority of these supplies or services, and contends that transactions involving this support were legal, and occurred on the open market in Liberia.<sup>9079</sup>

Prosecution Witness Albert Saidu

4029. Witness Albert Saidu, an RUF adjutant from 1991 to 2001,<sup>9080</sup> testified that he saw Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) “who we called Colonel Jungle” in RUF territory and that he heard from members of the RUF high command about trips that Tamba would make to RUF territory in 1997. Tamba did not come there in secret, and everyone knew that he travelled frequently between Sam Bockarie and Taylor. Tamba would bring arms, ammunition, food and medicine to Bockarie at headquarters, and the radio operators at headquarters would send messages to the front lines reporting on what Tamba had delivered. Whenever Tamba came, RUF members felt relieved because they believed he was someone who brought materiel for the RUF.<sup>9081</sup>

4030. The first time that Saidu met Tamba in person was in 1998, when Bockarie asked him to deliver a letter to Tamba in Foya Tenga, Liberia stating that the RUF had a shortage of materials. Bockarie told Saidu to take the letter quickly because they needed materials to come quickly. When Saidu arrived, Tamba said he had been expecting someone because he had already spoken to Bockarie. Tamba read Bockarie’s letter and said to Saidu that he would go to Monrovia to meet Taylor, so Saidu returned to Sierra Leone.<sup>9082</sup> A few days after Saidu arrived to Koindu after delivering the letter, the RUF in Koindu received some materials from Buedu “because we had written.... [w]e received materials”.<sup>9083</sup>

4031. When Bockarie was based in Buedu, Saidu would visit as his wife was based there.<sup>9084</sup> In April 1998, Bockarie visited Koindu, where Saidu was based. The senior officers were called and Saidu walked into a room where Bockarie was speaking on his satellite phone. Bockarie’s security guard Mohamed Banya (a.k.a. Sabado) was present. Banya told Saidu that he and Bockarie were on the way to collect arms and ammunition from Taylor, and Bockarie was on the phone asking for clearance from Foday to travel to

Monrovia.<sup>9085</sup> Banya told the witness that he had made two trips to Liberia with Bockarie and had brought back ammunition, arms and food.<sup>9086</sup>

Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara

4032. Witness Perry Kamara was a high-level radio officer in the RUF in 1998.<sup>9087</sup> Kamara testified that during the Fitti-Fatta mission, Sam Bockarie and Taylor arranged for wounded RUF fighters to be taken to Monrovia for medical care. Bockarie told Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman) to take the wounded to Buedu, where they would be loaded onto helicopters to Foya and then would travel on to Monrovia.<sup>9088</sup>

4033. The witness testified that this was not the first time that this happened, but that “any time” they had wounded fighters they would be taken by helicopter to Monrovia. For example, in 2000, when Mingo had a serious accident during the RUF attack on the UN in Makeni, Taylor requested that he be taken by helicopter to Liberia for treatment.<sup>9089</sup>

4034. Kamara also testified that after the RUF entered Kono district in 1998, Bockarie would send messages to those in Kono frequently “emphasising on mining, mining”, saying that they should be sure to hold “fast” on to Kono, because the mining there was crucial for the RUF to obtain arms, ammunition, food and drugs from Taylor.<sup>9090</sup>

4035. Kamara also stated that from May 2000 to disarmament in 2001, Issa Sesay would bring diamonds to Taylor in Liberia for safe keeping. Sesay would call from Liberia and report on what Taylor had donated to the RUF, and would bring back to Sierra Leone documents which catalogued the number of diamonds that Taylor kept, as well as the diesel, petrol, engine oil and food that Taylor would give the RUF.<sup>9091</sup>

Prosecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif

4036. Witness Varmuyan Sherif, a former ULIMO-K fighter who became an officer in the SSS,<sup>9092</sup> testified that while the RUF was fighting in Lofa County in 1999, RUF fighters were taken to a hospital in Monrovia. The press and politicians saw Sierra Leonean citizens in the hospital and stated on the radio that this proved that there was no war in Liberia, but that Taylor was sending Liberians to fight the war in Sierra Leone.<sup>9093</sup>

Prosecution Witness Abu Keita

4037. Witness Abu Keita, a former deputy chief of staff and commander of ULIMO-K who later became commander of the Scorpion Unit,<sup>9094</sup> testified that during the recapture of Kono and Makeni in late 1998, he travelled with Bockarie to Foya, where Joe Tuah came in a helicopter to bring Bockarie to Liberia.<sup>9095</sup> Bockarie did not stay long in Liberia, and when he returned to Foya the witness met him there. Bockarie brought with him a Toyota Land Cruiser pick-up, which he said had been given to him by Taylor. The vehicle also contained jeans, t-shirts, medicine and bandages.<sup>9096</sup>

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

4038. Witness Isaac Mongor, an RUF senior commander,<sup>9097</sup> testified that in November 1998 he received a radio message from Sam Bockarie ordering him to travel to Buedu. When Mongor arrived at Bockarie's house in Buedu, Bockarie was happy and said that he had gone to Liberia and received ammunition, food and medicine from the Pa, Taylor. The ammunition "was packed up to the ceiling" in a store room next to Bockarie's bedroom.<sup>9098</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORTProsecution Witness TF1-516

4039. Witness TF1-516, an RUF member,<sup>9099</sup> testified that in 1998 after the ECOMOG Intervention Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle), Dopoe Menkarzon and Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag) “started coming back” bringing materials from Foya. Sam Bockarie told “us” that his chief informed him (Bockarie) via radio message that “certain people” were coming. Bockarie sent coded radio messages requesting materials, ammunition. The witness also testified that in 2000, when Issa Sesay was the RUF commander in Buedu, various persons would collect supplies and take them from Liberia to Sierra Leone, including Bockarie, Tamba, Dopoe, Marzah, Denis Mingo (a.k.a. Superman), Roland Duah (a.k.a. Amphibian Father) and Black Liberian Mosquito. Arms, ammunition, petrol, medicine, food and combat fatigues would arrive in Foya in Liberia, and then be taken to Buedu by vehicle. When fighting was taking place in Foya these materials were flown in. The vehicles were sometimes provided by Bockarie and were sometimes from Liberia and driven by Liberian soldiers. When the supplies reached Buedu, Bockarie would sign documents indicating that he had received the shipments. The flow of materials “was frequent”<sup>9100</sup>

4040. TF1-516 also testified that Colonel Sherrif Parker (not Base Marine, who was also called Sherrif Parker) was flown to Monrovia after being wounded and remained in Monrovia for some months. The witness did not specify when this occurred but noted that Parker died in 2001.<sup>9101</sup>

4041. Witness TF1-338, an RUF member,<sup>9102</sup> testified that at the end of 2000, Issa Sesay travelled to Monrovia with diamonds to give Taylor. He was received by Benjamin Yeaten and was taken to the Guesthouse and, at night, taken to Taylor. When Sesay saw Taylor at the Executive Mansion, Taylor took the diamonds and said he would help them with whatever they needed for the revolution in Sierra Leone, but would hold the diamonds for “safe keeping” until Foday Sankoh returned. Sesay told Taylor that the RUF lacked materials and their enemies were threatening their positions, and so Taylor said that he would talk to Yeaten.<sup>9103</sup> After this meeting, Yeaten took Sesay to the Schefflein Camp, where Sesay collected arms, ammunition, boots and uniforms “in large quantities” and took them back to Koidu.<sup>9104</sup> These materials were stored in Sierra Leone, and then used by the RUF against the Kamajors and UNAMSIL as they pushed towards Makeni.<sup>9105</sup>

4043. In March, April or May 2001, Sesay met Yeaten in Foya and travelled with him in an ATU helicopter to Monrovia to meet Taylor at night. Sesay handed diamonds to Taylor at the Executive Mansion and Taylor told Sesay to stop bringing him diamonds because the international community would link him to the RUF. Taylor told Sesay he would try to find someone who would exchange diamonds for money so that Sesay could purchase supplies for the front line in Sierra Leone. The next day Yeaten introduced Sesay to two white men who were diamond dealers from Belgium. Later, Sesay returned to Sierra Leone with diesel, rice, and medicine.<sup>9107</sup>

4044. Later in 2001, Francis Oscar Charles and Issa Sesay travelled with a packet of diamonds to meet Yeaten in Foya, and they all travelled to Monrovia. Sesay met Alpha Bravo at the RUF Guesthouse and handed him the diamonds. Alpha Bravo gave Sesay $USD 300,000, and Sesay divided this amount into two: he gave $USD 150,000 to Taylor for safe keeping, and took $USD 150,000 back to Sierra Leone. Sesay returned to Foya with Yeaten and loaded his vehicle with beer, liquor, shoes, clothing and drugs, which he took to Koidu Town. During 2001 Sesay continued to make trips to Monrovia.<sup>9108</sup>

Prosecution Witness Augustine Mallah

4045. Witness Augustine Mallah, a security officer to Mike Lamin from 1996 to disarmament,<sup>9109</sup> testified that during the time he was in Buedu in 1998, Sam Bockarie used to go to Monrovia and Gbarnga. The witness accompanied Bockarie on a trip to Foya, where a helicopter took Bockarie to Monrovia. Mallah then returned to Buedu. Bockarie told Mallah that he was going to Monrovia to meet with Taylor to get arms, ammunition and medicine. Bockarie did not tell Mallah how he paid for these items, but the bodyguards with whom Bockarie travelled told Mallah that Bockarie traded diamonds for ammunition and US dollars. Bockarie would send people with this money to buy food and clothing at the Guinean border.<sup>9110</sup>

Prosecution Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie

4046. Witness Dauda Aruna Fornie, an RUF radio operator,<sup>9111</sup> testified that when he was assigned as a radio operator in Buedu from early 1998 until April 1999, the radio station at Sam Bockarie's house had many communications with Base 1, the station in Liberia. Bockarie would tell the radio operators in Buedu to contact Benjamin Yeaten through Sunlight in Liberia and say that they needed ammunition. Yeaten would consult with Taylor, and then tell Bockarie to travel to Liberia or send someone there, and Bockarie would send RUF commanders to Liberia to get ammunition and other materials.<sup>9112</sup> Sometimes Benjamin Yeaten would send Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) or Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag) or a Liberian called Mosquito. Marzah was one of Yeaten's security men who would travel to Sierra Leone with ammunition, fuel, diesel, and sometimes food. Tamba frequently escorted ammunition to Sierra Leone, there were only a few trips where materials were brought that Tamba was not involved in.<sup>9113</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

4047. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>9114</sup> testified that in 1998, Sam Bockarie made a series of trips to Monrovia to take diamonds to Taylor. On his second trip to Monrovia the witness saw diamonds brought by CO Med, the RUF mining commander to Bockarie. Bockarie gave these diamonds of various sizes to Taylor. Bockarie called on the radio to Issa Sesay in Sierra Leone saying that he had arrived and was with Benjamin Yeaten, and spent approximately one week in Monrovia. When he returned to Buedu, he was accompanied by Joseph Marzah (a.k.a. Zigzag) and "Sampson", two members of Taylor's security detail, who brought 15-20 boxes of AK47 ammunition, a few RPG bombs, salt, Maggi, rice, and cigarettes.<sup>9115</sup>

Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

4048. Witness Mohamed Kabbah, an RUF radio operator,<sup>9116</sup> testified that when he was assigned as a radio operator in Buedu from early 1998 until late 1999,<sup>9117</sup> Sam Bockarie made frequent trips to Monrovia, "he was welcome there" and did not need a passport.<sup>9118</sup> When the RUF needed ammunition, Bockarie would give the radio operators a message, and they would communicate with Sunlight in Liberia in order to tell this to Taylor. Bockarie would go to Monrovia and return to Sierra Leone with ammunition, food, used clothing and other items. In one instance, Bockarie brought diamonds from Kono to Monrovia, and returned with a large ten tyre truck filled with ammunition, "rubbers", wine, rice, Maggi, salt and other condiments. Jungle too used to bring ammunition. At times if Bockarie did not go to Liberia Jungle would come.<sup>9119</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4049. Witness TF1-585, an RUF radio operator,<sup>9120</sup> testified that while she was stationed in Buedu, there was frequent communication between the radios in Buedu and Base 1 in Monrovia.<sup>9121</sup> This communication occurred during 1998 and later. If something was important Benjamin Yeaten would speak to Sam Bockarie on Bockarie's satellite phone. After these conversations, the witness would hear Bockarie speak openly to other officers about what was discussed, mainly Bockarie's trips to Monrovia, or Daniel Tamba's (a.k.a. Jungle) trips to Buedu. Bockarie was not a man who kept secrets.<sup>9122</sup>

4050. Tamba would bring supplies such as arms, ammunition, food, clothing, shoes and many things to Buedu any time the RUF was in need.<sup>9123</sup> Materials were stored in two warehouses, one of which was next to Bockarie's house. Tamba's driver, "Alpha Jalloh", told the witness that they would pick up the supplies from White Flower, Taylor's home in Monrovia, at night and bring them to Yeaten's house. They then loaded them onto a truck for Buedu and would return to Sierra Leone at night.<sup>9124</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-567

4051. Witness TF1-567, an RUF member,<sup>9125</sup> testified that at the time he was based in Balahun, from February 1998 to September 1998, he would travel to Buedu frequently. The witness was told that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and Sampson would come to Buedu with arms, ammunition, food and other supplies. Tamba and others said that it was Taylor who would provide these arms and ammunition.<sup>9126</sup>

4052. TF1-567 also testified that "while [he was] in Monrovia",<sup>9127</sup> he would buy medicine and send it to Sierra Leone. In order to get rice to send to Sierra Leone, Benjamin Yeaten

The witness only stated that this occurred "while he was in Monrovia", and did not specify to what years he was referring, but his testimony indicates that he was assigned to work at the RUF guesthouse from 1999-2001, for Eddie Kanneh in 2001, and then for Benjamin Yeaten until 2003, all in would give him instructions from Taylor to go to “Freeport K&K”, where a Lebanese man named K&K owned a store where he would collect the rice. Taylor would buy the rice that he sent to Sierra Leone.<sup>9128</sup>

Prosecution Witness Jabaty Jaward

4053. Witness Jabaty Jaward was a storekeeper for the RUF between early 1998 and late 1999.<sup>9129</sup> He testified that while he was in Buedu in mid-1998, Sam Bockarie travelled to Liberia and said he was going to see “the old man”, whom the witness testified was Taylor. When he returned, Bockarie told the witness that they should be expecting supplies to arrive, and Bockarie’s bodyguard “Foday”, told the witness that they went to Monrovia to see Taylor. They then received a large consignment of food, fuel, gasoline, engine oil and other supplies the soldiers needed.<sup>9130</sup>

The Accused

4054. The Accused testified that “during the very tough period” he permitted RUF members who were injured to get treatment in Liberia, but stated that this was humanitarian assistance and there was nothing wrong with him doing so.<sup>9131</sup>

4055. The Accused denied that he provided the RUF with food, and more specifically with rice. He contended that Foday Sankoh bought rice when he came to Liberia, and Bockarie “did a lot of shopping” and would also buy things such as food, clothes, shoes and medicine in Liberia and carry them to Sierra Leone. Further, he stated that in the time that he was mediating the conflict on behalf of ECOWAS it would have been within his rights to provide the RUF with rice, and that would have been a good thing to do.<sup>9132</sup> Finally, the Accused conceded that two drums of fuel may have passed from Liberia to Sierra Leone during Issa Sesay's regime, but insisted that the RUF bought this fuel, and that it was only for use in hospitals.<sup>9133</sup>

4056. The Accused also denied that, as Abu Keita testified, he provided Bockarie with a Toyota Land Cruiser that contained clothes and medicine. Taylor noted that the witness testified the incident happened just before Christmas, but Bockarie was not in Liberia at any time before Christmas, except when he passed through in early December.<sup>9134</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

4057. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>9135</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>9136</sup> testified that Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) moved to Côte d'Ivoire in 1996, and stayed there until 1998. He then left the RUF with Bockarie in 1999. In approximately 1998, Tamba was used as a buying officer for the RUF, and would travel to Liberia to buy whatever they needed, such as petroleum, food, medicine and other supplies.<sup>9137</sup> Bockarie would send Tamba to Monrovia to buy medicine and provisions from Lebanese businessmen named "Mohammed" and "Fayard". Tamba was a runner for Bockarie and not for Taylor, so he did not run between Bockarie and Taylor.<sup>9138</sup>

4058. Sesay also testified that the money that was looted from the bank in Koidu town in April 1998 was used to buy ammunition from ULIMO, and also food and medicine for RUF combatants.<sup>9139</sup>

Deliberations

4059. The Prosecution alleges that the Accused contributed to the RUF and the war in Sierra Leone by providing medical and other assistance to the RUF during the Indictment period.<sup>9140</sup> The Defence concedes that the Accused gave some support to the RUF for humanitarian reasons, but contends that most support was procured by the RUF through legal means, on the open market in Liberia.<sup>9141</sup>

4060. The Trial Chamber notes that the evidence includes references to deliveries of arms to the RUF and diamonds to the Accused. These aspects of the evidence are addressed elsewhere in the context of the Trial Chamber's consideration of arms and diamond deliveries.<sup>9142</sup>

4061. The Prosecution has presented a considerable amount of evidence that the Accused provided the RUF with various goods and services that benefited the RUF war effort. Concerning the provision of medical care, the Accused does not necessarily deny that he did so, stating that during "the very rough period", he permitted RUF injured fighters to get treatment in Liberia.<sup>9143</sup> The Accused does not, however, specify in which periods in the conflict he provided this care.

4062. Perry Kamara testified that "any time" there were wounded fighters, including during the Fitti-Fatta mission, Taylor arranged for them to be taken to Monrovia for medical care.<sup>9144</sup> When asked by the Prosecution how he knew that RUF fighters were treated in Monrovia, Kamara gave the example of Denis Mingo being taken by helicopter for treatment from Makeni in 2000.<sup>9145</sup> Moreover, his testimony is corroborated in general terms by the evidence of Varmuyan Sherif, who testified that Taylor provided medical treatment for RUF fighters when the RUF was engaged in combat in Lofa County. Sherif stated that the press and politicians noted on the radio that Sierra Leonean fighters were treated in Liberian hospitals, although no further evidence has been adduced by the Prosecution relating to this claim. The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that both Kamara and Sherif are generally credible witnesses.<sup>9146</sup>

4063. Although the evidence of the two Prosecution witnesses is not very specific, the Trial Chamber notes that the Accused has conceded to providing some medical treatment for RUF fighters. In light of the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Accused provided medical treatment to RUF fighters at some point in the Indictment period. It is not clear, however, how continuous or substantial the provision of medical care was throughout the Indictment period.

4064. Several Prosecution Witnesses testified to the Accused's involvement in providing goods such as food, clothing, cigarettes, alcohol and other supplies to the RUF. Prosecution Witnesses TF1-338 and TF1-567 testified to having first-hand knowledge of the Accused providing these supplies, TF1-338 when the Accused told Sesay that he would talk to Yeaten regarding the RUF's lack of materials and when Yeaten then provided these materials for Sesay in "large quantities".<sup>9147</sup> TF1-567 stated that when he lived in Liberia he would buy rice on behalf of the Accused and send it to the RUF in Sierra Leone.<sup>9148</sup>

4065. Eight Prosecution Witnesses testified to hearing that the Accused provided supplies to the RUF. Perry Kamara, Abu Keita, Isaac Mongor, Augustine Mallah and Jabaty Jaward heard directly from Bockarie that the Accused gave supplies to the RUF.<sup>9149</sup> TF1-567 heard from Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and others that the Accused provided supplies to the RUF.<sup>9150</sup> Albert Saidu stated that "everyone knew" that Tamba brought supplies to the RUF.<sup>9151</sup> Saidu also delivered a letter concerning the RUF's shortage of materials to Tamba, at which point Tamba said he would meet with the Accused. Three days later, supplies arrived in Sierra Leone.<sup>9152</sup> Finally, TF1-585 heard from Tamba's driver who accompanied Tamba to Liberia that he received supplies from White Flower, the Accused's home in Monrovia, and then loaded the supplies onto trucks that travelled to Sierra Leone.<sup>9153</sup>

4066. The Defence concedes that the Accused may have provided a limited amount of supplies for humanitarian reasons.<sup>9154</sup> The Defence also contends, however, that the majority of the Prosecution's evidence is given by individuals who assume that assistance came from the Accused because it arrived from Liberia. There is some Prosecution evidence which falls into this category. Prosecution Witnesses TF1-516, TF1-338, TF1-371, Mohamed Kabbah, and Albert Saidu all testified that RUF members came from Liberia with supplies, but offered no evidence that these supplies were provided by the Accused.<sup>9155</sup> The Accused testified that Sankoh and Bockarie would buy these supplies when they came to Liberia.<sup>9156</sup> Defence Witness Issa Sesay confirmed that Tamba bought supplies in Liberia to bring back to Sierra Leone, and claimed that these transactions had no connection to the Accused.<sup>9157</sup> TF1-338 testified that after the Accused asked Sesay to stop bringing him diamonds because of international pressure, he found Belgian men who would trade diamonds for cash, and Sesay bought supplies with these funds.<sup>9158</sup> In addition, Augustine Mallah testified that Bockarie's bodyguards told him that Bockarie would trade diamonds for cash in Liberia, and buy supplies with this cash.<sup>9159</sup> This supports the Defence contention that RUF members bought supplies with cash.

4067. The Trial Chamber notes, however, the substantial evidence that the Accused himself provided supplies to the RUF, and is of the view that the Accused's provision of supplies did not preclude others from also buying supplies on the open market in Liberia. For this reason, the Trial Chamber does not consider the evidence of independent cash transactions not attributed to the Accused inconsistent with the evidence of transactions in which the Accused was involved. These are not alleged to be the same transactions. Having considered all the evidence, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused provided supplies to the RUF during the Indictment period, although the evidence is insufficient to enable the Trial Chamber to judge the quantity of supplies provided.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORTFindings

4068. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused provided medical care to RUF/AFRC members. However, it is not clear how continuous or substantial the provision of medical care was throughout the Indictment period. The Prosecution has also proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused provided medicine, food, clothing, cigarettes, alcohol and other supplies to the RUF during the indictment period. However, the evidence is insufficient to enable the Trial Chamber to judge the quantity of supplies provided. Moreover, other supplies for the RUF came from Liberia through other channels unrelated to the Accused.

Provision of HerbalistsSubmissions of the Parties

4069. The Prosecution alleges that the Accused sent herbalists who put “protection marks” on fighters in order to bolster their courage for the mission to recapture Kono, also called Operation Fitti-Fatta.<sup>9160</sup>

4070. The Defence concedes that there is evidence that herbalists came from Liberia to prepare fighters for the Fitti-Fatta mission.<sup>9161</sup> However, it characterises the inculpatory accounts of the Accused’s involvement as entirely hearsay and highlights evidence that the RUF used herbalists and juju men before the Accused allegedly sent the herbalists from Liberia which, the Defence submits, means that there would have been no need for the Accused’s involvement.<sup>9162</sup> The Defence also cites evidence from the Accused that he did not believe in juju in any event.<sup>9163</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Prosecution Witness Alice Pyne

4071. Witness Alice Pyne, an RUF radio operator,<sup>9164</sup> testified that she encountered herbalists in the zoebush in Buedu, when she was there with Superman for the meeting at which the Fitti-Fatta mission was planned.<sup>9165</sup> Pyne testified that when she arrived in Buedu Sebatu, Sam Bockarie's radio operator, came and told her that Bockarie was going to Foya in Liberia. Following this, the witness saw Bockarie and his bodyguards leave in their vehicles from her house, which was not far from Bockarie's. Later the same afternoon, Bockarie returned.<sup>9166</sup>

4072. Bockarie took Pyne, Superman and other RUF fighters into the zoebush outside Buedu where there were up to seven herbalists leading other herbalists and juju men. They used juju practice and marked the RUF fighters to make them bulletproof at the "war front"<sup>9167</sup> so bullets would not pierce their bodies.<sup>9168</sup> Pyne testified that she also saw Colonel Jungle in the zoebush at this time.<sup>9169</sup> Pyne explained that she knew the herbalists were from Liberia, both from the language they spoke and because that was what Bockarie told Superman when he was handing the herbalists over to him. Pyne also testified that an elderly Gbandi woman had told her that the herbalists' boss was a Loma tribesman and they had been sent to Bockarie by Taylor to help protect the RUF fighters, particularly those who would go to recapture Koidu Town from ECOMOG.<sup>9170</sup> Bockarie told Superman that these people were "his strangers" and Superman should take them to his base so that other commanders from Yomandu, Gandohun, Tombudu and Tefeya in Kono could bring their men to be marked in preparation for the Fitti-Fatta mission. They then travelled back to Kono together with the herbalists. Pyne stayed in Buedu for three days and thereafter, about 200-300 people including herself, Superman, armed men and the herbalists travelled to Superman Ground. They brought arms and ammunitions to Superman Ground.<sup>9171</sup>

4073. The next morning, as instructed by Superman, Pyne sent a radio coded message to Komba, Bai Bureh, Rambo and Rocky CO requesting them to send manpower that was supposed to participate in the Fitti-Fatta operation to go to Superman Ground and have their bodies marked by the herbalists.<sup>9172</sup> Pyne estimated that 500 men arrived at Superman Ground and the next morning, the herbalists created a special place with a circle in which the fighters could enter and have their bodies marked. Pyne spoke Gbandi and for that reason, she interpreted as the herbalists were marking the fighters.<sup>9173</sup> Pyne stated that the herbalists used a blade to put 168 markings on each of their bodies and imposed “laws” forbidding sex, bathing and eating slimy food for seven days.<sup>9174</sup> After they completed the markings, Komba and Bai Bureh returned to their locations with their men.

Prosecution Witness Perry Kamara

4074. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>9175</sup> testified that around April or May 1998 at the commanders’ meeting in Buedu at which Bockarie ordered the Fitti-Fatta attack, Bockarie introduced one herbalist saying that he had been sent by the Accused. Kamara said that the herbalist was meant to “inspire” them so that they would have no fear about attacking Kono and “the various areas [Kamara had] named”.<sup>9176</sup> Bockarie said that Taylor had told him that herbalists had been helping him in Liberia so he was sending them to Sierra Leone to come and work for the rebels there. The herbalist carved and rubbed ‘concoctions’ on the bodies of the fighters, including the witness, so that they would not fear guns. Kamara was marked by piercing with a razor blade 21 times on his left and right arms and 21 times on each side of his back, then “something black” was rubbed in. If anyone refused to be carved, Bockarie ordered them to be killed. Kamara explained that those who were in Buedu were dealt with there and that “they” (the herbalists) were then sent to Superman Ground in Kono where fighters there were carved, and more fighters were then called in turn from their bases to be marked: “nobody escaped the markings”.<sup>9177</sup> Kamara testified that the reason so many of the fighters died or were wounded during Fitti-Fatta was “because they met the man Sam Bockarie said Taylor sent” and they believed that the medicines would work the way the herbalists told them they would.<sup>9178</sup>

4075. Witness TF1-375, an RUF fighter,<sup>9179</sup> testified that about three weeks after they retreated from Koidu Town, Sam Bockarie contacted Superman via radio to advise that he was sending “guests” from Liberia. Superman sent people to receive them at the Moa River, and they returned accompanied by up to eight Liberians. The men had Liberian accents and brought arms and ammunition, as well as two medicine men who marked the fighters to protect them. At an open forum for senior officers the Liberians told Superman and the officers that they wanted the officers to retake Kono. Superman forced all the fighters to “take the mark”, despite the witness not believing “in that”. The medicine men told the fighters that they had done the same to fighters during “the NPFL time under Taylor”. The herbalist made “a total of 168 marks” on the back, arms and chest of the witness by piercing with “one razor blade”. More than 200-300 fighters were marked in this way.<sup>9180</sup> TF1-375 testified that one of the Liberians was an SSS officer named Osebo Demy (a.k.a. 59), whom he came to know subsequently in Liberia as one of Yeaten’s subordinates in the SSS.<sup>9181</sup>

4076. After the markings, the fighters were ordered to re-attack Kono and, among the RUF, the witness had never seen such numbers die.<sup>9182</sup>

Prosecution Witness Samuel Kargbo

called Zopopeh in Liberian dialect, for the purpose of warding off bullets. The Zopopeh then went to do the same to fighters in Kono. Kargbo told the court that Bockarie left one evening to travel towards the Liberian border area and returned with the men the following evening, “within 48 hours”. Kargbo was marked on his shoulders, both sides of his chest and the back by cutting with a razor blade, then a medicine, “a black thing”, was rubbed into the cuts. The Zopopeh also imposed “laws” on those marked that they must not have sex or eat certain foods for seven days.<sup>9187</sup> He testified that after the herbalists had performed their rites, bullets were fired at the fighters but did not touch them and the weapon was damaged.<sup>9188</sup> The herbalists then went to Kono and did the same there.<sup>9189</sup>

Prosecution Witness Komba Sumana

4078. Witness Komba Sumana, a former RUF child soldier,<sup>9190</sup> testified to seeing a traditional priest, otherwise called a medicine man or juju man, called Pa Demba, a member of the RUF, in Magburaka during the infighting between Issa Sesay and Superman after the Freetown Invasion. Demba had been brought to mediate between Superman and Sesay and “they came together again”.<sup>9191</sup> He had also seen a medicine man previously in Kono. The men used to mark people by making cuts on their upper arms, chests and backs to protect them against bullets. Sumana refused to undergo the cutting because he saw blood oozing on those who had been cut and was afraid.<sup>9192</sup>

Prosecution Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay

4079. Witness Alimamy Bobson Sesay testified that during an attack on a village in Koinadugu District in June or July or July to August 1998, they captured a juju man called Tamba Sewa who promised to help the troops by making charms that “will disable the enemy from attacking us” if Gullit did not kill him. He prepared charms for the troops to wrap around their arms.<sup>9193</sup>

<sup>9185</sup> The witness stated that the men were speaking with Liberian dialects but that he did not “get too much conversation with them”.

The Accused

4080. The Accused denied sending herbalists “any place to go and do anything”. He testified that he did not believe in juju, nor was he exploiting existing superstitions in Sierra Leone by sending herbalists to protect fighters. If he had, he stated, he would have used herbalists on his own men during the NPFL days, which he did not. He confirmed that, to his knowledge, the Gbandis, Kissis, Lomas, Mendes and Temnes were superstitious and used herbalists, suggesting that someone may have brought someone. Furthermore, he expressed doubt regarding Alice Pyne’s testimony on the basis that women were not typically allowed to attend ceremonies in the zoebush.<sup>9194</sup>

Defence Witness John Vincent

4081. Witness John Vincent, an RUF member,<sup>9195</sup> testified that he was based in Kono at the time Superman led an unsuccessful attack there.<sup>9196</sup> When Alice Pyne’s testimony was put to Vincent, he confirmed that the RUF used herbalists at times during the conflict, but he said he had never heard of Taylor sending herbalists to the RUF to protect their fighters. He could not, however, speak of the particular group of herbalists from Liberia described by Pyne, except to say that he did not know about them and had not heard about them.<sup>9197</sup> On cross-examination, the witness described the testimonies of Alice Pyne, Perry Kamara, Komba Sumana and Charles Ngebeh about Liberian herbalists and/or juju men marking fighters before the attack on Kono as “lies” and stated that he did not see a medicine man or a juju man sent by Taylor.<sup>9198</sup>

Although the witness testified that, since Fitti-Fatta meant “we would have taken...got everything at our disposal” he did think this was the “Fitti-Fatta” mission, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the event he describes, an unsuccessful attack on Kono in 1998 before Superman moved to Kabala, is the same event that other witnesses have described as “Fitti-Fatta”.

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

4082. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>9199</sup> denied that Taylor sent herbalists to Sierra Leone before the Fitti-Fatta mission. The herbalists (two men and a woman) who marked the fighters' bodies and rubbed in a "poultice" for the Fitti-Fatta mission came to Buedu at Sam Bockarie's request with a Liberian ULIMO man from Loma named Titus, a friend of Bockarie's and a relation of Augustine Mulbah, one of the Vanguarders. When they had protected the people in Buedu, Bockarie sent them with Superman to go to the attack in Kono.<sup>9200</sup> Sesay acknowledged that the RUF had never experienced the "kind" of casualties that they suffered in the Fitti-Fatta mission but attributed this to the fact that there was not sufficient ammunition for the attack, it was not organised properly.<sup>9201</sup>

Defence Witness Charles Ngebeh

4083. Witness Charles Ngebeh, an RUF armourer,<sup>9202</sup> testified that in the initial stages of the war, for example in Baiima, Kailahun in 1991, family members used to protect fighters against bullets by marking the body or embalming or "smoking". Furthermore, he stated that in 1998, another group was brought by Sam Bockarie "from Liberia, from the ULIMO side" to protect the troops against bullets. They marked the witness on his chest, arms and back using a razor blade, making many marks. Ngebeh called this process "embalming". The witness explained that some fighters believed in the protection, although he personally did not. Moreover, he said he saw bullets fired at those who had been "embalmed" but they were not protected.<sup>9203</sup>

Deliberations

4084. It is undisputed by the parties<sup>9204</sup> that in preparation for the Fitti-Fatta mission in mid-1998, 'herbalists' marked fighters in Buedu and then Kono in order to 'protect' them against bullets, to which most of the Prosecution and Defence witnesses cited above testified. Although Witnesses Komba Sumana and Charles Ngebeh testified to the presence of herbalists in 1998, the Trial Chamber did not find their testimonies detailed enough to determine conclusively that they were referring to the herbalists sent before the Fitti-Fatta mission. Although Defence Witness John Vincent testified that the RUF used herbalists at times during the conflict, he said he had not heard about the particular group of herbalists from Liberia who came to mark the fighters prior to Fitti-Fatta.<sup>9205</sup> On cross-examination, Vincent described the testimony of the Prosecution witnesses about these herbalists as “lies”,<sup>9206</sup> but the Trial Chamber notes that his evidence is contradicted by the testimony of Defence Witness Issa Sesay who testified that herbalists came from Liberia to mark the Fitti-Fatta fighters.<sup>9207</sup> The Trial Chamber considers that Vincent’s demeanour while giving this evidence undermined his credibility on that issue. Moreover, the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the testimony of John Vincent must be treated with caution and corroborated.<sup>9208</sup> The Trial Chamber finds that the herbalists came from Liberia and marked the fighters to protect them in Operation Fitti-Fatta. At issue is what involvement, if any, the Accused had in the provision of these herbalists.

4085. The Defence highlights the predominance of hearsay evidence supporting the Prosecution’s allegation that the herbalists were sent by the Accused. The Trial Chamber recognises that the evidence relied on by the Prosecution is hearsay but considers that this is explicable by the fact that the witnesses who testified were members of the RUF/AFRC present in Buedu and/or Kono when the herbalists arrived. They would not conceivably have been present when the Accused would allegedly have made the requisite arrangements. The Trial Chamber considers the lack of direct evidence to be a natural consequence of these circumstances and does not preclude a finding on the basis of hearsay evidence that is substantially corroborated. The Trial Chamber places weight on the fact that each of the witnesses who testified was told about the Accused’s involvement from different sources.

4086. Two witnesses relied on by the Prosecution, Alice Pyne and Perry Kamara, testified that they had heard from Sam Bockarie (in Kamara’s case) or from a Liberian woman who accompanied the herbalists (in Pyne's case) that herbalist(s) used in Buedu and Superman Ground in Kono had been sent by the Accused. The Trial Chamber recalls its findings that Perry Kamara<sup>9209</sup> and Alice Pyne<sup>9210</sup> are generally credible witnesses. Prosecution Witnesses Samuel Kargbo and TF1-375 did not confirm or deny any association of the Accused with the herbalists, although aspects of their testimony corroborate the testimony of the other Prosecution witnesses on the time, place, and procedures adopted by the herbalists. TF1-375 testified that the herbalists said that they had done the same during "the NPFL time under Taylor",<sup>9211</sup> and that the witness subsequently came to know one of the eight men as one of Yeaten's SSS subordinates,<sup>9212</sup> therefore someone who worked for the Accused.

4087. The Defence challenges Alice Pyne's testimony on the basis that in her prior statements she had not mentioned the Accused as having sent the herbalists to Bockarie, saying they had been hired by Bockarie.<sup>9213</sup> The Trial Chamber has reviewed Pyne's testimony and notes that she told the Prosecution in her fourth interview, which was three months, not 10 days as alleged by the Defence, before her testimony that the Accused had sent the herbalists.<sup>9214</sup> In her first interview, she stated that "the traditional herbalists were hired by Sam Bockarie".<sup>9215</sup> Pyne testified that "hired" was the investigator's wording and that she had only told him that Bockarie had introduced the herbalists to Superman.<sup>9216</sup> The Trial Chamber accepts Pyne's explanation that she omitted to mention the Accused in the absence of any direct questions from investigators as to who sent the herbalists<sup>9217</sup> and is of the view that in the absence of any mention of the Accused on Pyne's part at her first interview, it is reasonable that the investigator misconstrued her statement.

4088. The Defence relies on the evidence of Issa Sesay and John Vincent to rebut the testimony of the Prosecution witnesses.<sup>9218</sup> In view of John Vincent's denial of any knowledge that Liberian herbalists were present in Kono before the Fitti-Fatta mission, the Trial Chamber considers his denial of the Accused's involvement to be of little value. Moreover, his evidence that he never heard about the Accused providing herbalists is not in itself dispositive or preclusive of such involvement. The clear agitation shown by the witness during his cross-examination on the subject also undermined his credibility on this issue. Moreover, the Trial Chamber recalls its finding that Vincent's evidence must be considered with caution.<sup>9219</sup> Issa Sesay denied that the Accused sent the herbalists, saying that Bockarie hired the herbalists through a friend named Titus, who was also a relative of one of the RUF vanguards, Major Augustine Mulbah.<sup>9220</sup> In view of its earlier finding that Sesay's evidence should be treated with caution, the Trial Chamber does not accept this uncorroborated testimony.<sup>9221</sup>

4089. The Accused denied sending herbalists "any place to go and do anything",<sup>9222</sup> citing the prevalence of such superstitions in a number of areas of Liberia, presumably suggesting that Liberian herbalists were widely available and need not therefore have been provided by him. The Trial Chamber notes that his evidence of the prevalence of people practised in such rites does not impact upon whether he made the alleged arrangements. The Accused challenged Pyne's evidence through his assertion that women were not allowed at ceremonies in the zoebush. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that Defence witness Issa Sesay testified that one of the three herbalists who came to mark the fighters in Buedu was a woman.<sup>9223</sup> Sesay also testified that women, such as fighters' wives, would indeed be found in the zoebush region.<sup>9224</sup> The Trial Chamber therefore finds the Accused's challenge to Pyne's evidence to be without foundation.

4090. The Trial Chamber does not find the Accused's disbelief in the powers of herbalists and juju men to be relevant in determining whether he sent these herbalists to perform rites on fighters in preparation for the attack. Several witnesses have testified that the RUF used such individuals throughout the conflict<sup>9225</sup> on the basis that the fighters believed in their powers.<sup>9226</sup> The Accused need not have believed in the effectiveness or otherwise of the herbalists' rites to exploit beliefs held by the fighters.

4091. The Defence also submits that the fact that the RUF used herbalists and juju men before the Accused allegedly sent the herbalists from Liberia means that there would have been no need for the Accused's involvement.<sup>9227</sup> As referred to in the preceding paragraph, the Trial Chamber recognises that the RUF had used herbalists and juju men to 'protect' or at least encourage fighters before their alleged use in the Fitti-Fatta operation. The Trial Chamber considers, however, that such prior use does not preclude and is not inconsistent with assistance by the Accused in the provision of this support.

4092. With regard to the impact of the rites performed by the herbalists, the Prosecution does not assert that the markings provided real protection against bullets during the Fitti-Fatta attack but that it was intended to "bolster the courage of AFRC/RUF fighters before the Fitti-Fatta mission".<sup>9228</sup> The Trial Chamber has heard evidence from Perry Kamara and Charles Ngebeh that some fighters believed in the herbalists' powers<sup>9229</sup> and Samuel Kargbo himself testified that he saw their protective effects at first hand.<sup>9230</sup> While it is difficult to measure the impact of these rituals on the fighters whom they were intended to support, this evidence does establish, in the view of the Trial Chamber, that the provision of the herbalists and the rites they performed did bolster some fighters' confidence, as intended. Prosecution Witness Kamara and Defence Witness Sesay both testified to the heavy losses that the RUF incurred in the Fitti-Fatta operation and the belief of many fighters that they were invincible.

4093. The Accused testified that he was aware of the existence of such rituals and practices and of the widely held belief that herbalists or juju men had power to render people immune from danger. Whilst there may have been herbalists and juju men coming to the RUF from time to time, the Trial Chamber accepts the evidence of the Prosecution witnesses that the herbalists who came to Buedu and Kono before Operation Fitti-Fatta were sent by the Accused.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Findings

Bunumbu Training Camp

Submissions of the Parties

4095. The Prosecution alleges that in mid-1998, the Accused instructed Bockarie to open a training base called “Camp Lion” in Bunumbu, Kailahun District and instructed that 62 former SLA soldiers were to be trained there. In support of this allegation, the Prosecution relies on the evidence of TF1-362.<sup>9231</sup>

4096. The Defence challenges the credibility of TF1-362 and submits that her account defies logic. The Defence maintains that the Accused had no involvement in the creation of the RUF base. The Defence also points out contradictions between TF1-362’s hearsay evidence and the testimonies of TF1-516 and Issa Sesay.<sup>9232</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-362

4097. Witness TF1-362, an RUF member,<sup>9233</sup> testified that after the attack on Freetown in 1998, Monica Pearson was instructed by Issa Sesay to report to Sam Bockarie who was based in Buedu. There, Bockarie informed Pearson, in the presence of the witness, that Taylor had instructed the RUF to set up a training base at Bunumbu, in Kailahun District. Following these instructions, the training base at Bunumbu was opened. This base was also named Camp Lion.<sup>9234</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4098. TF1-362 testified that military training was provided at the base to between 100 and 200 civilians captured on the way from Freetown.<sup>9235</sup> The “recruits” were divided into five platoons: SBU, SGU, adult, old age, and WACs. Women were forced to undergo military training and were subsequently sent to the front lines to provide sexual services to the men.<sup>9236</sup> Military training of civilian captives would last from two to three weeks up to six months after which they were sent to the front line.<sup>9237</sup>

4099. TF1-362 stated that, in addition to civilians, Monica Pearson was instructed by Issa Sesay to train 62 SLAs. Sesay said that Sam Bockarie had told him that Taylor requested the RUF to train the SLAs in order to open a road to the border between Sierra Leone and Gbarnga. At the time, only helicopters could reach Sierra Leone from Liberia. TF1-362 said the SLAs were trained for one to two weeks after which Issa Sesay arrived at Bunumbu with a group of Liberian ATU bodyguards, a special unit allegedly under Taylor, which brought rice and cooking equipment for the RUF troops. Sesay also gave Monica Pearson some rice and ammunition and informed her that Taylor had thanked her for her work.<sup>9238</sup>

4100. TF1-362 described the command structure in Bunumbu as essentially the same as it had been at Matru Jong.<sup>9239</sup> David Kanneh was the Blackguard assigned by Sam Bockarie to Bunumbu base. Bockarie also appointed the training instructors.<sup>9240</sup> The Blackguard at Bunumbu reported directly to Sam Bockarie while Monica Pearson reported to Issa Sesay.<sup>9241</sup>

4101. While the witness was based at Bunumbu, they received weapons and ammunition from an ammunition dump that was located at Sam Bockarie’s house in Buedu. Bockarie told her that he received these arms and ammunition from Taylor.<sup>9242</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4102. Witness TF1-516, an RUF radio operator,<sup>9243</sup> testified that after the Freetown attack, when the AFRC/RUF retreated from Freetown in 1999, many AFRC/RUF fighters crossed the border to take refuge in Liberia, creating a shortage of manpower for the RUF. Bockarie travelled to Liberia and discussed with Benjamin Yeaten the possibility of tightening up the borders to prevent armed AFRC/RUF men from entering Liberia. Yeaten commanded Bockarie to open a training base to recruits civilians. Following this request, Bockarie set up a training base at Bunumbu.<sup>9244</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

4103. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander,<sup>9245</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>9246</sup> testified that in March 1998, Bockarie called Monica Pearson to Kailahun and he appointed her deputy training commandant at the training base called Camp Lion in Bunumbu under the command of Jah Glory. In April 1998, Jah Glory was shot dead and Pearson was appointed as training commandant of the base until February 1999 when the base was transferred to Kono.<sup>9247</sup> As such, Pearson was reporting directly to Sam Bockarie.<sup>9248</sup>

4104. According to Issa Sesay, TF1-362 lied when she said that Taylor ordered the opening of Bunumbu. Bockarie instructed him to send 15 to 20 SLAs, who had fled to Liberia after the ECOMOG attack on Daru, to Bunumbu training base in order to be trained for two weeks. These SLA soldiers had not been engaged in combat for a long time and Bockarie wanted them to be trained again before being sent to the front line.<sup>9249</sup>

Deliberations

4105. It is undisputed that in 1998 an RUF training base called "Camp Lion" was set up in Bunumbu.<sup>9250</sup> The Prosecution, relying on the testimony of TF1-362, alleges that the Accused instructed Sam Bockarie to open the training base Camp Lion in Bunumbu and instructed him to train 62 former SLA soldiers there.<sup>9251</sup> The Defence contends that the Accused had no involvement in the creation of the RUF base and submits that TF1-362's testimony lacks credibility.<sup>9252</sup>

4106. TF1-362 is the sole witness who testified regarding the Accused's direct involvement in the creation of the Bunumbu training camp in 1998 and the training of 62 SLAs, and her testimony is hearsay, based on Bockarie's statement that the Accused asked the RUF to train the SLAs and based on a message of thanks to Monica Pearson from the Accused, transmitted by Issa Sesay. The Trial Chamber recalls its previous finding that TF1-362 is a generally credible witness.<sup>9253</sup> Sesay denied that the Accused ordered the opening of the training camp, and the Defence also cites the evidence of TF1-516 as "directly contradict[ing]" the evidence of TF1-362.

4108. The Trial Chamber recalls its finding that the testimony of Issa Sesay must be treated with caution and corroborated.<sup>9254</sup> His denial of the involvement of the Accused is not corroborated by other evidence, and the Trial Chamber does not accept it as credible.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4109. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused instructed Sam Bockarie to open a training base in Bunumbu, Kailahun District.

Training in the Use of Missile GunSubmissions of the Parties

4110. The Prosecution alleges that at the end of December 1998, at Sam Bockarie's request, Taylor sent Martina Johnson, a former NPFL artillery commander, to Buedu to conduct training to use a 40-barrel missile captured by Issa Sesay.<sup>9255</sup>

4111. The Defence submits that assistance in using a weapon in attacks against a lawful army cannot be considered as a crime.<sup>9256</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness TF1-371

4112. Witness TF1-371, an RUF officer, testified that in December 1998, Taylor's former NPFL artillery commander, Martina Johnson, came to Buedu at Sam Bockarie's request to train the RUF fighters in the use of a 40-barrel missile gun which had been captured by Issa Sesay in Kono District. According to TF1-371, the RUF never used the gun because it was technically very difficult to operate.<sup>9257</sup>

Prosecution Witness Albert Saidu

4113. Witness Albert Saidu, an RUF adjutant from 1991 to 2001,<sup>9258</sup> testified that Gibril Massaquoi and others captured a 40 barrel missile gun from Guinean troops along the Kambia border in late 1996 or early 1997, prior to the AFRC coup. The RUF concealed the missile gun in a truck in the jungle alongside the river bank at Manowa crossing point until after the Intervention.<sup>9259</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4114. After the Intervention in 1998, several engineers came from Liberia to repair the missile gun so that it could be utilised by the RUF. Saidu was told by the RUF artillery unit that the RUF was planning to use the missile against the government of Sierra Leone but that none of the RUF fighters was trained in order to use the missile. The unit explained that a woman named Martina, from Taylor's government, would come to use the weapon once it was repaired.<sup>9260</sup>

4115. Saidu stated that before the repairs were completed, a helicopter gunship came from the government and bombarded the area. The missile gun was seriously damaged and the weapon repair was abandoned. Saidu observed the damaged missile when passing by the riverbank after the helicopter attack.<sup>9261</sup>

4116. Witness Moses Blah, Inspector General of the NPFL from 1990 to 1997,<sup>9262</sup> Liberian Ambassador to Libya and Tunisia following Taylor's election until 2000,<sup>9263</sup> and Vice-President of Liberia from 2000 to 2003,<sup>9264</sup> testified that Martina Johnson was an NPFL commander of the artillery unit who was heading the missiles group.<sup>9265</sup>

Prosecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif

4117. Witness Varmuyan Sherif, a former ULIMO-K fighter who became an officer in the SSS,<sup>9266</sup> testified that Martina Johnson, a junior commando of the NPFL, was a terrorist who headed the artillery unit.<sup>9267</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4118. Witness Charles Ngebeh, an RUF armourer,<sup>9268</sup> testified that the RUF captured a 40-barrel missile gun from Guinean troops around Waterloo in January 1999. Sam Bockarie ordered that the gun be brought to him in Kailahun. Ngebeh was able to bring the missile gun as far as the Manowa Ferry, but the ferry was in such poor condition that the gun could not be moved across the river. Eventually, an ECOMOG jet bombed the gun and destroyed its barrels, and the Guineans returned to take the gun away.<sup>9269</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

4119. Witness Issa Sesay, a senior RUF commander<sup>9270</sup> and interim leader of the RUF from 2000 until disarmament in 2002,<sup>9271</sup> testified that in 1998 the Guineans crossed over into Yenga and Mofindor in the Kailahun District and they crossed into Kono at Kombeyendeh, but the RUF repelled them. During these attacks, Rambo managed to go into Guinea and captured a 40-barrel missile gun. However, in late 2000/early 2001 the Guineans began shelling at the border and attacking RUF positions.<sup>9272</sup>

Defence Exhibit D-084

4120. Exhibit D-084 is a salute report from Issa Sesay, dated 27 September 1999. In this report, Sesay explained that his bodyguard commander led a squad of men in an ambush against the Guinean troops. During this ambush, the squad captured a 40-barrel missile that Sankoh escorted to the RUF rear.<sup>9273</sup>

Prosecution Exhibit P-379

4121. Exhibit P-379 is a report on the visit of Foday Sankoh to Makeni in November 1999. The report mentions the disarmament on 18 November 1999 of a 40 barrel missile gun which was captured by the RUF from the Guinean ECOMOG around the Kambia Axis.<sup>9274</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Deliberations

4122. The evidence clearly establishes that around 1998 or 1999, the RUF captured a 40-barrel missile gun from the Guinean ECOMOG troops along the Kambia border.<sup>9275</sup>

4123. Prosecution Witness TF1-371 testified that at the end of December 1998, at Sam Bockarie's request, the Accused sent Martina Johnson to conduct training to use a 40-barrel missile captured by Issa Sesay.<sup>9276</sup> Albert Saidu also heard that a woman named Martina, from Taylor's government, would come to use the weapon once it was repaired but testified that the missile was never repaired because a bombardment seriously damaged the missile.<sup>9277</sup> Charles Ngebeh also testified that an ECOMOG jet bombed the gun and destroyed its barrels.<sup>9278</sup> Several witnesses testified as to Martina Johnson's role in the NPFL but made no reference to the allegation that she came to train the RUF to use a 40-barrel missile.

4124. TF1-371's evidence about the training was brief, totalling ten lines of transcript within eight days of testimony. Furthermore, while he testified that Taylor sent Martina Johnson, it is not clear from his evidence what the source of his information was. His testimony is inconsistent with the testimony of Saidu that a woman named Martina was to come when the missile was repaired but that the missile was never repaired. Saidu testified that several engineers came from Liberia to repair the missile, which TF1-371 did not mention in his testimony.

4125. In light of these inconsistencies, the Trial Chamber finds the evidence insufficient to support a finding beyond reasonable doubt that, at the end of December 1998, at Bockarie's request, the Accused sent Martina Johnson in order to conduct training to use a 40-barrel missile gun captured by Issa Sesay.

Findings

4126. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that at the end of December 1998, the Accused sent Martina Johnson, a former NPFL artillery commander, to Buedu to train RUF fighters to use a 40-barrel missile gun.

Order to Build an Airfield in BueduSubmissions of the Parties

4127. The Prosecution alleges that in 1996, before the signing of the Abidjan Peace Accord, the Accused sent a message to Foday Sankoh telling him to choose a particular area where they should construct an airstrip. After Sankoh received that message, he appointed Peter B. Vandi to be in charge of constructing the airfield in a village close to Buedu. He told Vandi to use civilians and to work day and night to complete the construction. Civilians did work there day and night.<sup>9279</sup>

4128. The Prosecution alleges that after the Intervention, the Accused reiterated to Sam Bockarie the need for a functional airstrip in AFRC/RUF territory. At a meeting convened by Bockarie, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) and General Ibrahim Bah spoke on behalf of the Accused. Jungle said that the AFRC/RUF should try to construct the airstrip at Buedu as fast as possible. Bockarie then transmitted a message that the Accused said the AFRC/RUF should try and reorganize and re-prepare the airfield at Buedu.<sup>9280</sup>

4129. The Defence submits that the Prosecution allegation is confused. Furthermore, it challenges Perry Kamara's credibility and submits that his uncorroborated testimony is discredited by another Prosecution witness. The Defence maintains that the Accused was not involved in the construction of the airstrip in any way.<sup>9281</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4130. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution's allegation regarding the construction of an airfield in Buedu in 1996 is confused with its allegation regarding the construction of an airfield in Buedu in 1998. The Prosecution cites the testimony of Abu Keita, Isaac Mongor and Witnesses TF1-585 and TF1-371 in support of its 1996 allegation.<sup>9282</sup> Similarly, the Defence submits in its closing brief that the evidence of Mohamed Kabbah discredits the Prosecution allegation.<sup>9283</sup> However, a careful reading of their evidence indicates that these five witnesses were testifying about the re-construction of the Buedu airfield in late 1998<sup>9284</sup> and not about the initial building of the airfield around 1996.<sup>9285</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness Perry Kamara

4131. Witness Perry Kamara, an RUF radio operator,<sup>9286</sup> testified that following the capture of Sierra Rutile, Foday Sankoh received a written message from Taylor saying that the RUF should make arrangements to construct an airfield where planes could land. Sankoh sent the message to Kailahun and appointed Peter B. Vandi to work with civilians day and night in order to construct the airfield at a village close to Buedu.<sup>9287</sup>

4132. Kamara later testified that after the attack on Koidu Town, following the Intervention, Sam Bockarie transmitted a message. According to the witness, "He said Mr Taylor has told him that they should try and reorganise and re-prepare the airfield at Buedu, so in there they would need civilians to do the work on the field". The RUF then sent over 200 to 300 civilians to do forced labour, to work on the field day and night with security escorts.<sup>9288</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-168

4133. Witness TF1-168, an RUF member,<sup>9289</sup> testified that around November 1996, while he was visiting Côte d'Ivoire, Sankoh wrote a letter in which he ordered Sam Bockarie to prepare an airstrip in Buedu for delivery of goods. TF1-168 testified that he personally saw the airstrip constructed.<sup>9290</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

4134. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>9291</sup> was in Buedu, Kailahun District from March 1998 until April 1999. He testified that civilians there were harassed by RUF soldiers, were forced to work for the RUF and were used to carry food, arms and ammunition for RUF combatants. TF1-371 also testified that civilians were used to construct an airfield in Buedu.<sup>9292</sup>

Prosecution Witness Albert Saidu

4135. Witness Albert Saidu, an RUF adjutant from 1991 to 2001,<sup>9293</sup> testified that in late 1998<sup>9294</sup> he attended a secret meeting convened by Sam Bockarie, which took place between Buedu and Dawa. CO Jungle and General Ibrahim, two representatives of Taylor's Government participated in the meeting. Superman, CO Augustine Gbao and Issa Sesay also attended the meeting. Saidu testified that the agenda of the meeting was to address the pressure of ECOMOG and CDF on the AFRC/RUF forces, and the loss by Sesay of the diamonds that Bockarie gave him for Taylor and the consequences of his loss on the RUF's ability to purchase arms and ammunition.<sup>9295</sup> After Bockarie's introduction, CO Jungle took the floor explaining that Taylor recognized the RUF/AFRC relationship and supported it. Jungle also said he encouraged the RUF to recapture Kono, the diamond mining area, to exchange diamonds for weapons. Finally, they discussed the maintenance of an airstrip they were trying to construct behind Buedu. Jungle said they should try to construct the airstrip as soon as possible for emergency landing of aircraft to deliver the materials.<sup>9296</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-585

4136. Witness TF1-585, an RUF radio operator,<sup>9297</sup> testified that while Bockarie was absent from Buedu, Bockarie's wife told TF1-585 that he was at Taylor's farm to discuss the construction of an airfield, because the transportation of arms and ammunition through Monrovia and overland to Buedu was time-consuming.<sup>9298</sup>

Prosecution Witness Abu Keita

4137. Witness Abu Keita, a former deputy chief of staff and commander of ULIMO-K who later became commander of the Scorpion Unit,<sup>9299</sup> testified that after his arrest and his detention around September 1998,<sup>9300</sup> he was released and sent by Benjamin Yeaten to Sierra Leone.<sup>9301</sup> There, Keita travelled to Foya, where he met with Issa Sesay. Keita subsequently moved to Buedu together with Sesay.<sup>9302</sup> While in Buedu, Sesay showed the witness a site where the RUF was constructing an airstrip in order to receive supplies by air.<sup>9303</sup> Keita testified that because jets used to bomb the site during the day, the RUF had to construct the strip at night. The RUF used unpaid civilian workers to build the airstrip.<sup>9304</sup>

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Prosecution Witness Mohamed Kabbah

4138. Witness Mohamed Kabbah, an RUF officer,<sup>9305</sup> testified that about a month after he arrived in Buedu, he attended a meeting at which Sam Bockarie discussed the construction of an airstrip near Buedu.<sup>9306</sup> The meeting was attended by hundreds of people including Issa Sesay, Denis Mingo, Eagle, King Perry, Zedman and AFRC members. During the meeting Bockarie emphasized the importance of building the airstrip close to Buedu in order to allow the RUF to receive its ammunition directly from Libya, rather than it being landed in Monrovia and brought overland to Buedu, as was the case. Kabbah stated that the airstrip was constructed by civilians but never used by any plane.<sup>9307</sup>

Prosecution Witness Isaac Mongor

4139. Witness Isaac Mongor, an RUF front line commander,<sup>9308</sup> testified that the RUF used civilians to work in mines, in farms or to carry ammunitions. They were forced to work and were not paid in exchange. Isaac Mongor himself used these civilians to build him a hut. Isaac Mongor further testified that Sam Bockarie used these civilians in order to prepare an airfield in Buedu. The civilians working there did not receive any payment.<sup>9309</sup>

The Accused

4140. The Accused testified that he had no contacts with Foday Sankoh after Operation Top Final in around May 1992.<sup>9310</sup> He denied having given any advice to Sankoh. More specifically, the Accused denied having advised Sankoh to construct any airfield arguing that since he had no planes in Liberia he had absolutely no reason to advise Sankoh to do so.<sup>9311</sup>

4141. The Accused denied having sent Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) or General Ibrahim Bah to the RUF, and denied advising the RUF to build an airstrip.<sup>9312</sup>

Defence Witness Issa Sesay

4142. Witness Issa Sesay, an RUF commander,<sup>9313</sup> testified that he was in Zogoda when he heard from the RUF Commander in Buedu, Big Daddy, and from Peter Vandi, that in May 1996, while in Burkina Faso, Foday Sankoh sent Peter Vandi back to Buedu in order to start the construction of an airstrip. Sesay further heard that around June or July 1996, Sankoh sent two Belgian nationals with Steve Kamanda, a radio operator, to inspect the airfield. However, the airstrip was not completed since they told Vandi to stop the construction.<sup>9314</sup>

Defence Witness Charles Ngebeh

4143. Witness Charles Ngebeh, an RUF recruit,<sup>9315</sup> testified that at Buedu there was an airstrip. The airstrip had been constructed between 1995 and 1996 at the request of Sam Bockarie, who announced that he had a contract to receive arms and ammunition from Libya. The airstrip was never used to bring in any materials from Libya.<sup>9316</sup>

Deliberations

4144. It is undisputed that an airfield was constructed in Buedu, and both Prosecution and Defence witnesses testified that it was never used. The testimony falls into two time periods, 1996 and 1998.

4145. With regard to events in 1996, the Trial Chamber notes that Perry Kamara is the only witness who testified that the Accused told Foday Sankoh to construct an airfield. His testimony about the Accused's message was brief and unclear. Kamara did not indicate how he knew about the written message or whether or not he saw it. TF1-168, an RUF officer who visited Côte d'Ivoire at the time, testified that Sankoh was in Abidjan when he ordered

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

Sam Bockarie to build the airstrip in Buedu.<sup>9317</sup> Issa Sesay also heard that Sankoh was with the External Delegation when he ordered Vandi to build the airstrip.<sup>9318</sup> The Trial Chamber considers it is therefore very unlikely that Kamara, who was not in Côte d'Ivoire with Sankoh, was present when Sankoh would have received this written message and unlikely for the same reason that Kamara himself saw the message. TF1-168, who was in Côte d'Ivoire with Sankoh,<sup>9319</sup> did not mention the Accused's involvement when he testified about the construction of this airstrip.

4146. Without knowing the basis for Kamara's statement that Sankoh received a written message from the Accused, and the likelihood based on the circumstances that Kamara would not have seen this written message, while the evidence indicates that Sankoh ordered the building of the airstrip, the Trial Chamber is unable to conclude that the Accused told him to do so.

4147. The Prosecution also cites the testimony of Abu Keita, Isaac Mongor and Witnesses TF1-585 and TF1-371 in support of this 1996 allegation.<sup>9320</sup> Similarly, the Defence submits in its closing brief that the evidence of Mohamed Kabbah discredited this Prosecution allegation.<sup>9321</sup> However, a careful reading of their evidence indicates that these five witnesses were testifying about the re-construction of the Buedu airfield in late 1998<sup>9322</sup> and not about the initial building of the airfield around 1996.<sup>9323</sup> The Trial Chamber has therefore considered this evidence in the context of the allegations made in relation to 1998, for which the witnesses are again cited by the Prosecution.<sup>9324</sup> The Trial Chamber notes the evidence of Issa Sesay that the airfield was not completed in 1996.<sup>9325</sup>

4148. With regard to the allegation that after the Intervention in 1998, the Accused reiterated to Bockarie the need for a functional airstrip in AFRC/RUF territory, the Prosecution relies on the evidence of Albert Saidu, Perry Kamara and TF1-585. Saidu testified that at a meeting convened by Bockarie, Daniel Tamba (a.k.a. Jungle) spoke on behalf of Taylor and said that the AFRC/RUF should try to construct the airstrip at Buedu as fast as possible to be able to deliver arms and ammunition for the RUF.<sup>9326</sup> Kamara testified that Bockarie transmitted a message that Taylor had told him they should try to reorganize and re-prepare the airfield at Buedu.<sup>9327</sup> TF1-585 testified that Bockarie's wife told her that Bockarie was at Taylor's farm to discuss the construction of an airfield.<sup>9328</sup>

4149. Based on the testimony of these three Prosecution witnesses, all of whom the Trial Chamber has found to be generally credible<sup>9329</sup>, the Trial Chamber finds the denial of the Accused lacking in credibility. The testimony of the other Defence witnesses is not inconsistent with the evidence of the three Prosecution witnesses. The Defence contends that the evidence of Mohamed Kabbah discredits the evidence of the Prosecution witnesses. Kabbah cited Bockarie as saying that the airstrip would allow the RUF to receive ammunition directly from Libya. The Trial Chamber also notes the testimony of Charles Ngebeh that an airfield was constructed between 1995 and 1996 at the request of Bockarie, who said he had a contract to receive arms and ammunition from Libya. Based on this evidence, there may have been an intent to use the airfield for arms and ammunition to come directly from Libya, but in the view of the Trial Chamber an anticipated use of the airfield to receive arms and ammunition from Libya is not inconsistent with a need perceived by the Accused for an airfield to receive arms and ammunition from Liberia.

OPERATIONAL SUPPORT

4150. Both Saidu and Kamara testified that the Accused told Bockarie that the RUF should try to build an airfield. Kamara testified that he transmitted Bockarie's message in which Taylor told Bockarie that they should try to reorganise and re-prepare the airfield at Buedu, but it is unclear from his evidence whether it was Taylor or Bockarie who said that civilians would be needed to work on the field.<sup>9330</sup> In his account of the meeting, Saidu made no reference in Jungle's message on behalf of the Accused to the use of civilians for forced labour to construct the airfield.<sup>9331</sup> Moreover, in Kamara's testimony on the 1996 allegation, it is clear that the order to use civilians was not mentioned by Taylor but came from Sankoh. For these reasons, while finding that the Accused told Bockarie that the RUF should construct an airfield, the Trial Chamber is not satisfied that the Accused told Bockarie to use forced labour for this construction.

Findings

4151. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that in 1996 the Accused sent a message to Sankoh telling him to make arrangements to choose a place to construct an airfield.

4152. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that in 1998 the Accused told Bockarie that the RUF should construct or re-prepare the airfield in Buedu.

Provision of Safe Haven(a) Retreat from ZogodaSubmissions of the Parties

4153. The Prosecution alleges that the Accused nurtured, directed and protected the RUF in a myriad of vital ways including by providing safe haven to RUF/AFRC members. More specifically, after the RUF retreat from Zogoda, RUF fighters were forced to cross into Liberia. The Accused then ensured that Mike Lamin obtained Liberian travel documents and money to facilitate Lamin's travel across Liberia to Côte d'Ivoire to be reunited with Sankoh.<sup>9332</sup>

4154. The Defence submits that the evidence cited by the Prosecution alleging that after the retreat from Zogoda, when RUF fighters and Mike Lamin were pushed into Liberia, the Accused ensured the provision of Lamin's travel documents in Monrovia, is not credible.<sup>9333</sup>

EvidenceProsecution Witness TF1-371

4155. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>9334</sup> testified that when the Sierra Leonean Government forces attacked Zogoda, while peace talks were ongoing in approximately November or December 1996, Foday Sankoh sent a message by satellite phone to Mohamed Tarawalli telling him to retreat from Zogoda.<sup>9335</sup> Tarawalli was to take the fighters to Kailahun District to meet up with Sam Bockarie, and Mike Lamin was to take the rest of the fighters, approximately 2,000 of them, to Pujehun District. When Lamin arrived in Pujehun District, around Zimmi, he met with Michael Rogers, the commander of Pujehun, who told him that Pujehun was also under attack, that they were having problems getting ammunition, and that they were exhausted.<sup>9336</sup>

4156. Mike Lamin called Sankoh on the radio, who said to tell the commanders there to be patient because he had sent his adjutant Kposowa and Alfred Brown with $USD 42,000 to meet with Mr Taylor to see how the NPFL, then a political entity, could help with arms and ammunition. The group waited, but nothing was forthcoming. There was a large attack and they could not resist because they had run out of ammunition. Their only option, the witness testified, was to cross over into Liberia, and approximately 2,000 combatants and thousands of civilians crossed the border in the area near Kongo.<sup>9337</sup>

4157. After the combatants crossed over, the ULIMO rebel faction that was occupying the area was instructed by their commander to ensure that the RUF disarmed, and so they collected all of the RUF combatants' arms. The combatants were then moved to Bopolu and the witness stayed there for some time.<sup>9338</sup>

4158. In Bopolu, Mike Lamin met Abu Keita, the ULIMO commander in charge, who allowed him to use his radio to speak to Sankoh, who was in Abidjan.<sup>9339</sup> Lamin told Sankoh that he and the combatants were forced to cross into Liberia because they had no ammunition and none had arrived, and they were now disarmed and receiving assistance from the International Committee for the Red Cross. Sankoh instructed Lamin to try and meet him (Sankoh) in Abidjan.<sup>9340</sup>

4159. Witness TF1-362, an RUF member,<sup>9341</sup> testified that she was in Kenema District, reporting to Mohamed Tarawalli. After Foday Sankoh left for Abidjan, the Kamajors attacked. The witness was present when Sankoh sent an order by radio saying that "his brother", whom the witness testified was Taylor, said they should go to Liberia, "where they have the force for the people". Mohamed Tarawalli fled to the western jungle, and Mike Lamin went to the Pujehun area. When the witness, along with more than a thousand combatants, passed through the Liberian border, they arrived in the buffer zone, which was "not particular" to any fighting faction and was empty. ULIMO disarmed the combatants, and ECOMOG were within the area.<sup>9342</sup> The witness could not recall the names of all of the areas they passed through.<sup>9343</sup> She stated that she was pregnant at the time and exhausted.<sup>9344</sup>

4160. Witness Augustine Mallah, a security officer to Mike Lamin from 1996 to disarmament,<sup>9345</sup> testified that after Zogoda was overrun by the Sierra Leonean Government forces and the Kamajors, the RUF did not have enough ammunition to fight. CO Mohamed Zino contacted Foday Sankoh on the radio, and he ordered that the combatants in Zogoda be divided into two. CO Mohamed would take one group to Kailahun District, and the other group would be taken to Pujehun District. Mallah was with the group of approximately 800-900 combatants sent to Pujehun District with Mike Lamin.<sup>9346</sup>

4161. When they arrived in Pujehun, they met with the RUF soldiers stationed there under the command of Michael Rogers (a.k.a. Captain Bonday), who had also come under attack by the Kamajors and the Sierra Leonean Government forces. Mallah stated that he was standing next to Mike Lamin as he was talking on his radio to Sankoh, who was in Côte d'Ivoire. Sankoh told Lamin that he had sent Major Kposowa to Taylor in Gbarnga to ask if he could provide ammunition.<sup>9347</sup> They did not receive this ammunition and were continually attacked, and the only thing they could do was go to the border with Liberia and contact ULIMO.<sup>9348</sup>

4162. Lamin told Mallah and another commander to go to the border and contact the ULIMO commander so that the combatants, and the civilians with them, could cross into Liberia. He wanted ULIMO to rescue them, so that they could find a way to return.<sup>9349</sup> ULIMO disarmed all of the RUF fighters and civilians and took them to Bopolu, in Liberia, to stay there.<sup>9350</sup>

4163. Once they got to Bopolu, the ULIMO commander, General Charles Julu, gave Lamin access to his radio so that he could speak to Sankoh in Côte d'Ivoire.<sup>9351</sup> Lamin brought Mallah and a radio operator into the ULIMO communications room, where Sankoh told

Lamin to find a way to get to Monrovia so that he could meet him in Côte d'Ivoire. Lamin asked Mallah to accompany him to Monrovia.<sup>9352</sup>

4164. When they arrived at Dualla, Lamin told Mallah he was going to Congo Town to meet Taylor, because they did not have anywhere to get money and Taylor knew him. They drove to Taylor's office in Congo Town. Mallah stayed on the veranda with the security guards while Lamin entered the office. Approximately one hour later Lamin emerged with $USD 100, and said that he had spoken to Taylor. Lamin said that Taylor's Special Forces had given them a place to stay, at Jacob Tarawulu's (a.k.a. Pa Jacob) home, where they stayed for two days.<sup>9353</sup>

4165. Jacob Tarawulu was the Deputy Education Minister in the interim government, and the next day Lamin, his wife Jessica Robertson, and Mallah went to his office at the Education Ministry, and then to the Foreign Ministry. The three of them took photos, and returned to Tarawulu's home. The next day, they received Liberian laissez-passer. The day after this, Lamin hired a car to drive them from Monrovia to the Côte d'Ivoire border, at Loguatuo, and the three of them then went on to Danané and then Abidjan. They met with Sankoh for one week in Abidjan.<sup>9354</sup>

The Accused

4166. The Accused denied being in contact with Sankoh after the RUF retreated from Zogoda and denied using Musa Cissé as a conduit to keep in touch with Sankoh in Côte d'Ivoire.<sup>9355</sup> He conceded, however, that in 1996 Mike Lamin and the RUF ended up in Liberia and that the RUF was disarmed by ECOMOG and turned over to the International Committee for the Red Cross.<sup>9356</sup> The Accused also noted that at this time, he did not live in Congo Town but opposite the United States Embassy in Monrovia at Mamba Point.<sup>9357</sup> When the testimony of Augustine Mallah was put to him, he did not comment on the evidence relating to the crossing into Liberia after the fall of Zogoda and was not specifically questioned on Mallah's account of these events.<sup>9358</sup>

Deliberations

4168. TF1-362's testimony on this point, however, was inconsistent. The witness first testified that the retreat occurred when Sankoh went to the Abidjan Peace Accords "in 1994".<sup>9361</sup> When confronted with the judicially noted fact that Sankoh participated in the Abidjan Accords in 1996, not 1994, the witness stated that she could not be sure of the facts because it had "been a very long time now". She then said that Mohamed Tarawalli told her that Sankoh went to a peace accord, but she could not recall a year.<sup>9362</sup> The witness also stated that the International Committee for the Red Cross was not present when the RUF crossed into Liberia or could not recall them,<sup>9363</sup> in contrast to TF1-371 and the Accused, who testified that they were present.<sup>9364</sup> The Trial Chamber notes that TF1-362 was "exhausted" during this time and accepts that she may not have taken note of events clearly as a result.

4169. In addition, TF1-362's testimony is unclear as to whether the Accused actually directed the RUF to retreat to Liberia or simply suggested this or allowed the RUF to cross the Liberian border. The witness first testified that Sankoh told her that Taylor said the RUF “should go to Liberia”.<sup>9365</sup> When asked upon cross-examination whether the RUF retreated because of an order from Taylor the witness first responded “Yes”, and then stated that it was “not directly because of [Taylor’s] order”, but because they were under attack and had no place to remain, and thus “the Pa allowed us to go through Liberia”.<sup>9366</sup> The witness then reiterated that Sankoh said that because there was nowhere for the RUF to base, “My brother has allowed you to go to Liberia and base there until the area is cleared up”.<sup>9367</sup>

4170. TF1-371 testified that Mike Lamin told Sankoh that he and the combatants retreated to Liberia only after they had crossed the border.<sup>9368</sup> TF1-371 testified that the RUF crossed into Liberia not on Taylor’s orders, but only after they had no other choice.<sup>9369</sup> The Trial Chamber recalls that TF1-371 is a generally credible witness.<sup>9370</sup>

4171. In light of the evidence of TF1-371, which is inconsistent with the vague and unclear evidence of TF1-362, the Trial Chamber cannot say that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused ordered the RUF to retreat to Liberia, although it is clear that he did provide them safe haven by allowing them into Liberia. The Trial Chamber notes that Taylor has conceded, and several witnesses confirmed, that once the RUF combatants crossed into Liberia they were disarmed by ULIMO, and subsequently serviced by the International Committee for the Red Cross.<sup>9371</sup>

4172. With regard to the allegation that the Accused facilitated the provision of Mike Lamin’s travel documents in Monrovia, Prosecution Witness Augustine Mallah is the only witness whose testimony supports this allegation. Mallah testified that when he and Lamin arrived in Monrovia, Lamin told Mallah that he was going to meet Taylor because they did not have money. Mallah stated that they visited Taylor’s office in Congo Town, although he did not go in with Lamin and he did not see Taylor himself.<sup>9372</sup> In a prior statement Mallah said that he saw Taylor from the veranda as he waited for Lamin.<sup>9373</sup> When confronted with this statement on cross-examination, Mallah conceded that the statement was inconsistent with his testimony and suggested that this was an interpreter's mistake. He also said that in 2003 his questioning was focused on the AFRC and RUF trials, and not on Taylor.<sup>9374</sup> The Trial Chamber accepts Mallah's affirmation of his testimony and the possibility that there was a mistake in interpretation, and finds that his prior statement does not undermine the credibility of his testimony.

4173. Mallah testified that Lamin exited Taylor's office with $USD 100. He could not confirm first-hand that it was Taylor who provided these funds, but he said that Lamin told him he had spoken to Taylor and he clearly inferred that the funds came from Taylor.<sup>9375</sup> The Trial Chamber finds this to be a reasonable inference. Mallah also stated that Taylor's Special Forces provided him and Lamin with a place to stay,<sup>9376</sup> which the Trial Chamber considers can also be attributed to the Accused's facilitation. The Trial Chamber notes the Accused's testimony that at this time his residence was not in Congo Town, but finds this fact is not dispositive because Mallah testified that they went to Taylor's office in Congo Town, not Taylor's residence.<sup>9377</sup>

4174. Finally, Mallah stated that he and Lamin visited the Liberian Education and Foreign Ministries and Lamin later received a laissez-passer, but he did not clearly indicate Taylor's involvement in securing this documentation.<sup>9378</sup> Upon cross-examination, Mallah conceded that Taylor was not yet the President of Liberia at the time he visited Monrovia with Lamin.<sup>9379</sup> The Prosecution has not provided evidence linking the laissez-passer for Mike Lamin, which he got from the Foreign Ministry, to the Accused, who had not yet assumed office and was therefore not in control of this or any government ministry. In light of these circumstances, the Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to establish that the Accused facilitated Lamin's travel to the Côte d'Ivoire to meet with Sankoh.

Findings

4176. The Trial Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proved beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused provided $USD 100 to Mike Lamin, but failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the Accused facilitated the provision of Liberian travel documents to Mike Lamin, so that Lamin could visit Sankoh in Côte d'Ivoire.

(b) Retreat of Junta Personnel to Monrovia

Submissions of the Parties

4177. The Prosecution alleges that in mid-February 1998, a group of AFRC officials fled from Freetown to Monrovia, knowing that the Accused would give them safe haven. This retreat to the Accused, whose country did not extradite individuals to Sierra Leone, was with the Accused's knowledge and consent. Having these experienced aviators and fighters and their aircraft would benefit the Accused in Liberia as well as give him the option of later returning them to action with the AFRC/RUF in Sierra Leone. The Accused attempted to give them safe haven but "(his) men were intercepted by ECOMOG and thus unable to receive the fleeing Junta personnel".<sup>9380</sup> The Accused then attempted to get the men and helicopter(s) turned over to him, trying unsuccessfully to personally intervene. The arrested personnel were taken to Nigeria despite the Accused's protests. The Prosecution claims that, contrary to the Accused's testimony, the Nigerians, not the Accused, later handed those arrested over to the government of Sierra Leone.<sup>9381</sup>

4178. The Defence submits that this incident is improperly characterized by the Prosecution as an example of the Accused providing safe haven to the Junta. The Accused sought assurance that the officials would be given a fair trial if they returned to Sierra Leone to prevent them from being summarily executed by the Sierra Leonean Government. He denies that in doing so he was guilty of aiding and abetting the Junta in the commission of crimes.<sup>9382</sup>

Prosecution Witness Varmuyan Sherif

4179. Witness Varmuyan Sherif testified that during the time when ECOMOG was fighting against the AFRC in Freetown, in late 1998 or early 1999, Taylor called Sherif and told him that an AFRC delegation was travelling by helicopter from Freetown to Monrovia. Taylor instructed Sherif to receive the delegation at the airfield in Monrovia and take them to Taylor's office.<sup>9383</sup> When Sherif arrived to meet them at the airport, ECOMOG surrounded the area and would not allow Sherif to receive or go close to the delegation. Sherif called the SSS director who told Sherif to leave.<sup>9384</sup> Two days later, Taylor announced that ECOMOG must leave Liberia, because Liberia was "a government of [its] own".<sup>9385</sup>

Prosecution Witness TF1-371

4180. Witness TF1-371, an RUF member,<sup>9386</sup> testified that when the AFRC was pushed out of Freetown by ECOMOG, Victor King, commander of the air wing of the Sierra Leonean Army, took a military helicopter with other senior officers and businessmen and travelled to Monrovia without the knowledge of Johnny Paul Koroma. The witness was told about this incident when, while meeting with Johnny Paul Koroma, Koroma complained about King evacuating persons from Freetown to Liberia without telling him and leaving him (Koroma) there with his family. The witness heard that King and the others were arrested by

ECOMOG in Monrovia and turned over to the Sierra Leonean government, and were later executed by firing a squad in October 1998.<sup>9387</sup>

The Accused

4181. The Accused testified that when ECOMOG forces took control over Freetown during the Intervention, two military helicopters landed at Spriggs Payne Airport in Monrovia, and Victor King, a member of the AFRC Junta, was one of the passengers. ECOMOG was there and seized “the plane” and the occupants. He called the ECOMOG force commander, who reported to him on the situation and occupants of the helicopter. The Accused responded that he would send his Defence Minister to meet with the force commander so that Liberia could take charge of the occupants until the matter was resolved, and the force commander stated that he would inform his superiors and “let (Taylor) know”. Later on, the Accused was informed that the force commander would keep control over the helicopter and the occupants, and so he (the Accused) called President Abacha and stated that he would “not stand for [this]” and that the sovereignty of Liberia was at issue. A compromise “was worked out” and the Accused returned the planes and the people after a couple of weeks but after a “long discussion”.

4182. The Accused contended that he had “raised the issue” of having the passengers stay in Liberia, and told President Kabbah that he would only allow them to be taken back to Sierra Leone “on the assurance that nothing would happen to them” and, if they were charged or tried, that their rights would be protected. The Accused contended that he was worried that the occupants would be summarily executed, similar to what occurred several years before, when General Lansana, one of the leaders of an attempted coup in Sierra Leone, was returned to Sierra Leone from Liberia with promises he would not be executed. The Accused did not know that, in fact, the delegation had been taken to Nigeria until he read this in Prosecution documents. President Abacha told the Accused that they would be kept in custody in Nigeria because Liberia did not have a place to hold them, but that they would not be sent back to Sierra Leone without his consent. ECOMOG and President Kabbah were pressing for them to be extradited to Sierra Leone, and had assured him that they would not be executed. After approximately two months, the Accused agreed they could be returned to Sierra Leone. The passengers were later taken to Sierra Leone and
